"Stand fast in the liberty wherewith Christ hath made you free" by asserting your liberty to take the pledge that will put you for all your life through on the side of those who stand for sound minds and sound bodies and sound souls against the sin-producing, sorrow-making habit of strong drink. Let no one say of you: "Because he did not stand firm I lost my hold on life and on salvation."

HOW ONE SUNDAY SCHOOL GREW

LESS than a year ago a new Sunday school was established at Chapel Corners, Dutchess County, New York. It is located some two miles north of Poughkeepsie. When started it had about forty scholars and a few teachers, who met in an old school house on a cross-road. Teachers and officers were selected, classes formed and a program established. Soon the meeting-place was transferred to a larger school a mile away where the attendance increased immediately; the month of January showed an average attendance of sixty-three, with the highest at seventy-six, and with seven teachers. Gospel songs are used, also the International Lessons. The Sunday school is known as the Chapel Corners Union Sunday School. When the subject of starting a Sunday school was first mentioned, it seemed as though not enough material could be had. However, through the efforts of Mr. Jacob K. Bahret, a flower grower and the present superintendent, and others, a good number responded, so that now the Sunday school attendance is equal to that of the day school. The button system is in use and scholars are working earnestly for each button. Many of the scholars represent farmers' families. The secretary has organized a sewing circle of about twenty girls, who make small articles for home use. A boys' scientific class is held one evening each week during the winter months. It is hoped to have a library and new song-books shortly. A new Grange hall is to be built in the vicinity and the Sunday school will very soon have fitting and permanent quarters. Many now come as far as two miles on foot every Sunday to attend the school.

HERE THEY ARE

THE REGENERATION OF A PRISONER

"KAMAMIZU MATSUTARO was born in Takamatsu, Japan, where his father was a carpenter. His mother was an idolater, quite regular in her visits to the temples, whither young Kamamizu was frequently allowed to accompany her. He ascribes his criminal career to religious superstition.

"It was at this time that young Kamamizu observed that the prayers of the pilgrims were directed to carnal good, and he soon became a devotee, and began to offer his own petitions.

"The thought now occurred to him that he must work as well as pray. He now went to Kyoto, where he pulled a jinrikisha. One day he discovered that a customer had forgotten a bundle, and though the owner was still in view, instead of returning it to him, he quickly turned another way, and having reached a place of security he opened it and found 126 yen. The gods had now favored him, and he returned to Takamatsu. Theft was not profitable enough, so he began to rob, and at the point of the sword he demanded the treasures of the terrified people to be brought forth. He was caught and sent to prison under sentence of fourteen years. One day, addressing his fellow prisoners, twelve in number, he solicited their co-operation and promised them liberty if they would obey his orders. They gladly complied and in a short time the gang broke out from prison. At last he was again apprehended. In addition to his former sentence he now received the sentence of life penalty and was deported to the Hokkaido. Here together with other life prisoners he labored in the mines.

"In such a society as this Kamamizu continued to develop his evil propensities for nine years. Then came the turning point in his life. One day when he returned from work he noticed two or three fellow prisoners looking closely at a picture. He approached them and for the first time in his life he saw the picture of the crucifixion of Christ. With scorn he asked what kind of crime that man had committed. One of the men, having more or less knowledge of the story of the Cross, replied that this was the Son of God, the Saviour of the world, and that he died thus not for any crime of his own, but for the crimes of other men. This appeared to him ridiculous; but again his exponent proceeded to show that if this person was not what he declared himself to be, then he died in behalf of a lie, and challenged the scorner to show that any man, good, bad or indifferent, had ever died in behalf of a lie. Men, said he, will lie to cover up crime, but no one will deliberately tell a lie for the sake of obtaining punishment, and that of the severest kind. This pointed argument was too much for him, and inside of ten minutes he not only believed the story, but experienced a real change of heart, according to his own testimony. He immediately ordered a Bible, to the great surprise of the prison authorities.

"An incident now occurred which helped to shape his future. While at work in the coal-mine one day a voice in his soul whispered 'danger.' Then all at once he felt as if a strong hand had pulled him backward, when down came a rock, which would have crushed the life out of him. He fell on his knees and gave thanks to God. He now received the conviction that God had a mission for him in the world, and he began to study his Bible with that in view. All his spare moments were employed in Bible study, insomuch that the official in charge one day jokingly remarked: 'Well, Kamamizu, here you are again studying your Bible as earnestly as if you intended to become a preacher.' He replied that God had given him the conviction that some day he would be a free man, and be permitted to tell to his fellow-men the wonderful things that God had done for him, though he did not intend to become a preacher.

"He was now transferred to the Tokaichi prison, which contained about one thousand inmates. The life among the prisoners here was wretched. His heart was stirred and he began to pray for the conversion of four men, with whom he daily came in contact. Finally two of them were saved, and he solicited them to join him in daily prayer in behalf of a revival. This was in March, and they continued their intercessions together until December, when his two converts became discouraged and quit. He still continued in desperate earnestness until the following February, when a most marvelous work of grace was wrought among the prisoners, the result of which was the conversion of about 600 of the inmates, and not less than 900 attended Bible class regularly. Later he was pardoned." [From a missionary's letter.]

MORNING HYMN

AWAKE, my soul, and with the sun
Thy daily stage of duty run;
Shake off dull sloth, and joyful rise,
To pay thy morning sacrifice.

Thy precious time misspent, redeem;
Each present day thy last esteem:
Improve thy talent with due care,
For the great day thyself prepare.

Let all thy converse be sincere,
Thy conscience as the noon-day clear;
Think how all-seeing God thy ways,
And all thy secret thoughts surveys.

By influence of the light divine,
Let thy own light to others shine;
Reflect all heaven's propitious rays
In ardent love and cheerful praise.

Wake, and lift up thyself, my heart,
And with the angels bear thy part,
Who all night long unwearied sing
High praise to the eternal King.

Awake, awake! ye heavenly choir,
May your devotion me inspire,
That I, like you, my age may spend;
Like you, may on my God attend.

May I, like you, in God delight,
Have all day long my God in sight,
Perform, like you, my Maker's will—
Oh, may I never more do ill!

Glory to thee, who safe hast kept,
And hast refreshed me whilst I slept;
Grant, Lord, when I from death shall wake,
I may of endless light partake.

I would not wake, nor rise again,
E'en heaven itself I would disdain,
Wert not thou there to be enjoyed,
And I in hymns to be employed.

Heaven is, dear Lord, where'er thou art;
Oh, never then from me depart;
For to my soul, 'tis hell to be
But for one moment without thee.

Lord, I my vows to thee renew;
Scatter my sins as morning dew;
Guard my first springs of thought and will,
And with thyself my spirit fill.

Direct, control, suggest, this day,
All I design, or do, or say;
That all my powers, with all their might,
In thy sole glory may unite.

After Changing from Coffee to Postum

Many a talented person is kept bac because of the interference of coffee wit the nourishment of the body.

This is especially so with those whos nerves are very sensitive, as is often th case with talented persons. There is simple, easy way to get rid of coffee trou bles and a Tenn. lady's experience alon these lines is worth considering. She say "Almost from the beginning of the us of coffee it hurt my stomach. By th time I was fifteen I was almost a nervou wreck, nerves all unstrung, no strengt to endure the most trivial thing, eithe work or fun.

"There was scarcely anything I coul eat that would agree with me. The littl I did eat seemed to give me more troubl than it was worth. I was literally starv ing; was so weak I could not sit up lon at a time.

"It was then a friend brought me a ha cup of Postum. I drank part of it an after an hour I felt as though I had ha something to eat—felt strengthene That was about five years ago, and afte continuing Postum in place of coffee an gradually getting stronger, today I ca eat and digest anything I want, walk a much as I want. My nerves are steady

"I believe the first thing that did m any good and gave me an upward star was Postum, and I use it altogether nov instead of coffee."

Name given by the Postum Co., Battl Creek, Mich.

Postum now comes in two forms.

Regular Postum—must be well boile 15c and 25c packages.

Instant Postum—is a soluble powde A teaspoonful dissolves quickly in a cu of hot water and, with cream and sugar makes a delicious beverage instantly 30c and 50c tins.

The cost per cup of both kinds is abou the same.

The Secret

POMPEIAN
Massage Cream

SAYS CUPID:

"Hark! Pompeian is not a color applied.

It brings to the surface the color inside."

SAYS MISS POMPEIAN:

"Oh, pshaw! That's a secret I knew full well.

Look at me! Doesn't my complexion tell?"

YES, a Pompeian complexion tells its own fine story of genuineness. A complexion that is "applied" is never so pleasing to one's self or friends.

Pompeian rubs in and rubs out. Nothing is left on the face but a clear, healthy glow, for Pompeian "brings to the surface the color inside."

How? By means of the gentle friction produced on the skin as the cream rubs in and out in its own peculiar way. By thus frictionizing the skin the blood is brought to the surface to wake up and beautify "dead," lifeless skin.

Then, too, Pompeian cleanses completely, making skin health possible. A Pompeian massage also exercises the facial muscles most beneficially. Don't envy—use Pompeian. Sold by all dealers, 50c, 75c and $1; or get a trial jar if you wish. Use coupon.

WARNING

Don't take chances with your precious complexion. Shun cheaply-made imitations. Insist on Pompeian. It has improved complexions for 12 years.

Six Weeks to Build

It takes six weeks to build Reo the Fifth from the steel to the finished car. And it took 27 years to learn how.

The factory cost is one-fourth more than if built by some other standards. Yet the price this year is $1,175 equipped.

Note the result of this extra time, this extra care and cost. Go over the finished car. Then judge if you want your next car built like this.

For Experienced Motorists

Reo the Fifth is built for men who have learned their lessons about poorly-built cars. Men who have paid the extra upkeep, met the troubles and made the repairs.

It is for men who have seen cars grow noisy and old after a few months' use. Who have seen hidden flaws develop. Who have found some parts too weak for sudden shocks. And who know the annoyances due to makers' mistakes.

It is also for men who wish to escape those lessons. Men who want cars to stay new. Men who buy a car to keep, and want years of perfect service.

We who have built cars since the dawn of this industry, tell you that such cars must be built like this.

Reo Extremes

In Reo the Fifth, the chief materials are made to specifications based on 10,000-mile tests. All steel is made to formula, and each lot is analyzed twice.

In driving parts we ascertain the needed strength, then add 50 per cent as a margin of safety.

No chances are taken. One whole building in our factory group is devoted to tests and analyses.

We use in this car 15 roller bearings. We use 190 drop forgings to avoid risk of flaws.

We use a costly clutch so no clashing of gears will ever strain the transmission. All our gear-shifting is done with one small rod—by a three-inch movement of the hand.

Close-fitting parts are ground over and over—ground by special machines — to give utter exactness. Large tires are used to lessen cost of upkeep. Our electric starter is the best we know.

Radical Tests

Our gears are tested in a crushing machine for 75,000 pounds per tooth. Our springs are tested for 100,000 vibrations.

Each engine gets days of testing in unusual ways. Then each tested engine is taken apart and inspected.

In our slow process of building, countless tests and inspections are applied to every part of the car.

Then for years we have kept test cars on the road. We run them night and day at high speed on rough roads, to bring out any weakness. After 10,000 miles, these test cars are taken apart and inspected. And we require that vital parts, after all that rough service, shall show slight evidence of wear.

Each part in this car, each formula for material is based on those radical tests.

Lines and Finish

This year's model has the streamline body, the coming vogue. It has demountable rims, dimming searchlights, a new tire carrier, instruments set flush with the dash. The finish is perfect, the upholstery deep and covered with genuine leather. In beauty, comfort and perfect equipment it meets all the ideals of the time.

$220 Saved

Yet this year's model costs you $220 less than last year's model with electric equipment. The main reason is that all our special machinery has been charged against previous output. For years our whole output has been confined to this chassis, and the resulting saving is now taken from our price.

The demand for this car, at nearly all times, is far in excess of our output. At times it is five times our output. And that demand is growing all the time as men find this car out. This year's model has broken all of our sales records.

So you will be wise to make early decision if you want a car built like this.

Reo the Fifth is sold by a thousand dealers. Ask for our Catalog and address of nearest showroom.

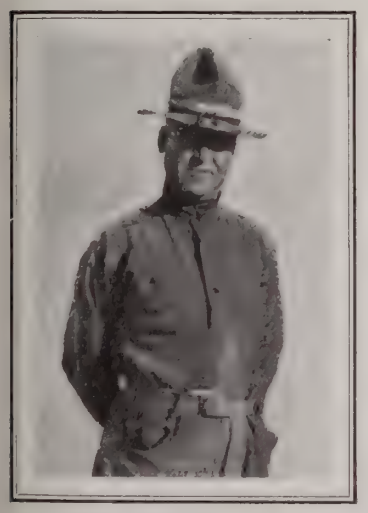
MEXICAN REFUGEE CAMP AT FORT BLISS, TEXAS

PEN PICTURES OF THE MEXICAN REVOLUTION

BY CHARLES STELZLE



CHAPLAIN J. T. AXTON

WHEN I reached El Paso, which is just on the border line, I found the hotels crowded with wealthy exiles—men with their families who were compelled to leave everything that was not easily transported in a trunk or a handbag. Their houses and lands and cattle and mines were left to the mercy of the invaders. And these rebel soldiers—"Constitutionalists" is their official name—bitterly hate the rich. For this is largely a class war. It is a fight of the poor against the powerful. At least this is the strongest appeal that General Carranza and General Villa are making in securing recruits among the poorly nourished peons of Mexico. Meanwhile, many of the looters—and some of them are high in authority among the Constitutionalists—are themselves becoming rich through the spoils of war. It's rather difficult to prophesy which side they will be on when the next revolution takes place. If this war rested solely upon patriotism and love for country and the freedom of the people, then the issue would become clear-cut. But the Federal soldiers are as sincere as the Constitutionalists—for all of them come from the ranks of the common people, and both armies fly the same colors—they are all for "Mexico."

Gambling is the curse of the country. And there are no raids on the gamblers. Quite the contrary. The government officials—on both sides—are interested in the games and naturally encourage sporting habits among the people. When Carranza's army reached Juarez, the professional gamblers fell upon them and what little money their victims had was soon gone, for the professionals always win. We must confess that many of the leaders in the gambling business are Americans. Indeed, some of the bigger games could not be "pulled off" without the aid of American citizens. Meanwhile, while we are sending a few missionaries to Mexico to bring higher ideals to the people, our country is making this vicious contribution, which is undermining to a still greater degree the already weakened characters of the native Mexicans. It's a pity that the poor peon is being exploited on every side, and it's no wonder that he doesn't quite know whom to trust.

I saw beggars everywhere in Mexico, many of them ranged alongside the church, soliciting alms from worshipers or from passersby. I saw the signs of ignorance and general depravity. I saw wounded men and suffering women. But the worst thing that I saw in Mexico was a little six-year-old boy, badly crippled, who was compelled to walk on his hands as well as his feet, because his legs weren't strong enough to support even his frail little body. He looked like a toad, but his face was gentle and sad. He had big black eyes that seemed to search one's soul. Occasionally he would stop as he crawled along the street and look at his torn fingers and hands—the streets were made of gritty little stones that cut his flesh. If only somebody had provided him with gloves or a tough leather "shoe" for his hands. But this was Mexico. Nobody seemed concerned about this little fellow. He wasn't a beggar. He made no appeal for money. He was just a little boy who needed friendship. But "of such is the kingdom of heaven."

When one thinks of war one has in mind big, stalwart men. But in this Mexican revolution women and children fight, too. Little boys—fourteen and fifteen years old—shoulder a gun and march with the veterans. They suffer more, however, but they are brave little fellows, and rarely complain. I saw little chaps with their faces badly shot up—marred for life. Women and children follow the men into the worst of battles. For these Mexican armies have practically no commissary departments, and the wives usually travel with their husbands to provide them with food, for which they forage between battles. Can't you imagine the kind of a situation which this must develop?

REV. CHARLES STELZLE

This condition accounts for the presence of the large number of women and children now in Fort Bliss, Texas, in the Mexican refugee camp, for whose necessities CHRISTIAN HERALD readers have so generously contributed in response to Chaplain Axton's appeal. There are now in the camp about 3,800 men, 1,000 women and 500 children. How long they will remain nobody knows. Uncle Sam is spending $50,000 a month to maintain them, but this does not provide for clothing nor for some other necessary things. Our government has been generous in its care of these refugees, and the soldier boys who made travel for the women and children on the hard road to the camp easier by giving up their own horses so that they might ride, deserve praise from those who regard all men as brothers. Only one person in twenty among the Mexicans in the refugee camp at Fort Bliss can read and write—and here you have the secret of most of the misery in the present revolution. I say "the present revolution," for there will undoubtedly be others, no matter who wins. Those of the past have left poor Mexico a nation in ruins. Life is counted cheap and property has little value. The ballot determines nothing. Everything in Mexico has been reduced to the most elementary terms.

But what a sight the refugees were when they arrived at the camp! They'd been traveling a month on dusty roads. They needed—everything. It was a mercy that there was a big-hearted Christian chaplain on the grounds to meet them. And he knew just what to do for them. He became organizer of recreational life, of industrial life, of educational life. He saw to it that little children whose mothers had died on the road or in battle were provided with fresh milk. He distributed clothing by the ton—to individuals, meeting the needs of each person. Chaplain Axton told me in his hearty fashion that he thoroughly appreciated the packages that came from CHRISTIAN HERALD friends, for he was sure, he said, that each package showed a warm-hearted sympathy for these suffering wanderers—far from their own little adobe homes in Mexico. The thing that impressed me about this camp was the fact that "Mexican refugees" are very much like other folks. Now this wasn't a "discovery" at all, but the fact was again emphasized. I've known people in the tenements of New York in the most intimate fashion. I've mingled with those who people the London slums. I've associated with men in mining and lumber camps and I've studied those who worked on big construction jobs on the frontier; but everywhere there's a common tie that binds them to us, no matter where some of the rest of us may live, nor how we make our living. The human heart is the same throughout the world. It has the same hopes and aspirations, sometimes crudely or even roughly expressed, but still answering to the call of brotherhood. And that's why the war in Mexico seems so cruel. When I saw the conditions in Mexico, I praised God that I was an American, living in a Christian country, where, even though we have troubles of our own, we enjoy the blessings of a democracy based upon the will of the people.

Chaplain Axton has reported to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD the following names to be added to the list previously published of contributors to the needs at Fort Bliss Refugee Camp: Mrs. Charles C. Sherrod, Lake City, Kan.; Miss May W. Curtis, Buford, S. C.; Mrs. E. F. Kyte, Goshen, N. Y.; "A Friend," 885 Bloomfield Avenue, Glenridge, N. Y.; Mrs. Ralph Steans and Mrs. Jennie Steans, Lewisburg, Pa.; Mrs. D. C. Stuart, Hamilton, N. Y.; Mrs. E. M. Cole, Southbridge, Mass.; Mrs. W. T. Reynolds, Urich, Mo.; Mrs. Etta Allen Dille and Miss Rena Brown, Lockport, Ill.; Mrs. Monroe, Canton, Ohio; Mr. J. O. Nash, Duke, Okla., $2.50; Mrs. Hannah Pearson, Epping, N. H.; Mrs. Eli Reiner, Flicksville, Pa.; Miss Mildred Smith, Palmyra, N. Y.; Unidentified two bundles; Mrs. G. S. Crosby, Arlington, Mass.; Miss Bernice Snyder, Pomona, Calif.; Unidentified from Llanerch, Pa.; Mrs. John Askwith, Tilden, Neb.; Miss Phipps, Waverly, Mass.; Z. S. Weaver, Courtney, Texas; Mrs. S. F. Swallow, Bessemer, Ala.; Mrs. E. L. Adams, Slingerlands, Albany County, N. Y.

THE WORST BATTLE OF HISTORY

THE fall of Torreon; the triumphant establishment of a base of operations at that vital railroad center by Constitutionalist forces; the flight in all directions of the remnant of the Federal army harrassed by rebel bands intent on their destruction; clouds of buzzards and vultures that lifted from fields and roads only to settle in new spots; the dismay of Mexico City; these are the outstanding features of the week in Mexico. And yet on the heels of such news comes the report that Velasco and his Federal army retired from Torreon in good order, solely to take up a more determined stand outside the city where the advantages would be his.

Because more than fifty per cent. of the combatants are believed to have fallen in the conflict, the battle of Torreon is described as the worst in history. At Marathon the casualties, while only slightly less in number, were but six per cent. of the total number of troops engaged; 150,000 fell at Nehavend, but that was only thirty-seven per cent.; 28,000, sixteen per cent., perished at Chancellorsville. At Torreon it was estimated that 20,000 fought, of whom over 10,000 will fight no more.

All accounts agree that the Mexican sustained his reputation for desperate valor in this prolonged engagement. The rebel general's plan of campaign began months before in the gradual investment of the territory about the doomed city. While reports were widely published of the southward movement of his troops, and their occupation of points of vantage about Torreon, no earthly effort on the part of General Huerta to throw an adequate defending force into Torreon was expected. It is said that explanations for this seeming inactivity are not hard to find. If the government at Mexico City has the military strength it claims, its failure to properly garrison that key city at the junction of Mexico's railroads was suicidal. Villa himself left his northern stronghold for the scene of war at a moment when his prestige was seriously threatened by the Benton and other outrages. It was the psychological moment for Huerta to take the field against his foes.

The early stages of this greatest of Mexican revolutionary battles have been fully described. Villa's first assaults were successfully and almost ruinously repulsed. For a time his downfall was more than expected—it was believed to have occurred. But with unconquerable ferocity he rallied his forces, replenished his ammunition and returned to the attack. The terror of his name went before him. Certainty of inhuman butchery inflamed the minds of his foes. Unkept promises of reinforcements sapped the spirit of Torreon's defenders. Transformation of their peaceful fields into huge cemeteries robbed war of its glory. Leaving behind arms and ammunition sufficient for a prolonged resistance, they fled the city when the incessant onrushes of Villa and his troops warned them that the rebels were intent on a fight to a finish. Setting fire to buildings and abandoning the population to its fate, Velasco and what was left of his 9,000 Mexican soldiery refused the final challenge of combat, fled for their lives by train and by foot, by horse and by wagon, a rabble of terrified peons.

The victorious rebels filled the conquered city. They relaxed from their transports of war-madness and became a roistering crowd. They took possession of streets, houses, stores. They looked upon the huddled Spanish and other residents with condescending scorn. They forgot to butcher them in cold blood. To the hospitals and other places where wounded Federals lay awaiting death by Villa's sword, went a message of hope. There were burning buildings to extinguish, and ruined buildings to remove, and an unthinkable number of dead bodies to bury or burn. And there was also that fleeing army to pursue and capture. Every man to his taste, and there were men for all these tasks. But the last was most welcome. Spurred by Villa's orders, his troops sped after Velasco.

The Federals are pictured in full flight, in panic, disorganized, scattered. Harrying them to cover, hunting them to the death, follow fast their vindictive foe. Or if other reports are to be credited, in the hills to the east of Torreon Velasco, who was almost the hero of Torreon, gathered his 5,000 survivors in compact array and met his pursuers not with panic, but a calm determination to turn the tide of battle and retake the city. Whichever picture is true there is fighting still to be done. Tampico is reported as under assault. Saltillo and other towns garrisoned by Federals lie in the pathway of Villa. Torreon has fallen, but the war is still on. There are those who insist that the government in Mexico has resources at its command which encourage expectations of ultimate triumph.

[illegible] AWAITING THE ORDER TO ENTER TORREON

HER LIFE GIVEN FOR TEMPERANCE

MRS. L. M. N. STEVENS

THE announcement in the press of April 7 that Mrs. L. M. N. Stevens, president of the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union, died the day before at Portland, Me., will shock and bring deep grief to men and women throughout the civilized world. The dearly loved successor of Frances E. Willard had won a place of almost equal renown with that great founder of the temperance movement as conducted by women, and the effect of her comparatively sudden death is similar to that which was felt when Miss Willard died, leaving her companion of years, the vice-president of the W. C. T. U., Mrs. Stevens, to assume the responsible duties of president; even as now Mrs. Stevens's fellow officer, Miss Anna A. Gordon, of Evanston, Ill., must take up the duties of that office for the present.

Since Mrs. Stevens, gentle but forceful leader, took up those duties by election, in 1898, in an agony of grief, and with no assurance in her own modest heart of fitness to occupy the place of Frances Willard, she has been re-elected year after year without question. And the vast work of the organization has prospered, advanced, and developed under her leadership year by year.

Born in Dover, Me., March 1, 1844, marrying and taking up her residence in the suburbs of Portland, in 1867, Mrs. Stevens, who was a New England Ames, has been characterized as possessing in her nature the qualities of strength and dignity and beauty that are inherent in Maine itself. The patience of the hills and forests, coupled with the serenity of those northern landscapes and the irresistible forces of Maine's rushing streams, were needed for the gigantic tasks that awaited her.

The W. C. T. U. is recognized as the most numerous and most effective of women's organizations. Its activities are nation-wide, and through the World's W. C. T. U., of which Mrs. Stevens was vice-president, touch every land. And the society has never set its hand to light and inconsequential things. Over 12,000 local unions and over a half-million members, counting the children's auxiliaries, compose its battle forces in the United States, uncompromisingly opposed to the use and sale of intoxicating liquors. Through forty distinct departments this great host assails other evils, gives battle for other reforms. The prohibition of tobacco to minors, establishment of industrial homes for girls and of places of refuge for erring women, placing matrons in police stations, safe-guarding child life, these are features of the W. C. T. U. activities.

Mrs. Stevens has been a notable leader in all such great enterprises. In her own home she has given nearly a score of homeless children a start in life. Mrs. Stevens's only child, Mrs. Gertrude Stevens Leavitt, herself became a leader in the State W. C. T. U.

Mrs. Stevens, as president of the Maine W. C. T. U., is credited with a large share in obtaining the school suffrage law, and in raising the age of protection to girls, as well as the securing of other permanent reforms. Her interests extended to other fields of philanthropic work for a time, and she served upon the Board of Lady Managers at the World's Columbian Exposition in 1892. Her part in obtaining in the name of the W. C. T. U. governmental leniency toward twenty-five Armenian refugees who had come to this country, and in providing for them afterwards, was virtually the salvation of those women from forcible deportation to a homeless land.

Mrs. Stevens was a Christian who believed implicitly in the Scriptures, and submitted her life wholly to the will of Christ. In her innermost room were always to be found constant indications of this faith, in the pictures and mottoes upon the walls. A favorite motto was "I will never leave thee," and upon this she had written "I will trust and not be afraid."

MISS ANNA A. GORDON

The death of this active leader in the cause of righteousness, whose place it will seem so hard to fill—and most of all to her friend and companion in arms, the vice-president, Miss Gordon, who knew her and her tireless labors best—was brought on, it seems, by her strenuous work in connection with the sessions of the organization in Washington, in December. She would have asked for no higher honor than to give her life for temperance.

"Precious in the sight of the Lord is the death of his saints." Womanhood, and manhood, too, throughout the world are better and stronger and safer because of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union and its great, unselfish, heroic leaders.

SHOULD THE CHURCH BE A LEGISLATIVE FORCE?

BY A CHRISTIAN PASTOR

THIS question is suggested by the recent organization at New York City of the Religious Citizenship League. Men of national and international fame as social service workers have become allied in this movement. Dr. Rauschenbusch of the Baptist Church is the president of the league. Among the vice-presidents are Dr. Josiah Strong and Dr. Washington Gladden of the Congregational, Bishop McDowell of the Northern Methodist, and Bishop Hendrix of the Southern Methodist Church; Edwin Markham, the poet; Jane Addams of Chicago, and Mrs. J. Borden Harriman of the United States Industrial Commission. Dr. Bliss of the Protestant Episcopal Church is the general secretary, William Foulke of the American Bible Society the treasurer of the league. Dr. Clark, the founder of the Christian Endeavor Society, Dean Robbins of the Protestant Episcopal General Theological Seminary, Drs. Thomas C. Hall and Charles P. Fagnani of the Union Theological Seminary, Norman Hapgood, editor of Harper's Weekly; Rev. Jonathan C. Day of the Labor Temple; Dr. Stephen S. Wise of the Free Synagogue are among the members of the league.

This excerpt from the league's list of membership shows that the term "religious" in its name must be taken in the broadest meaning. The league "proposes to unite, not, indeed, church organizations, but members of all churches and other religious bodies or individuals in sympathy" with its plans. The constitution of the league says: "It shall never be committed to any political party, Federal, State, or local, nor to any sectarian organization or creed, either religious or economic." The league includes "lay men and women," and has received endorsement "from people of all churches and from some of no church." The league assumes that "the churches are being forced to realize that we are all one."

The object of the league and the spirit that has actuated its organizers can be seen from an article in the New York Times for February 8, by the general secretary of the league. The object is "to interest, educate, and unite men and women, especially the members of churches, synagogues and other religious or ethical bodies, in securing the enactment and enforcement of legislative measures for the industrial and social welfare of all the people." The league represents, in particular, a "religious militant" effort to socialize Christianity by teaching Christians how to practice what they profess to believe, how to make their ideal moral convictions assume reality in the shape of political laws. The league comes as "an opportunity and a challenge to all religious forces."

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD has invariably favored efforts for the relief of social distress in any form, and has in its own way aided in such efforts wherever feasible. Its general policy of goodwill to all who mean well and do well for suffering mankind is, therefore, in no wise compromised by a few words candidly and sincerely spoken in criticism of what seems to be a basic fault in the proposed plan for the league's operation.

The reasoning of the league starts from distinctly pessimistic premises. The pessimism relates, first, to the churches, chiefly the Christian churches. The league has lost faith in the consistency, if not the sincerity, of the members of the churches. "Are you willing," it asks the church members, "to stand for and act what you preach? This is the plain question which the league puts before organized religion in the land, and a great many thoughtful minds both in and outside the churches are waiting curiously and thoughtfully for the answer." Unintentionally, we are inclined to believe, this question is equivocating, else it should be resented prima facie by any self-respecting church. Just ask a question like this of your grocer or baker in reference to his chosen trade, and observe the effect. True, there is nothing perfect under the sun, and the work of the visible religious organizations which we call churches, being performed by shortsighted and frail human beings, shares in the common imperfections of all human efforts. But any individual Christian and any Christian organization will promptly say in answer to the above question of the league: "What do you take us for? Of course, we stand for and act what we preach. If any of us fail in our duties from weakness, we correct them; if any one of us habitually contradicts his profession by his actions, we declare him insincere. All that we teach relates to practice, is never a mere airy sentiment for the entertainment of our mind."

As between the league and the churches the real question is this: Will that which the churches have done in their own way for the moral uplift of society pass muster before the eyes of the league? The league wants Christians to "put into the form of legislative action those industrial principles which the Federal Council of Churches in the United States have already formally adopted." A list of measures advocated contains the following: Suffrage for women; suppression of the social evil; uniform marriage and divorce laws; requirement of health certificates for marriage; prevention of propagation by defectives and degenerates; standardization of the minimum air and floor space per occupant; hygienic provisions required in tenements and dwellings; development of industrial education in schools, vocational guidance, continuation schools; increased moral instruction in public schools; use of the schools as social centers for recreation, civic and social education, and for political discussion, etc. We are not discussing these measures now on their own merits. What we wish to point out is that it is manifestly illogical and unjust to make the consistency of Christian church members depend on their adoption of these and nineteen other measures advocated by the league. On any one of these measures, intelligent and conscientious Christians would call for the previous question, thus: "Are any of these measures deducible from our religion, and are we enjoined by our God as Christians to make them into laws, and punish all who transgress them? Has God made this our business?" Christian church members might vote "no" on the question of government loans to farmers, absorption by the post office of the telegraph and telephone, not because their religion bids them vote "no," but because from their viewpoint it may seem a questionable improvement of the state of society to adopt these measures. Would the league feel itself justified on that account to challenge the person's consistency as a Christian?

The league has assumed to believe its measures Christian and religious measures. And the league proposes to watch "curiously" what church members will do with its measures, and to deny their consistency if they do not adopt the league's measures. This application of the league's rule is just as fallacious as its formulation is arbitrary.

The pessimistic attitude of the league over against the church appears again in this statement: "The Christian Church in this land and in every other undoubtedly faces a crisis. All admit this. The churches are perhaps not losing in numbers as a whole, but a change in policy is regarded on all sides as absolutely necessary. People have lost their interest in dogmatic arguments and discussions. People have not lost their faith. The creeds are not dying. It is not 'The Twilight of the Gods.' Rather, it is a new dawn of faith and hope and love. People are saying the old creeds, but with new meanings and a new vision of their possibilities and realities. We are coming to social Christianity. This is not

THE FACE OF JESUS

*A SERMON BY PASTOR GEORGE W. ENGLAR

TEXT. "He steadfastly set his face to go to Jerusalem." Luke 9: 51

THE face of Jesus—can you gaze upon it without being impressed? The face of Jesus—do you wonder that its beauty so charmed Raphael that his painting has in turn gripped the world? The face of Jesus—are you surprised that Gounod kept those holy features before him so that he might be inspired for his musical composition? The face of Jesus—more stable than that of any earthly friend—more courageous than that of any martyr—more satisfying than that of any son or daughter—more pure and tender and beautiful than that of any mother.

In Revelation we read that his name is to be written on the forehead of the redeemed. When you young people go away to college, or to some city to take up business, you will remember that your names are written in the hearts of your parents. That is a good place to be—in the affection of those whom you love. But better still it is to have the name of Jesus inscribed on your glorified features. The beauty of his face which we now so meagerly share shall become ours fully. The purity of his face and its holy triumph shall be so stamped upon our own visage that we shall be like him.

When the Son of man threaded the thoroughfares of little Palestine how different his face from what it is now—a set face, a sad face, a scorned face, a shrouded face, a shining face! Not five faces, but one; for Jesus knew nothing about the tricks of the time-server and the ward politician who make their plans and fashion their words to meet the selfish demands of the hour, and not to coincide with their convictions. Not five faces, but one face in a five-fold aspect—now set, now sad, now scorned, now shrouded, now shining.

I. Here we read that he "steadfastly set his face to go to Jerusalem." Jerusalem was filled with those who would rend him and drag him to the tomb. This he knew all too well; so "he steadfastly set his face." Jerusalem before him, sacred haunts behind him. And it is not easy to tear yourselves away from old environments, as you who have journeyed from the east to the west, or from the west to the east, well understand. A word at this time about the little country or village church where you used to meet your friends, the nearby graveyard where many of your old-time acquaintances sleep, would very quickly moisten your cheeks with tears. And Jesus was leaving sacred scenes—cornfields, gardens, mountains, seashore, lake, friendships. To depart took courage; so "he steadfastly set his face."

There is need every day for the set face. Mothers, you must have it, else your love for your erring child will rob chastisement of its rightful place in your home. Business man, you must have it, else the rivalry of business will make you forget the Golden Rule, and the mad chase after the dollar will lead you to trample under foot the Lord's holy day. Young people, you must covet the set face, else your school days will put more worldliness into your life than knowledge in your head or character in your heart. Disciples of Christ, tugged at daily by a thousand imps of hell which would turn you aside from the path that leads to the heavenly Jerusalem; disciples surrounded hourly by the temptations of the "world, the flesh, and the devil," nothing short of the courage of the set face will save you.

When Chrysostom received a threatening message from the empress he sent back this answer: "Go tell Eudoxia that I fear nothing but sin." Nor shall we; and that we have not feared as we ought, till we steadfastly set our face against it, whether in ourselves, our family, our friend, our church, our city or our nation.

Fear, let me remind you, is not incompatible with courage. The Duke of Wellington one time delegated two officers to undertake a most hazardous duty. As they journeyed one looked into the face of the other, and seeing his trembling lips, his blanched face and his nervous hand, exclaimed, "Why, you are afraid." "Of course I am," was the reply, "and if you were half as frightened as I am you would run away." Immediately the critical companion rode his horse back into the presence of the Iron Duke and said, "You have sent me on a dangerous journey in the companionship of a coward." "Off! Off" retorted the duke. "If you do not hurry the coward will get the business done before you get there." The duke was right. The fear of sin nerves our arm against it. I am afraid of it in my own home as I am everywhere. And so must you be. Oh for the Christ face, set always against sin and evermore toward holiness!

Marked by the World's Enmity

II. No wonder his face was sad; sad because the world he loved was like a harp with a broken string—the discord of a million centuries rolling in upon him; sad because the shadows of the cross were already falling athwart his path; sad because men persisted in misunderstanding him, in impugning his motives, and in persecuting his disciples; sad because his wounds for our transgressions, his bruises for our iniquities, and his stripes for our peace all go into his features.

My brethren, if you sometimes feel that you are called upon to drink all the dregs of the cup, remember Jesus. If you think the world has for you too few happy days and carefree, and too many heart-breaking responsibilities, remember Jesus, the Man of sorrows and acquainted with grief. And if your children go wrong, and your business goes to pieces, and your health is shattered, and your friends disappoint, and your enemies multiply until you begin to read in it all evidence of a God who has become angry with you, remember Jesus, the sorrow-drenched Christ whom God so dearly loved. How thankful we must be for his sad face! Ours find comfort in his. "Fellowship is heaven; lack of it is hell," said William Morris. Yes, but for Christ's tears our broken spirit could find no companionship in him. The church, George Matheson calls the "League of Pity"—a fine designation; and yet but for the sad face of Jesus the church itself would be so discouraged and helpless in its own grief that it could be of but little service to a sorrowing world.

III. If you covet his set face, and if you pity his sad face, you must deeply admire his scorned face. Come, you who would know grief at its sharpest. It is not that that Jesus felt when men rejected him, though that were dreadful; it is not that he experienced when those who rejected him also misunderstood him, though that were worse. A keener grief yet did Jesus know when those who rejected him and misunderstood him set out to humiliate him.

I wonder if the world has ever scorned us. If not, it is not because the world is not bad enough, but because we are not good enough. If we have never been scoffed at, it is time to hang crape on the door, it is appropriate to toll the bell, and it would not be out of place to call in the minister. For any Christian whose life and views and words and spirit never go counter to those of a selfish world is dead spiritually, however much he may be alive physically.

The spirit of that scorned face I would we might get. Its meekness in insult and its absence of retaliation—how we must covet these!

IV. The face of Christ is also a shrouded face. The veil of mystery was drawn over it—a mystery that none have been able to penetrate. A face wet with tears, and yet a face that could dry tears in others. A suffering face, and yet one that could banish pain from other lives. A face that cried out in anguish ocean-deep when as he hung upon the cross the heavenly Father seemingly forsook him, and yet a face so full of power that it could promise to be with believers everywhere to the end of time. A face so divine that its features wore the consciousness of one who could declare: "All power is given unto me in heaven and in earth"; and yet a face so human that it was helpless in the hands of the enemy.

Shall we doubt him and discard him from our lives because he is so inscrutable? Nay, rather may we because of this believe him and consecrate our all to him. The mystery of his personality it is that holds us on to the end. In his eighty-fourth year John Wesley could say, "I am still in school." At almost the same age Goethe remarked, "I carry my satchel yet." And in almost his last hour Paul the aged confessed: "I do not count myself to have apprehended—I press on." Thank God for the mystery of his Son. Our inability to fathom the meaning of that human-divine and divine-human face is that enables us to say,

> Grace taught my wandering feet
> To tread the heavenly road;
> And new supplies each hour I meet
> While pressing on to God.

V. But I would not have our gaze left upon the Christ in his humiliation. For if he is the Christ of the set face and the sad face and the scorned face and the shrouded face, he is also the Christ of the shining face. Behold him upon the mountain top—his face as bright as the light, his garments glistening white, the cloud of glory over his head, the law and the prophets at his feet.

How we do need the shining of his face! But never shall we get it till we look within. It calls to mind Hawthorne's figure of a cathedral with its divinely pictured windows. Viewed from without it is impossible to gain any worthy conception of the beautiful forms and radiant colors. Enter the building and look outward and its marvels break upon your vision. Oh, let us abide in the heart of Christ and the glory of his holiness we shall behold, as through the windows of our lives it shines out on the pathways of others also.

Let us keep the picture of the face of Jesus framed in memory. If temptation raps at our door we shall find victory by gazing upon that set face. If sorrow's pitiless fingers clutch at our hearts let us find refuge in the companionship of that sad face. When the world uses us badly and we are almost ready to return evil for evil let us covet the meekness of that scorned face. If our minds recoil before the mysteries of life and we feel all but ready to throw overboard the religion of Jesus, let us look into that shrouded face and remember to thank heaven that its mystery proves his divinity. And when death pushes his ugly form into our presence, and reaches out his mighty arm to sever us from our earthly environments, we shall be sustained by the radiant presence of that shining face which shall make our path grow brighter and brighter unto the perfect day.

What Coming to Jesus Means

THOUGH it may not be realized at first, and especially by those who only look on from the outside, to be received by Jesus covers everything. It contains all the moral guarantees about which the righteous men who need no repentance are so scrupulous. No sinner is ever received by Jesus without becoming conscious that Jesus knows it all, and how his own knowledge deepens in that light! No one is ever received by Jesus without becoming conscious that Jesus feels it all; that our sin wounds him more than it does us; that the shame, the impotence, the guilt, are a more awful burden on his spirit than on ours. There is always some sense of his passion—of the truth that he bears sin—in his receiving of sinners. This is the king's arrow, which is sharp in the heart of his enemies, subduing them to himself. It is the sense of love like this which melts our hearts in true penitence, the penitence in which all that is old and evil is melted out of our nature, and we are born again. To be received by Jesus regenerates, and it is the only thing which does. In the very act of being received the love of God is shed abroad in our hearts through his spirit. Deep down in the souls of the poor sinners whom he received even in his lifetime—deeper than any conscious reflection they could make on it—stirred the dim yet overmastering feeling that he could only do for them what he did because he was all the time giving his life a ransom for man. The more we think of it, the more wonderful it is, that in this sinful world and in this mortal nature, the Holy One of God should stand, bearing sin and receiving sinners. Yet what could we do if it were not so? And what are we not bound to do for his glory and praise if we have drawn near to him and been received ourselves? —British Weekly.

DAILY MEDITATION

FOR EVERY DAY IN THE YEAR, BASED ON THE WORDS OF JESUS

BY PROFESSOR W. H. T. DAU

SUNDAY, April 26. Luke 4: 26-27. "Unto none of them was Elias sent, save unto Sarepta, a city of Sidon, unto a woman that was a widow. And many lepers were in Israel in the time of Eliseus the prophet; and none of them was cleansed, saving Naaman the Syrian." If Nazareth imagines that her rejection of Jesus dooms his entire mission, Nazareth errs grossly. There is a following which God gathers for his Son, and for every sincere servant of his Son, from among strangers. By gathering these God shames the favored race, the proud members of his church, who have disgraced him. Jesus does not need the support of Nazareth for his work. Nazareth needs him sorely. But he will shake its dust from his feet and go to find him a place among Gentiles, like Elijah at Sarepta, where his presence will bring cheer to the people and glory to him. If Nazareth will not come to him, some alien will start in eager quest of him, as Naaman came to find Elisha. Let us who carry on the work of Christ not become disheartened at our failures. Let us not measure our success by the amount of admiration we receive from the proud. Let us keep the eyes of our faith on that great throng of followers which God secures for the witnesses of his Son, often in the strangest manner, despite the jealousy and envy of men who ought to loyally support us.

MONDAY, April 27. Mark 2: 25, 26. "Have ye never read what David did, when he had need, and was an hungered, he. and they that were with him? How he went into the house of God in the days of Abiathar the high priest, and did eat the shewbread, and gave also to them which were with him?" The restrictions which were placed on the Jews by their many laws, though they were irksome to the flesh, were intended for a good purpose: to "shut up the people unto the faith which should afterwards be revealed," to "bring them unto Christ," after they had been convicted of their sins and shown the need of the Saviour. But no law was given the Jews to operate to their destruction. The Jewish lawyers, however, by their endless distinctions and fine points, and by their literal and mechanical application of the law, had pronounced actions sinful which God never had condemned. By citing the instance of David eating the shewbread when hungry, our Lord defends his disciples, who had plucked ears of corn on the Sabbath, against the charge of lawbreaking, and shows the Jews that their zeal in behalf of the law is without knowledge. Nor did it tend to the glory of God, who wants the hungry to be fed even on the Sabbath. Legalism, letter worship, external piety, sacrifices both the welfare of man and the honor of God to its self-glorification.

TUESDAY, April 28. Matthew 12: 5, 6. "Or have ye not read in the law, how that on the Sabbath days the priests in the temple profane the Sabbath, and are blameless? But I say unto you, That in this place is one greater than the temple." In the preceding text the Lord had shown that the Sabbath is not profaned but rather hallowed by works of mercy and necessity. In the present text he refers to the fact that ceasing from ordinary labor on the Sabbath had not even in the Jewish law been enjoined as an end in itself but only as a means to an end, viz., that there might be freedom from secular duties and an opportunity to engage jointly in acts of worship and meditation. Not all Sabbath labor was interdicted, else the priests engaged in the temple service would have been open and persistent lawbreakers. What they were doing in the presence of Jehovah Jesus' disciples had been doing in the presence of the Lord, who sanctioned their work as a work of necessity. Physical inactivity in itself never was a sanctification of the Sabbath. Pharisaism, which made much of externals and was most punctilious about the jot and tittle of the law, was watching men and judging them by its man-made standards of holiness. They were hypocrites themselves and made others such; for any hypocrite could easily go through the prescribed performances for a proper Sabbath observance, without the least change of heart. The true Sabbath rest must come from faith in Christ, who is the end of the law for righteousness to every one that believeth.

WEDNESDAY, April 29. Matthew 12: 7. "But if ye had known what this meaneth, I will have mercy, and not sacrifice, ye would not have condemned the guiltless." How completely does our Lord turn the tables on his enemies: the lawbreakers guiltless and the lawkeepers guilty! How did it all come about? The disciples had broken no divine law by what they did. The Sabbath law of God did not reckon an action like theirs an offense. The Pharisees, however, by their interpretation, had missed the chief point of God's law, mercy. By insisting on compliance with their merciless interpretation and by denouncing noncompliance with their views as a trespass of God's law, they had themselves broken the entire law. What they demanded of men, and what God demands of men, are two entirely different propositions. Their sacrifices, their pious devices, their unctuous conduct on the Sabbath, are not accepted by God as a service rendered to him at all. These people are pleasing nobody but themselves. With all their pretended knowledge of God's law, they are proven ignorant of the fundamental principle of that law. Here is the Lawgiver himself to tell them so.

THURSDAY, April 30. Mark 2: 27, 28. "The Sabbath was made for man, and not man for the Sabbath: therefore the Son of man is Lord also of the Sabbath." The ancient Sabbath was designed to be a blessing to man. It became a bane in Israel through the teaching of the self-righteous Scribes, who made an idol of the Jewish Sabbath. This degenerated Sabbath blighted the joyous worship of God which his people were to render him in spirit and in truth. It destroyed faith in God's saving grace and liberty of conscience. Such a perversion the Son of man who came out of the bosom of the Father will not tolerate. He has sovereign rights also over the Sabbath. When his followers afterwards, selecting the first day of the week for their religious assemblies, and to commemorate the resurrection of the Lord which had occurred on that day, called their day of worship "the Lord's day," and when Paul warned the Colossians not to allow any one to "judge them in respect of the Sabbath days," they acted in full accord with the will of Christ as here expressed and employed their evangelical liberty in a God-pleasing manner.

FRIDAY, May 1. Matthew 12: 11, 12. "What man shall there be among you, that shall have one sheep, and if it fall into a pit on the Sabbath day, will he not lay hold on it, and lift it out? How much then is a man better than a sheep? Wherefore it is lawful to do well on the Sabbath days." This Sabbatarian controversy plays an important part in Jesus' life. Since we saw our Lord engaged in it the last time, his relation to the Pharisees has become more strained. The Lord had gone to church, as was his custom on the Sabbath. A man with a withered hand was among the worshipers. To embarrass the Lord, the Pharisees, pointing to the cripple, ask Jesus whether it is lawful to heal on the Sabbath. They themselves would have answered the question in the negative, but they expected Jesus to answer it in the affirmative. On the strength of his answer, they intended to prefer charges of unlawful conduct against him. Jesus does not evade the issue, but when he is through answering his questioners, they probably wished they had not asked their question. Not one of them, the Lord implies, would have scrupled to disregard the principle which they were ostentatiously upholding against the Lord, if his own interests were at stake. Their natural feeling of compassion would even have been aroused by the bleating of a marooned sheep. Should not the paralyzed hand of this poor cripple issue mute appeals to their sympathy? Our Lord implies that, instead of preventing help from coming to this sufferer, they should have sought help for him.

SATURDAY, May 2. Luke 6: 8-10. "Rise up, and stand forth in the midst. I will ask you one thing: Is it lawful on the Sabbath days to do good, or to do evil? to save life, or to destroy it? Stretch forth thy hand." And now Jesus bids the cripple rise and stand forth. He must have presented a spectacle to move hearts as he stood there, with the dead limb hanging limp by his side. Before Jesus speaks the enlivening word that will cause the blood to course again through his withered hand, he addresses the congregation. He repeats the question that had been addressed to him, but he has stripped it of all ambiguity. It is no longer a question regarding profaning the Sabbath by ordinary labor, but a question regarding life and death. The pathos of this scene is indescribable. The solemn import of the Lord's question must have awed the people and cowed the bigoted Pharisees. Jesus sweeps the whole audience with his inquiring glances. But there is no reply to his appeal. His question becomes an indictment of the principles of Pharisaism. And now he bids the cripple use his withered hand as if it were good. Jesus has used his divine power to enforce the cardinal principle of God's law, but the Pharisees are angered almost beyond endurance by the overthrow of their creed of bigotry. They begin now to plot "what they might do to Jesus."

HOME IS WHERE THE HEART IS

TO THE mother who sits in the twilight alone
There comes a deep sigh of unrest,
Like that of a bird in the fall of the year
That sings to an empty nest.
She sighs that the harvest of life is past,
That her work for the children is done,
For the sweetness of life that ebbed slowly away
As they left her one by one.

With folded hands as the night comes on,
She sits by the open door,
Watching in dreams the faces aglow
As she saw them in days of yore.
There was Ned, the first-born, noble and true,
With his father's stature and face,
And Alice, light-hearted, whose laugh sent a ray
Of sunshine to every place.

Then Robert, the thoughtful, and Reuben his twin,
And Henry their studious boy,
And Ruth, the musician, whose sweet, happy song
Filled the hearts in the home full of joy.
Then Bessie, the wee one, who ruled all the rest
With her innocent, winsome way,
Twenty years she was "baby," but now she is gone—
The bride of a week and a day.

"There are none in the home now but father and I,"
She moans in the deepening gloom—
"The bright happy faces I see in my dreams
Are but shadows about the bare room.
Soon we, too, will leave the once happy home
For another that's brighter than this,
There to gather the children back one by one
In our arms for the good-morning kiss.

Then a day like the old days, with the circle complete,
Will dawn under heaven's bright dome,
If we find when the archangel calls the long roll
That our children are all at home.
That Robert and Reuben, Henry and Ned,
Ruth, Alice and Bessie so fair,
Are gathered about us, ah, then we shall know
It is home, for the children are there.

WINNING INDIA'S ROBBER TRIBES

BY MISS E. GRACE BULLARD

Missionary at Kavali

ALL DRESSED UP FOR SCHOOL

A REMARKABLE kind of work has been committed to some of the missionaries in India in order to protect the country from the increase of the criminal tribe known as the Donga Erukalas, or "Red Thieves," or "Fortune-Tellers." The children of this tribe are taught their parents' trade from infancy, and it is required of them that they prove their skill in stealing before they can marry.

The British Government has found that little headway is being made against the robber tribes by arrest and imprisonment, and is trying the policy of rounding up the offending tribesmen into communities, where they are settled under police surveillance with a missionary in charge, in some cases. These are not penal communities, for residents must earn their living by the sweat of their brow, and they have every advantage of free men so long as they behave themselves. Thrice during the day and twice at night there is a roll call to see that none are away at their illegal trade. The missionaries are quick to take the utmost advantage possible of these opportunities for reaching the children of such families, and through them the parents. The orphanage in Kavali, already well known to readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, is concerned over the situation confronting them. This orphanage was instituted as the result of the famine in 1899-1900. Many destitute mothers brought their children by scores to be cared for by the missionaries. At that time THE CHRISTIAN HERALD was instrumental in enlisting friends in behalf of some of the orphans. These are diamonds in the rough. Some cannot stand the grinding of the wheels of civilization and drop out; others do not "cut" to advantage; some are like little diamond chips that shine according to their abilities and are not to be undervalued. And some are diamonds indeed! From the first-comers to the orphanage we have seen teachers develop who are now training others; preachers telling the sweet story of old; mothers influencing the lives of coming generations; nurses and others who are able to do splendid work in the Master's name.

And now there has been driven to our door a different class of children. They are not orphans, it is true, but their need is as great as is that of the little wild, naked, starving boys and girls who are taken because they have no parents and no homes. And the orphanage is doing the same work for both classes, teaching them cleanly, studious habits, and training them for useful domestic lives, and enabling them to earn a living; and in some cases rearing Christian workers. The orphanage teaches the children in textile work, mat-making, artesian well-boring and other industrial occupations.

Despite the restrictions placed on the Erukalas, their criminal tendencies still persist, and their children are taught to use their wits to evade the surveillance of the government and find their living by criminal methods. It is indeed a remarkable thing that such people are brought under the supervision of Christian missionaries, and yet the missionaries must find the ways and means for seizing the opportunity.

AN ERUKALA FAMILY AT HOME

It is only necessary to study the group of Erukala mothers shown here in order to understand from what a life these little children may be saved. Some marks of their parents' hardness and ignorance may appear in the childish faces in the other groups, but they are easily taken out under the influence of Christian environment. It is a great problem, greater than we in this country can understand, to reach the wild child life of India and set these little feet in the paths of knowledge and usefulness and the true religion.

There are about 160 children out of nearly six hundred persons who have been placed in the mission settlement at Kavali whom the orphanage wishes to provide for. Those who have already been received are showing great aptitude for improvement. At the Kavali orphanage the cost of a child is about $15 a year. No provision has yet been made for the additional children whom the orphanage can reach in the Erukala settlements.

Yet if the orphanage can take these little ones under its care and turn them aside from the paths their parents have followed, and through them win also the parents, what a remarkable transfornation may be wrought!

ERUKALA MOTHERS NOW PARTLY UNDER MISSION SUPERVISION

GENEROUS GIFTS FOR CHRISTIAN WORK

FROM time to time THE CHRISTIAN HERALD has occasion to acknowledge the receipt of gifts to various forms of Christian work from donors who desire to remain unknown. They seek for no public appreciation, for in many cases they take a special delight in "not letting the left hand know what the right hand doeth."

Mr. and Mrs. J. M. Turner of Colorado send $500 "to be distributed among foreign mission work where it is most needed." The letter adds, "we trust that the heavenly Father will guide you in placing these for the uplifting of his cause." The following list, submitted to the donors of this handsome gift, has received their approval:

We acknowledge the following gift received recently: A friend in Pittsburg sends $10 "in memory of a mother," to be applied to the work of the Bowery Mission, and also another gift of $20 for the same purpose.

From a Christian friend in Florida, who desires her name to be withheld, the following letter was received: "Enclosed please find check for $1,000, which I wish you to give to general missions, $500 to home missions and $500 to foreign missions. May the blessing of God go with it in doing his work." The following list was submitted to this most liberal friend of missions and received her approval:

Bishop Hartzell, in and of Gospel missions in Algeria, Morocco, Angola, Zambesia and other parts of Africa	$50.00
Africa Inland Mission, 518 Stephen Girard Building, Philadelphia, Pa., founded fifteen years ago	50.00
Rev. Reinhold Lenz, Moravian Mission, Makkavik, Labrador	50.00

Sunday Breakfast Association, Philadelphia, Pa.	50.00
	$1,000.00

Checks have been sent to all the beneficiaries named above, and their acknowledgments, when received by THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, will be forwarded to the several donors personally. It is a pleasure to know that this journal is the chosen channel for such splendid offerings to the Lord's work at home and abroad.

A LITTLE ANGEL OF THE MOUNTAINS

BY CYRUS TOWNSEND BRADY

ILLUSTRATED BY GAYLE PORTER HOSKINS

SYNOPSIS OF PRECEDING CHAPTER

Little Olaf Tryggvesson, one of a party of orphans being sent west from New York years ago to new homes, is so attracted by the luxuriant wild flowers growing near the track that he climbs unnoticed from the rear platform of the train, as it comes to a stop, to gather an armful of them. The train starts on, and Olaf is left behind. He races along the track, then gives up, following the rails till late afternoon, when he turns off on a trail leading through the wilderness. Here he meets an Indian, who grasps him by the arm, to his great terror.

CHAPTER II

Shows How Little Olaf Tryggvesson Finds Battle and Murder and Sudden Death on the Trail

IT WAS the naturally taciturn savage, rather than the naturally talkative white boy, who broke the silence. For one thing, the Indian, though surprised, was not alarmed, and the boy was both. In Indian fashion he gave vent to a guttural ejaculation which was almost a grunt. Inasmuch as the observation was quite unintelligible to the boy, he made no response. He was valiantly trying to control the heaving of his breast, the throbbing of his heart, and the trembling of his limbs. He knew little of the Indians at best. Awful pictures on the billboards of the city, blood-curdling affairs, advertisements of so-called Wild West Shows, had indicated that they were terrible persons, full of battle, murder, and sudden death; difficult, if not impossible, for even the bravest of boys barely eleven years old to deal with.

He could not remember very many of the wise counsels that he had received from his father and mother while they had been with him, but one of them had been that he must be good and brave and a man. That had stuck in the craw of his memory. He stared up at the Indian, resolved to be a man whatever befided. Now to be passive is harder than to be active; to wait unresisting for a blow to fall saxes the soul. If Olaf could have kicked, or fought, or run, it would have been easier for him. Well, he had an opportunity to do any of these things, for the next moment the Indian released him. Evidently his captor did not intend to kill him right away.

The Indian's face was grim. He belonged to an unsmiling race. The boy, now looking more closely at him and seeing him more clearly as his fear abated somewhat, took hope.

"Me big chief," the newcomer said with a melancholy dignity, with which his words scarcely accorded, though little Olaf did not find them lacking or inappropriate.

He gathered his blanket around him again as he spoke. The boy noticed that he wore an old shirt, a pair of buckskin trousers with fringe on them, and brightly beaded moccasins.

"Me heap big chief," repeated the Indian solemnly with great emphasis. "No hurt white boy."

"How d'ye do, Mr. Big Chief?" said Olaf politely, a sudden revulsion of feeling almost choking him, he was so glad he was not to be killed and scalped after all.

"How!" was the sententious answer.

"And what is your name, sir?" asked the boy, curiously growing bolder every moment.

"Big Chief name 'Yellow Feather,'" was the instant reply.

A glance upward at the eagle's feather that decorated his black locks showed the boy that it had been dyed or painted yellow. There were two or three artistic streaks of yellow paint daubed across the savage's brow, quite in keeping, too.

"My name is Olaf Tryggvesson, Mr. Yellow Feather," said the boy politely, completing this strange introduction.

The Indian looked at him somewhat dubiously. Such a name as that he had never heard. He was not versed in the history of Norway, he did not know that little Olaf bore a royal name. He had never heard of Scandinavia. Even "Olaf" was too much, to say nothing of "Tryggvesson." Since he needs must he would give this vagabond boy a suitable name according to his own fancy.

"Little Yellow Hair," said the Indian at last, laying his hand gently on the boy's head; then he pointed to his own plumage. "Big chief Yellow Feather, little chief Yellow Hair," he added, and a sort of a smile overspread his copper-colored face at his own cleverness.

This was distinctly friendly and most interesting. The boy was decidedly encouraged. He thought he might venture to set forth some of his more pressing needs to his new-found friend.

"I have had no dinner or supper," he began diffidently, and seeing the rather blank look on the face of his new friend, with an instinctive resort to that primitive and world-wide sign language which is common to and understood of all human beings, he laid his hand on his little stomach, opened his large mouth widely, and said, "Hungry."

LEAVING THE INDIANS WHERE THEY HAD FALLEN, HE RODE AWAY

How far the words conveyed anything to Yellow Feather did not matter; the gesture did. The meaning was unmistakable. The chief nodded vehemently in token of his complete understanding, turned, beckoned to the boy, and the two trudged up the trail. They rounded a bend in the cañon, and under some tall pines growing in a nook by the trail they saw two other Indians busy about a fire.

It was now almost dark and the fire spread about a pleasant glow in the shadows cast by the great trees. The two Indians looked up at the newcomers but otherwise manifested little curiosity, after the usual habit of their race. One was a woman, the other a very young man, scarcely more than a youth.

"Yellow Feather squaw—boy," laconically said the first comer, indicating clearly the family relationship, while the persons so described gave little outward sign of interest. What the head of the family did was not meet for comment by the members thereof, and if he chose to bring home unexpected guests for dinner that was his business, this being an uncivilized household.

"Heap Big Chief" next stalked unceremoniously to the fire and picked up a battered frying-pan which rested on two stones over the blaze. With his knife he speared from it a piece of fried bacon. From the nearest settlement the family had possessed itself of a tin of hardtack, and a dry cracker was therefore at hand. Yellow Feather laid the bacon on the cracker and handed it to the boy. Nothing on earth had ever looked so good to his eyes or smelt so good to his nose as that not-over-clean strip of bacon on that somewhat dilapidated piece of hardtack! Little Olaf was about to fall upon it forthwith when he suddenly remembered something. He laid the hardtack gently down on a fallen log and bent his head, put up his hands, and said his grace! He did not always say grace before meat, sometimes he forgot it, sometimes he was ashamed to do it before strangers; but this time it seemed to him especially appropriate that he should do so. His life had been preserved, the Indians had not killed him, he had fallen into the hands of friends, his hunger was to be appeased, his fears assuaged—surely these were things for which to be grateful, and for which he should return thanks in what words he could muster. Accordingly he did it, and he did it the more readily because his new friends were not civilized and would not mock—unconscious tribute to savagery there!

The Indians watched him in grave silence while he thus did his devoir. Old Yellow Feather remarked, as he finished his brief petition and fell ravenously on the bacon:

"You pray like miss'nary, maybe?"

The boy nodded. He understood vaguely but quite enough to assent.

"Where come, where go?" asked Yellow Feather after he had plied the lad with all he could eat.

"I'm an orphan," began the visitor, but Yellow Feather shook his head. "No father, no mother," said the boy, adapting his language to his hearers naturally and without difficulty. "You know railroad?" Yellow Feather nodded. "I got off the train and got left behind."

"You follow trail?"

"Yes."

"You go somewhere?"

"Nowhere."

"You keep that way," said the Indian, pointing ahead, "you come white man, town, sal-loon." He pronounced the name of this evidence of progress and civilization as if it were two words. "Heap good firewater," he added, laying his hand on his stomach.

He had made ready his pipe as he had conversed and had taken a few puffs when his own word reminded him of something. From beneath the blanket from a pouch that hung at his belt he drew forth a small flat bottle. He uncorked it, smelt it, his eyes brightening with satisfaction; then he proffered the stuff to the boy.

Little Olaf had seen too many of those bottles before. He knew from frequent observation just what the contents did to men who drank from them Indeed, he had tasted the rank stuff himself. Some of it had been forced down his throat on one occasion. He wanted no more. He shook his head decidedly.

"No good for white boy," said the Indian approvingly.

"No good for anybody," answered the boy decidedly.

To this sentiment Yellow Feather apparently

Three Great Words

WHAT word occurs oftenest in the Bible? Not of sign words or connective words like "and" or "the," but of the real words with positive meaning? If you have a concordance, turn over the leaves, noticing the words at the top of each page. You will notice, by the way, what an atmosphere of warm, simple, actual human life runs through the Book. It is full of everyday doings and everyday people.

There is one great, transcendent word—"God." In our office edition of the big concordance edited by Dr. Young there are thirteen pages full of references in which the word God appears. But as you run through the rest of the book, noticing the common, human acts and things, the one word that leads all the rest is—"Come." Twelve pages of "comes"; approximately three thousand of them. Now, of course, in most of the passages the word has no definitely spiritual meaning. It simply describes the common action of the folks the Bible tells about. It gives an impression of motion, action, purpose, eagerness, the impression of people being drawn to some place or object they wish to reach.

It is perfectly legitimate, however, to combine the ideas of these two great Bible words. The combination does truly express the message of the Bible. The one great fact of the Bible is God; the one great act and exhortation of the Bible is "Come." Among these thousands of "comes" are many definite, personal, affectionate invitations of this God of the heavens for the people of the earth to come to him. In the Old Testament he said: "Come now and let us reason together"; "Incline your ear, and come unto me." The New Testament is full of it. "Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest." "Him that cometh unto me I will in no wise cast out." The Book ends with the same message: "The Spirit and the bride say, Come; and let him that heareth say, Come; and let him that is athirst come, and whosoever will, let him come."

There are two other lovely "comes." God not only asks men to come to him; he comes to them. In Old Testament times he came to talk with his chosen servants; the angel of the Lord came; the word of the Lord came. But there was promise of a still more definite coming: "The Redeemer shall come to Zion." And at last he appeared: "The Son of Man is come to seek and to save." The other beautiful "come" is that addressed by one man to another, urging that both approach the inviting Father. "Come ye, let us walk in the light of the Lord." "Come, let us return unto the Lord." "Philip saith unto him, Come and see." And again: "Let him that heareth say Come."

The word that follows next in the pages of the concordance is one on which the New Testament lays great stress, a word that has vast meaning, because Christ gave it great emphasis. We understand it better after considering the two words which outnumber it on the pages of the book—"God," "Come," "Go." We see this third word clearer in the light of the last class of "comes." Before we can say "come" we must "go" to the man who needs our invitation. The church must go where men are: not wait for men to come to it. With the music of God's "come" in our ears, let us go to those who have not yet heard.

Home Rule Prospects

FOR the second time this session, the Irish Home Rule bill has been carried in the House of Commons by a substantial majority, the vote standing 356 to 276. On two previous occasions, when it had been passed twice by the Commons, it was rejected in the House of Lords. Under the constitutional provision, the prerogative of the Lords ceases when a bill has passed the Commons thrice, which the present measure is expected by its supporters to do successfully next month. Heretofore it has failed of a third passage, but every nerve of the government will be strained to carry it through when it comes up for the final vote.

Sir Edward Carson has never united the position of Ulster, which desires to be left out of the arrangement altogether until the people are won over to consent to inclusion, if that day ever comes. Bonar Law has warned the government that in forcing the bill through by single-chamber methods it is braving "damnation and disaster." He believes the only way out of the trouble is either to exclude Ulster from the bill or to appeal to the people. He issued a note of solemn warning that Ulster would never yield against its will, "or go outside the protection of the British Parliament."

Such is the situation to-day and it is as critical as at any time since the turmoil began. While the spokesmen for the government persist in declaring civil war impossible, Ulster stands defiant and will be neither coaxed nor coerced to leave the Union, or to accept Home Rule, which would mean the virtual surrender of her religious freedom. Already the British press is beginning to discuss the future of Ulster as a state loyal to and united with the union, yet independent of all its surroundings. Should the exclusion plan be adopted, many things may happen in the next six years. Business in Ulster, which is conducted in a large degree with the south of Ireland, might be affected to such an extent as would menace the prosperity of the province. Such a situation might easily breed reprisals. Ulster knows of these dangers, but does not shrink from taking all the chances.

Bearing Witness

IN THE days of persecution in Europe for Christ's sake, a sufferer was confined for many years in a cold, dark dungeon. There was one narrow opening in the wall for air and light, through which a sunbeam came daily for a few minutes, making a small bright spot on the opposite side of the cell. Eagerly the lonely man watched for that little patch of sunshine, and thankfully received its momentary cheer. One day as he looked upon it, a happy thought occurred to him, a suggestion of love. Groping on the floor of his cell, he found a nail and a stone, and with only these poor tools, patiently working day after day on the sunny spot while the illumination lasted, he succeeded after long endeavor in bringing out upon it a rude sculpture of Christ upon the cross. Does not such a story shame us when we think of the wide and numberless opportunities we have had to bear witness for our Saviour, which we have allowed to pass by unimproved? With every home, every place of business or of pleasure flooded with the true light of the world, where could we not exalt the Crucified One by voice or deed, if we had but a tithe of the martyr's love and faith and courage? Short indeed the time we have, and poor at best our effort; yet if we do with the might of love whatsoever our hand findeth to do, we shall not strive in vain. It shall appear at last that we have left behind us some faint image of Christ in the thoughts and hearts of those with whom we tarried even for a day.

A Vision of Usefulness

ONE of the oldest friends of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD—a gentleman who has passed the greater part of a long lifetime in Christian work at home and abroad—wrote in his diary when he was eighteen years of age:

> I am still wanting in those many virtues to a possession of which I have aspired. A true gentlemanly courtesy of manner, a refinement of mind, a decision of character, a firmness of purpose, attainments of learning, an extensive acquaintance with the standard works of genius from time long since to the present day, a warm and sympathizing heart, a generous, noble spirit, an energy in the direction of my present everyday employment, or better, an entire acquaintance with it and a proper spirit in its pursuit, a complete command over all my appetites and inclinations, a persevering disposition, an amiability of deportment, habits of industry and early rising, a high moral tone of character, in all my actions an application of principle, feelings of contentment and happiness, an independent course, fearless of the world's censure and mockery when engaged in the performance of duty, an equanimity of deportment, free from changing feelings which now greatly distress me, love of God and his Word and his Son, and above all a realizing sense of his presence and his love for me, faith in his Word, a belief that he will hear my prayers and a full reliance on him, are the different phases of character and attainments which I desire to unite in myself and of which to become the possessor.

Youthful aspiration, says a philosopher, hitches its chariot to a star. It aims high and is not to be discouraged. Even though it may not reach the topmost heights, yet the dream, the vision, comes to pass in a measure, since without it the grade of life would have been on a far lower level. Our old friend, looking back over the sixty-three years that have sped since he wrote the words we have quoted, now sees wherein he has fallen short of his high ideal; but he also sees what he has won. The spiritual aim which was so strongly emphasized in his youth has dominated his whole life and made it one of true Christian service to his fellow men. It has been a career of blessing and constant enlargement. Such an experience furnishes a beautiful illustration of the value of early consecration. A life dedicated to Christ and humanity may miss something of worldly triumph, and may involve sacrifice; but when old age comes, it will bring with it the rich reward of a soul stayed upon God, a heart filled with the divine peace and overflowing with love for mankind, and memories that carry neither bitterness nor regret. We all fall short of the great Ideal, but He will pardon our imperfections.

Villa—Hero or Savage?

"SCRATCH a Russian and find a Tartar" is an old and somewhat overworked proverb, although it is constantly finding fresh illustration in the affairs of life. Perhaps at bottom there is a streak of the old savage, the "cave-man," in most people. Mrs. Cora Harris, writing in the Independent, observes: "Look at Villa, the Mexican bandit. He was a nice young man, brought up in Maryland." This information, which will doubtless be new to many, gives a sharp point of contrast with the Pancho Villa of the war despatches. It is not a pleasing picture which a correspondent draws of the rebel leader who has just triumphed at Torreon. According to the correspondent's views Villa, when under fire, harks back to the Indian savage. But there is a business method in his madness. He keeps one eye on the foe and another on the camera. Dressed in shirt and trousers, wearing heavy boots, a pistol stuck in his belt and a rifle in his hand, his head hatless and hair disheveled, he is here, there and everywhere all over the field, in fact ubiquitous, shouting orders to his officers, or pausing to return the salutes of wounded men. He is said to fill up all the intervals by swearing frightfully. There are moments, however, when he is smiling encouragement to his troops, alongside of whom he fights like a common soldier in the ranks. He is utterly reckless and takes even chances with his men, who, knowing their leader's way of fighting, almost idolize him. And so he goes on, all through the thick of the battle, his sweating face smudged with grime and smoke, his blood at fever heat, and imprecations as well as invocations to all the saints pouring unrestrainedly from his lips. It is not a nice picture, but it describes how the ghastly trade of war transforms some natures. It brings out all the barbarian there is in a man like "the unconquerable" Villa, and accounts, to some extent at least, for his furious love of slaughter and the little mercy he shows to prisoners. Both sides have been barbarous in the Mexican War, but surely the palm for sheer bloodthirstiness must be accorded to the half-hero, half-savage victor of Torreon.

Circus Girl's Fatal Fall

ELLA HACKETT, a young equestrienne and aerial performer in a circus, fell from the rafters to the platform, and was instantly killed in the Madison Square Garden, New York, on the afternoon of April 1, in an attempt during a rehearsal to "loop the loop through the girders." She refused all safety appliances commonly used in rehearsals, such as the life net and mechanical rope, so sure was she of her ability to do her feat. Her sister, Sara, her companion performer in the circus, and William Lamont, the wire-walker, who is engaged to marry Sara, were coaching Ella in her performance when the accident suddenly occurred, and they saw with a shudder the girl's lifeless body at their feet. The sisters are the daughters of Dr. Clarence L. Hackett of New York, and are the only members of the circus company from the metropolis. Ella was to have celebrated her twentieth birthday on the Saturday following, and her father had left an order with the caterer for the proposed celebration on the very morning of the day she was killed. Ella's mother has been a bed-ridden invalid for sixteen years, and the shock of the untimely death threw her into a collapse from which her friends fear she may never recover. More and more society is requiring adequate safety appliances for the perils of life. Amidst the miscalculations, the missteps, the falls in the moral and spiritual world, there is a safety device, faith in Christ, which is the life wire to hold, or net to catch the soul that is falling to death, but the device must be used. Here is the description given of it:

For God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life. (John 3: 16.)

Juvenile Dentistry Needed

IT IS claimed on good authority that there are ten million school children in this country who have defective teeth. Figures compiled by the American Museum of Safety show that 125,928 cases of defective teeth have been found. The lower animals can not have comfort or health with imperfect teeth. What a blessing modern dentistry has proven to the health and happiness of young and old. Fortunately, many school boards have provided free dental treatment for those unable to afford it. Good teeth are necessary to the physical health and happiness of the children, just as a good character is necessary to temporal and spiritual prosperity. This great lesson the school teacher should enforce:

Keep thy heart with all diligence, for out of it are the issues of life. (Prov. 4: 23.)

Celebrate Shakespeare's Birth

MAYOR MITCHEL has appointed a large committee of distinguished men to arrange for the celebration of the 350th anniversary of Shakespeare's birth on April 23. Plans are being laid in New York City for the greatest event of the kind in history. This is proper, for as Homer was the greatest epic poet, Shakespeare was the greatest dramatist te world has ever known. He has marched down the centuries with the vigor and creative force of perpetual youth. He has done much to dominate the thought of the ages. On the anniversary the eyes of the civilized world will turn to Stratford-on-Avon, and to the lowly house where the poet was born, and where he learned his father's craft of wool-combing. Washington Irving thus describes his first visit to this home:

It is a small, mean-looking edifice of wood and plaster, a true cobbling-place of genius, which seems to delight in hatching its offspring in by-corners. There was the shattered stock of the gun with which he shot the deer; the sword also with which he played Hamlet; the identical lantern with which Friar Laurence discovered Romeo and Juliet at the tomb; and the chair in the chimney nook of a small, gloomy chamber.

Not far from this home where he was born is Shakespeare's tomb in the chancel of the village church. It would have been in Westminster Abbey had it not been for these lines cut in a flat stone that marks his resting place, which, it is said, he wrote himself:

Good friend, for Jesus' sake, forbear
To dig the dust inclosèd here.
Blessed be he that spares these stones,
And curst be he that moves my bones.

On his return to the inn after his visit to the birth and burial place of the great poet, Irving said: "I had been surrounded with fancied beings conjured up by poetic power, but which, to me, had all the charm of reality. I had heard Jacques soliloquize beneath his oak; had beheld the fair Rosalind and her companion adventuring through the woodlands; had been present in spirit with fat Jack Falstaff and his contemporaries, from the august Justice Shallow down to the gentle Master Slender and the sweet Anne Page." That magic charm has held the best thought of the world for over three hundred years. Shakespeare drew copiously from the Bible as a treasure house. In the realm of letters, the immortal poet realized these words:

Thy word is a lamp unto my feet, and a light unto my path. (Ps. 119: 105.)

FIRST AMBASSADOR TO UNITED STATES FROM CHINESE REPUBLIC, K. F. SHAH, WITH MRS. SHAH (AT RIGHT); THREE OF THEIR FIVE CHILDREN AND ATTENDANT

MR. K. F. SHAH, the first minister to Washington of the new Chinese republic, left Peking early in March, and coming over the Trans-Siberian Railroad to Moscow, Warsaw, Berlin and Hamburg, reached New York by steamer April 6, and a few days later went down to his post in Washington. The minister brought with him three secretaries for the Chinese legation. The first secretary, Chu Hjing Yuan, was accompanied by his wife. The new minister is well acquainted with American customs, as he served five years as consul general in New York and speaks English fluently. He wears the frock coat and silk hat of the diplomats of the Western World. Mr. Shah said there would be no changes in the diplomatic relations between the United States and the new Chinese republic he had been sent to represent. He also said that the new government was getting settled on a firm basis. One of the most significant events of the centuries was the sudden turning over of a government, including one-fourth of the race, from an absolute despotism to a democracy. The suddenness of the change made the revolution that followed inevitable. But in two or three years, Mr. Shah thinks, the revolution will have spent itself, and China will have taken her place permanently in the family of republics. Christianity, which is to conquer China, will ensure the perpetuity of the republic, for these words of Christ are as true for the nation as for the individual: "And ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free." (John 8: 32.)

Policeman a Fake Hero

A POLICEMAN in one of the cities of this country, at one time or another, put hero medals on his breast, claiming that he had saved so many lives at the risk of his own. Suspicion was aroused, a detective was put on his track, and it was found that his pretended heroism was fraud, and he is now on trial in the police department for lying. Those who want the public to believe they are richer, or abler, or better than they are, have on the fake medals of worth that vanity furnishes. In public and private life this prayer of the psalmist is appropriate:

O deliver me from the deceitful and unjust man. (Ps. 43: 1.)

Teacher Murdered by Pupil

MISS LYDIA BEECHER, daughter of a Presbyterian minister, was decoyed into the woods near Poland, N. Y., and murdered by a boy pupil eighteen years old, who had been expelled from the high school for a series of outrageous acts. He thought she was responsible for his misfortune and slew her in revenge. The truth was, she was more anxious about him than any other scholar, because he was so very bad, and she was patient with him, and at the time of the tragedy was planning for his mental and moral welfare. Here hate undertook to kill love anxious to save, as it did our Master. This incident recalls the words of Christ:

They hated me without a cause. (John 15: 25.)

Dog Sentenced to Death

JERRY, the one dog in the country accused of a criminal career, is caught in the act at last. Snapping and snarling, he was flung into a cell in a police station in Philadelphia the other day, and later was brought before Magistrate Beaton on a charge of professional burglary and was sentenced by the judge to death by chloroform, which sentence was executed. Five policemen testified to Jerry's bad character, as member of a band of burglars who had him trained to act as a lookout. Many people, like poor Jerry, are set to wicked tasks by bad men of greater ability and low cunning, and while the weak instruments should not go free, a double measure of penalty should fall upon the malefactors who are mostly to blame. This difference of responsibility and of punishment the Saviour thus defines:

That servant which knew his lord's will, and prepared not himself, neither did according to his will, shall be beaten with many stripes; but he that knew not, and did commit things worthy of stripes, shall be beaten with few stripes. (Luke 12: 47, 48.)

Drink Driven from Navy

SECRETARY DANIELS issued an order the other day forbidding entirely the use of intoxicating liquors on vessels of the American navy. The order will go into effect July 1. Just before the beginning of the Civil War rum ceased to be issued as a ration to enlisted men in the navy. Some years ago the use of intoxicants on government vessels by enlisted men was forbidden. The officers of the navy, however, retained their "wine mess" with its purchase and consumption of certain forms of intoxicating liquors. The new order, which is an amendment to the navy regulations, is as follows: "The use or introducing for drinking purposes of alcoholic liquors on board any naval vessel, or within any navy yard or station, is strictly prohibited, and commanding officers will be held directly responsible for the enforcement of this order." The Secretary received a report from the new surgeon general of the navy, Rear Admiral Wm. Braisted, giving an account of the physical and moral damage of the "wine mess." The order is in the line of higher efficiency, better morals, better health, and, as Admiral Braisted has characterized it, for a "clear head and a steady hand." No army or navy in the world has a finer class of enlisted men and officers than ours. A powerful public sentiment is asking for abstinence from intoxicants upon the part of the men and officers as well. The prophet gives the example that might well be followed:

And I said unto them, Drink ye wine. But they said, We will drink no wine; for Jonadab the son of Rechab our father commanded us, saying, Ye shall drink no wine, neither ye, nor your sons forever. (Jer. 35: 5, 6.)

DOINGS OF THE DENOMINATIONS

BAPTIST NATIONAL MEETINGS

TWO great meetings are soon to be held in the United States which will arrest the attention of the whole Baptist world. Naturally, many questions affecting the financing of the conventions, and the budgets of the various missionary and other societies which form an important part of the denominational life, will receive earnest attention.

One of the questions which will cause considerable discussion at the Southern Baptist Convention will be the report of the Commission on Efficiency appointed a year ago. This committee will deal with the matters of economy in administration, the relation of the State boards to the General Convention, and the vital question of interdenominational cooperation in foreign mission work. Many excellent brethren, especially officers of the related Home and Foreign Mission Boards, feel that the questions of administration of the affairs of these boards are not open for discussion and regulation by the General Convention, but prudence, wisdom and piety will govern the action of the committee and lead to wise results.

At the Northern Baptist Convention, to be held in Boston June 17 to 25, important changes in by-laws will require thoughtful action. A large emphasis will be placed upon the efficiency institutes, which will make possible the "development of personal activity in evangelist work throughout the several associations which form the units of organized work in the denomination. The questions of stimulating benevolent offerings, the raising of standards of efficiency in the local churches, the development of social service interests and personal giving for the cause of Christ through the every-member canvass are some of the many practical matters which will occupy the attention of the convention in all of its sessions. The problem of unifying the home and foreign work of the two conventions will receive new emphasis this year in both bodies.

Dr. Barbour's New Field of Service

Rev. Clarence A. Barbour, D.D., widely known in Baptist circles, has been chosen to succeed Fred B Smith as secretary of the Religious Work Department of the International Young Men's Christian Association.

The retirement of Mr. Smith from the secretaryship to engage in secular business is a matter of sincere regret by the Christian world. His efficiency as an organizer and his great success as an evangelist in the winning of men made him a mighty force for good far beyond the limits of the organization he has served with so much distinction. His place on the committee is to be filled by one of the most energetic and devoted ministers in the Baptist denomination. Dr. Barbour is not so widely known for evangelistic gifts as his predecessor, but he brings to the office ripe scholarship, consecrated zeal, a wealth of experience in the ministry, a warm sympathy for young men, and a devotion to the highest aims of the association, which seeks to save the whole man.

While the Baptists feel that the change of Dr. Barbour's field of service is in a sense a distinctive loss to the active ministerial force of the denomination, they rejoice that they are able to give to the wide field of evangelism for men a man of such sterling worth.

PENSIONS FOR EPISCOPAL PASTORS

THE necessity of such a pension has been a matter of serious and prolonged discussion in the Episcopal Church for many years. It was at the last General Convention, held in the city of New York in October, 1913, that the subject finally got into definite shape by that body—the highest in the church—authorizing the establishment of such a fund and appointing a committee to carry it into effect. A conference composed of the Right Rev Dr Lawrence of Boston as chairman, and several other distinguished bishops and clergy and laymen, met on March 3 in the rooms of the Harvard Club, and discussed several matters of importance relative to the pensioning of the clergy. Chief among the subjects taken up were the rules that were to govern in awarding financial aid to such clergymen of the church as were in need, the amount of benefaction to be given, and the ways and means by which a pension fund should be raised. The fact that such men as Bishops Lawrence of Massachusetts, Greer of New York and Israel of the diocese of Erie, together with the Rev. Dr. Stires of St. Thomas's Church, New York, Rev. Mr. Sedgwick of Calvary Church, same city, Archdeacon Nelson of New York, Archdeacon Pott of Westchester, and others of prominence are willing to give up their time to the earnest consideration of this subject and to work to make it a possible thing, not only gives vitality to the undertaking, but emphasizes in a most positive way the justice of the establishment of such a fund, and the promise of its being made effectual. And what gives to the movement increasing significance is the fact that only recently a bill has been introduced in the legislature at Albany to incorporate the "Church Pension Fund." The object of the fund is set forth in the following language:

> To provide pensions or other forms of support for clergymen of the Protestant Episcopal Church, who because of long and meritorious service, or by age, disability, or other reason shall be deemed entitled to the assistance and aid of this corporation on such terms as the corporation approve.
> To provide for persons who at the time of such pension are or who have been dependent upon such clergymen, and shall be entitled to the assistance of this corporation.

The bill also provides that the corporation shall be authorized to establish appropriate activities and aids, and that it shall be subject to the visitations of the superintendent of insurance. The corporation is to be subject to the General Convention of the church and will be reviewed by it.

THE LAKE PARK ENGLISH LUTHERAN CHURCH

MILWAUKEE, the city which once in its north side business district actually displayed signs, "English Spoken Here," is becoming Americanized. In no respect is this found more true than in the change of tone of its churches, and Milwaukee's latest English Lutheran church meets the demand of the children of the old German Protestants for a church where they can worship in their American tongue. The newest and most artistic of Milwaukee's progressive Lutheran churches has all its services in English, conducted by Pastor Cooper, and is situated in the heart of Milwaukee's most aristocratic district. Chief of Police Jansen, head of the department for a quarter of a century, a devout churchman, through personal solicitation among his neighbors was able to provide the funds for the erection of the new church, of which he is a trustee.

Episcopal Work Among the Italians

The Episcopal Church is making much headway among the Italians residing in the city of New York. In addition to the splendid work now being carried on in several parts of the lower districts of the city, a new work has recently been opened in the upper part in the district of the Bronx. A Sunday service for Italians has been started in the Bronx House, 1511 Fulton Avenue, under the special supervision of the rector of the Church of the Holy Spirit, Rev. M. K. Baily, formerly an assistant minister of Grace Church. A congregation of over seventy Italians has already been gathered, and others are being attracted.

MORAVIAN CHURCH ACTIVITIES

A NEWSPAPER editor in Magdeburg, Prussia, suggested that it would be a very fitting celebration of the twenty-fifth anniversary of the coronation of Kaiser Wilhelm II, which fell due in 1913, to institute a national collection for foreign missions, and to divide the proceeds among the mission boards doing work in German colonies. The collection amounted to five millions of marks, roughly speaking, $1,200,000. On November 4, 1913, this was apportioned by imperial authority among the various mission boards. As one of the most prosperous missions of the Moravian Church is in Nyasa in the German colony of Equatorial East Africa, $51,970 were assigned to the Moravian board.

A Missionary Honored

The Moravian Church furnishes the nurses for the Bethesda Home for Lepers at Groot Chatillon in Surinam (Dutch Guiana). Sister Philippine Stuhlfauth is the head nurse or deaconess of the home. On the occasion of the birthday of Wilhelmina, Queen of Holland, on August 31, 1913, the queen conferred upon Miss Stuhlfauth the gold medal of the Order of Orange-Nassau, in recognition of her self-sacrificing labors among the lepers. The conferring of the medal came as a complete surprise to Sister Philippine. It was the occasion of a great celebration by the lepers, who rejoiced at the honor shown their beloved leader.

General Synod to Meet

The General Synod of the Moravian Church, which met last in 1909, and which will be attended by delegates from all parts of the world (nine delegates going from the United States and Canada), will convene in Herrnhut, Saxony, Germany, on May 14, 1914, and will be in session four or five weeks.

A New Mission House

The Mission Board of the Moravian Church is an international board, as the church is an organic unity throughout the world, and its foreign missionary work is carried on by the church as a whole. The Mission Board is composed of one American, one Englishman, one German and two members chosen from the church at large. The central offices are in Herrnhut in Saxony in Germany. The present American member of the board is Bishop J. Taylor Hamilton, D.D., formerly of the faculty of the Moravian College and Theological Seminary at Bethlehem, Pa. American Moravians are building a new home and office for their representative on the International Mission Board at Herrnhut at a cost of $8,000, to be ready for occupancy on April 1.

METHODISTS ON CHINA

ADVICES from Peking, received by the M. E. Board of Foreign Missions in New York, state that President Yuan has issued a mandate explaining the exact meaning and force of his previous announcement regarding the restoration of Confucianism as China's system of social ethics. The new mandate fully guarantees religious freedom. It declares: "No state religion will be introduced, as under the Ching dynasty, since religious freedom corresponds with the system of republicanism." This is but an official confirmation of what China's friends in America had believed to be the definite policy of Yuan. Back in the dark days of the Boxer troubles, it was Yuan Shi Kai, then a viceroy, who not merely protected Christians from insult or injury in his own province, but who quietly conveyed to Washington news upon the strength of which was determined the despatching of troops to safeguard the legations. His open acquiescence in the advance of Christianity in China is shown in his decision that China shall not revert to the reactionary ranks of nations shackled by the bonds of state religions.

THE PENTECOSTAL CHURCH'S GROWTH

AN OFFICIAL statement of the progress of the Pentecostal Church of the Nazarene, communicated to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, shows the following figures up to the close of 1913:

	1913	Increase over 1912
Number of churches	625	49
Number of members	22,910	1,073
Number of Young People's Societies	2,218	370
Members of Sunday school	25,458	2,335
Sunday school officers and teachers	3,718	614
Number of elders (decrease 2)	606	....
Number of licensed preachers	750	75
Number of deaconesses (decrease 11)	507	....
Number of Sunday school superintendents	492	111
Number of licensed evangelists	231	2
Number of church buildings	290	59
Number of parsonages	59	30

The value of the church property owned by the denomination is $1,177,659, an increase of $137,860 over the preceding year; indebtedness $220,338, a decrease of $20,250; raised for pastors $144,533, an increase of $23,286; for evangelists, $38,010, an increase of $6,530; for foreign missions $30,160, an increase of $7,336; for rescue work $9,502, an increase of $4,075; total raised for all purposes $464,140, an increase of $71,556.

A WEEK IN THE WORLD'S NEWS

Winter Wheat Makes Big Promises

THE Department of Agriculture announces that a conservative estimate forecasts a record-breaking winter wheat crop. On April 1 the crop showed 95.6 per cent. of normal, 11.5 per cent. better than the average on that date. Thirty-six and one-half million acres are planted, and the average yield in the last ten years has been fifteen bushels; in view of the better condition of the crop, it is estimated that the total yield could be over 609,000,000 bushels. Reducing estimates to a conservative basis, a production of around 551,000,000 is expected. The rye crop also shows a betterment over normal conditions, but not to so great an extent as wheat. A bumper crop of such enormous proportions would have an excellent effect in reducing the cost of food stuffs.

Women Lose and Win in Election

AT THE municipal election in Chicago, April 7, the nine women candidates for city offices were defeated, although about 100,000 women, less than one-half their registration, voted, the first vote they have had. Outside of Chicago the women's vote closed more than a thousand saloons, sixteen Illinois counties being added to the thirty already dry, the victory taking in eleven of the State's larger cities, which previously were "wet"; and no city or township previously dry was lost, though eight cities remained wet as before. At a special election on the same day, New York State voted to hold a convention in April of next year to revise the State Constitution. In Alabama the anti-saloon forces were not able to elect Representative Hobson over his opponent, Oscar Underwood.

Death of Wealthiest Man

THE least known and by some thought to be the wealthiest financier of America, F. Weyerhaeuser, lumberman, died at Pasadena, Calif., April 4, aged 79. Born of obscure parents in South Germany, after a strenuous boyhood he brought his mother and sisters to America and worked for a dollar a day in a lumber mill to support them. In six months he was manager, and a year later a partner in the concern, despite a scant education. Saving his money and keeping his own counsel, he gradually acquired timber acreage in the Northwest estimated to be greater than the entire State of New York; he also controlled many important lumber companies. A man of domestic habits, loving privacy, he admitted the public to practically none of the facts of his career, and it will remain for his close intimates to reveal the secrets of his extraordinary rise to the acme of financial success.

Lull in Home Rule Contest

PREMIER ASQUITH has been returned to the House of Commons by his constituency of East Fife, Scotland. During his absence the Home Rule bill for Ireland passed its second reading and went to the House of Lords. The present trend of this question is toward the final passage of the bill by the House of Commons with the concessions offered by Premier Asquith as the only modification likely to be obtained by Ulster.

Police Clash with Unemployed

DEMONSTRATIONS by the unemployed of New York this winter, chiefly under the leadership of I. W. W. agitators, culminated in a serious clash with the police on Saturday afternoon, April 4, in Union Square, during the progress of a meeting there by a labor organization. Followers of the I. W. W. without a permit attempted to parade to the same point, and, when halted by the police, defied them. The crowd of unemployed and onlookers were forced from the locality by mounted police, who used their clubs freely. The leader and others were badly beaten up and were arrested, but were discharged on Monday by the magistrate, who denounced the clubbing. A second mass meeting of unemployed by the I. W. W. has been announced at the same place for the following Saturday. This is the second clash between the police and this body of labor agitators. There is much activity at present among Socialists and labor agitators in New York. "General" Coxey is also recruiting unemployed men for his march upon Washington May 1.

The Pacifying of Colombia

BY TREATY with Colombia, signed in Bogota, April 8, by representatives of both governments, the United States agrees to pay that country $25,000,000 as indemnity for the Canal territory. The Colombia Congress will meet in special session to consider this treaty, which, if ratified by both governments, is expected to terminate the friction between the two countries. The treaty provides, among other things, for the restoration of friendly relations, the above indemnity to be paid six months after ratifications have been exchanged, and that the United States shall lend her good offices for the settlement of pending questions between Colombia and Panama.

The Great Exposition Progresses

THE Panama-Pacific Exposition, to be held at San Francisco next year, has assurances from twenty-nine foreign governments of their intention to participate. It is still hoped that Great Britain and Germany will reverse their attitude toward the Exposition and encourage, by official appropriations, the thousands of individual exhibitors from those countries. The following countries have made such appropriations: The Argentine Republic, Bolivia, Brazil, Canada, Chile, China, Cuba, Denmark, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, France, Guatemala, Haiti, Honduras, Italy, Japan, Liberia, Mexico, Netherlands, Panama, Persia, Peru, Portugal, Siam, Sweden, Turkey, Uruguay, Venezuela. Representatives of the governments of nine great powers have already been entered in the naval parade, which will proceed from Hampton Roads to the Golden Gate by way of the Panama Canal. Restoring Wellesley College

IT IS announced that Wellesley College has received assurance of a gift of three-quarters of a million dollars from the Rockefeller Foundation, conditional upon the trustees of the college raising two million dollars before January next. The fire on March 17 was disastrous to Wellesley, and friends of the institution have rushed to its aid with gifts of money to enable the trustees to replace College Hall, which was destroyed, and provide new equipment for laboratories, museums and administrative work.

Second Sealer Lost in Ice Floes

WHEN the sealer Newfoundland was crushed in drift ice and many of her crew lost, it was feared that a sister sealer, the Southern Cross, with a crew of 173, might also be lost. Hope was held out for her safety, but it is now considered certain that she went down with all on board in the blinding blizzard that struck the sealing fleet. This is one of the greatest tragedies in the history of the sealing industry, and some thousand women and children have lost their bread-winners. Many of the survivors of the Newfoundland are crippled for life as the result of their terrible experience on the ice floes.

Mobbed for Anti-Catholic Sermon

ANGERED by his criticisms of the Catholic Church, a mob of several hundred men and women in Denver, Col., on April 5, dragged Rev. Otis L. Spurgeon, a Baptist minister of Des Moines, Iowa, from his hotel room, took him some twenty miles outside the city, beat him and left him on the highway. He had been set upon before, at the close of his sermon, but was rescued by the police, who would not guarantee him protection in case he spoke again. The outrage has excited considerable indignation in Denver.

THE UNBROTHERLY BROTHER*

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON BY DR. AND MRS. WILBUR F. CRAFTS

OF ALL the many stories Jesus told, this parable of the prodigal is the favorite in city missions, where hundreds of disreputable sinners have seen in the prodigal's welcome home the way back to God and hope and life. But in most of our Sunday school classes there is more immediate need of the rebuke this lesson brings for the respectable sins of the proud, unfilial, unbrotherly brother. If we go back to the beginning of the chapter we shall see that this parable and those of the lost sheep and lost coin were all spoken to the Pharisees and Scribes to show them how ungodly they were; that is, how ungodlike in their unsympathetic attitude towards those they called "sinners," who had fallen into the coarser sins of drink and lust.

We advise teachers whose pupils are not prodigals, nor likely to be, but are proud, cold, unsympathetic, formal, unbrotherly, or likely to become so through their environment, to hasten through the story of the Prodigal Son, with a view to giving at least half, if not more than half, of the lesson time to finding just what Jesus meant to teach us by his picture of the unbrotherly brother.

"A certain man had two sons." The story is of a well-to-do farmer, whose younger son gets the wanderlust—the passion for the city, for change, and excitement, regardless of moral perils. Indeed, one reason he wants to go from home is to escape what he regards as too much moral restraint, of which he refuses to recognize the need (though he knows it is due to his father's love). But father is an "old fogy," he thinks, and he counts himself the best judge of what is good for him. That the father grants his unwise request to have his share of the farm turned to cash and turned over to him for his unwise venture is a picture of the awful responsibility of human freedom of the will. God will not compel us to be wise. We choose our own fate.

"He wasted his substance with riotous living." Sir George Williams, founder of the Young Men's Christian Association, said: "The first twenty-four hours of a young man in the city may determine his eternal destiny."

Look out for the men with the seaward way
And the homeless men in the town street;

* The International Lesson for April 27. The Prodigal Son. Luke 15: 11-24. Golden Text: I will arise and go to my father, and will say unto him, Father, I have sinned against heaven and in thy sight. Luke 15: 18.

way station or to call on him the very first day. Or if there is a Y. M. C. A. in the city, its good offices should be secured, or those of some other guardian of youth. Parents and teachers should do their part in this safeguarding.

The "waste" of the prodigal's "substance" is a tragedy understood now better than ever before. He wastes not only money, but the choice silver of brain and nerve, and health and efficiency and self-respect, and all that makes true manhood. He becomes like the swine, which, in the poverty that dissipation brings, he must tend for a living. Many a prodigal not yet in rags is already an unmanly beast in his conversation and in his habits, associating with others of like character.

"He began to be in want." The "mighty famine" that he shared is the soul's hunger for God. Nothing else can "satisfy our longings." He was really better off than when, in wanton pleasures, with money in abundance, he felt no want. "The lack of goods for the higher wants is not so sad as the lack of wants for the higher goods."

"When he came to himself." Sin is a sort of madness. It is never in our own true interest. The young man who drinks not only risks his health, but promotion in business. He sells the solid comforts of a successful life for the pleasure of a moment. Repentance is "coming to himself," a return from madness to wisdom. Coming to himself insures coming to the Father. To do that is always wisdom, as well as duty. It is better for body and soul, better for this world and the next, to be a true Christian.

"Bring forth the best robe." This is one of the two chief points in the story—the heartiness of God's welcome to repentant sinners, which is contrasted with the indifference to the salvation of others shown by the Pharisees, who were really in God's sight no less sinful than the prodigal.

It is to the most disreputable sinners that Christ offers hope in the parable—the man who is a drunkard, libertine, and tramp, who has taken the third degree in the "Down-and-Out Club." That prodigal story is a history that repeats itself every day in the Gospel meetings of the Salvation Army and similar city missions. "Him that cometh unto me," Jesus is still saying, "I will in no wise cast out." "I'm the 'him' that came," is sufficient password.

Just as I am, and waiting not
To rid my soul of one dark blot,
To thee whose blood can cleanse each spot,
O Lamb of God, I come, I come.

"His elder son was in the field." While the father was anxiously waiting and watching for the return of the wayward son, this stony-hearted brother, who was really more unlike his father in his pride and selfishness than the repentant prodigal, was "in the field," absorbed in his industry, not caring whether his erring brother came back or not, vainly counting himself religious in selfish efforts to save himself, not knowing that "he that saveth his life shall lose it." There is profound meaning for others besides Christ in what onlookers said about the cross, speaking better than they knew: "He saved others; himself he can not save."

Self-saving has been unwisely urged in the excessive individualism of the past. The call that wins to-day is, "Be saved in order to save others." The Pharisee in every age is too absorbed in saving himself to succeed even in that.

"He called to him one of the servants and inquired what these things might be." The proper thing would have been to go right to his father, but he was manifestly critical rather than filial, and being at heart a servant more than a son, he turned to share his cynical complaint with the servants.

"He was angry and would not go in" to the feast on hearing his father had killed the fatted calf, kept for choicest guests, for that scapegrace of a son. It was the spirit of Cain, "Am I my brother's keeper?" His proud, cold heart felt no pain in a brother's fall, no interest in his struggle to rise. Here again God's patience and tenderness is set in contrast with his unmerciful censoriousness: "His father came out and entreated him."

"Lo, these many years do I serve thee, and I never transgressed a commandment of thine." The secret of his failure to achieve a true Christian life is out: He is a servant in spirit, not a son. He is living in an Old Testament atmosphere. The few years he has "served" seem "many" because he has never known the joy of counting his service that of a son.

"When God's will is our law," says George Macdonald, "then are we but a kind of noble slave; but when God's will is our will, then are we his free children." The prodigal in his penitence was willing to be counted a servant, but the elder brother took that position from lack of love.

"This thy son." This unfilial, unbrotherly fling recalls the fact that there are churches that appear to want no common sinners about. They reluctantly admit the prodigals are all children of God, though wayward, but they refuse to be their "big brothers" and help them back to virtue and happiness.

"Thou never gavest me a kid that I might make merry with my friends." Clearly he was one of those unsocial icebergs who never wanted to make merry and who had no friends; an early specimen of "sour godliness," of which some examples are with us yet. He was one who in his anti-social selfishness dwelt alone—which means all one. Unsocial himself, he was opposed to the innocent gladness of others. There are many sincere Christians who have not so much as heard that the Christian life is a "feast," though Jesus so pictures it again and again. They read the story of the marriage feast as if it was all about a funeral. They live on the frosty side of "Grumble Alley," when God offers them a corner lot on the sunny side of "Thanksgiving Street."

Pleasure is not the chief object of life, and pleasure-seekers are not pleasure-finders to any such extent as are those who seek to be helpful and find themselves happy as a glad surprise.

The selfish, sour kind of godliness is barren and unfruitful. It is those who realize that the Christian life is a happy feast who win others. A large company of preachers in Scotland had been at a layman's house for dinner. The pastor called a few days later, and the lady of the house said, "Have you heard that Jean, our little maid servant, has been converted?" "Indeed," said the preacher; "what was it that awakened her?" "The party of preachers," said the lady. "Little Jean said she never heard so much laughing without any swearing, and the gladness of religion impressed her." Which in turn recalls the misprint that was not all a mistake when the text of a sermon on Gideon, "By the three hundred that lapped will I save you," came out in the paper, "By the three hundred that laughed will I save you." There are in the Bible eight hundred notes of joy, and a genuine faith in God that banishes both self-consciousness and fears for the future will banish the shadows from our faces and voices and from our very hearts, and we shall become winsome enough to claim the promise. "He that winneth souls is wise." "Rejoice in the Lord alway." "Let your mouth be filled with laughter and your tongue with singing." "Even our sins when forgiven should not mar our gladness." "It was meet to make merry and be glad; for this thy brother was dead and is alive again; and was lost and is found."

"Son, thou art ever with me." We are tempted to read that elder brother out of the family, as Jesus anathematized certain of the Scribes and Pharisees who were guilty of the two great sins of covetousness and hypocrisy; but the words of the father suggest that such unsympathetic church members are not to be cast out but thawed out. The father calls him "son," unfilial, unbrotherly though he is. The father will not be unfatherly. "Thou art ever with me, and all that I have is thine." It is as if he said: "You haven't taken even a kid for joy when all the flock was yours."

It is God's loving call to unspiritual, unsympathetic church members, whose Christian life has been an ice palace of cold formalities, to pass from frost to feast, from the gloom of a self-centered life to the exultant joy on earth of saving others, which spreads to the very angels of God.

Phillips Brooks, in the Independent of March 13, 1887, in a profound talk on the "Conversations of Jesus" shows why the elder brother and the prodigal should have rejoiced equally even in their own behalf. "Two sinners stand together before the mercy seat. If he whose life has been all stained and wretched rejoices with enthusiastic gratitude in proportion to the depth of sin into which he has fallen, and for which he has been forgiven, shall not his brother standing beside him rejoice that he has been saved from so much into which his poor brother has fallen? Shall he sing cold and heartless songs and have only stunted and crippled gratitude? Shall he not say, 'God, I thank thee that thou hast preserved me,' with the same intensity and earnestness with which the other says, 'I thank thee that thou hast rescued me'?"

—WHAT CAN I do to get my scholars to bring their Bibles? Hardly two out of five will do it.

It is desirable that scholars shall use Bibles instead of lesson papers for several reasons: the authority of the Bible is emphasized; they are familiarized with the Bible and they learn how to use it; they are taught reverence for it, which is almost impossible with lesson leaves, which are ruthlessly torn or cast aside even though a part of the Bible. If scholars will not bring their own Bibles, it would be well to have a class set, each scholar's name written in one copy. These might be kept strapped together or placed in a box, so that the same Bibles should be delivered to the class every Sunday. See to it that each scholar has the Bible with his name in it.

APRIL SHOWERS

BY MARGARET E. SANGSTER, JR.

EVERYBODY tripped into town gaily, dressed in new spring gowns, humming a bit o' tune. The sunshine of springtime none over a flower garden of gor- eous hats, and suits, and dresses— hone brightly and deceptively. And nen, when the streets were filled to verflowing, when the air was stuffed ith happy laughter, when all nature as absolutely happy, a little trouble- ome, gray cloud slipped over the sun nd covered the earth with a misty, ark blanket. And then, when every- ody began to notice that it felt damp nd unpleasant, the rain came down ercilessly on an umbrellaless multi- ude with gay dresses and flowery hats nd shiny pumps. And when the mul- tude, angry at life, hating the eather with a terrible hatred, had urried to stores or home, or taken ne nearest taxi, the cloud with a wink f its saucy eye disappeared, and the ain stopped, and the sun came out righter than ever before. It was egular April weather.

During the storm many people had een annoyed—slightly—but they had aid crossly: "Another shower!" thers had murmured, "a thunder- orm!" in real fright; and a very few ad looked up at the blackness of the ty superstitiously and cried beneath eir breath:

"I'm frightened. Is it the end of ne world?"

But the sun came out softly, ra- antly, and the earth never stirred it of its steady whirl—never eathed differently.

There are times when trouble comes ftly, like a cloud, filmy gray in color, ifting over the sun. And we poor eople of the earth gasp at it and onder (according to our natures) hether it will be a cloud-burst, or a understorm, or a cyclone. We never op to think that the sun is there, se- enely waiting behind the grayness. or trouble comes swiftly like an pril shower and takes us, often- mes, by surprise.

I knew a woman once, a sheltered, ved woman, with a grown-up daugh- r and an adoring husband. She had ouses, and carriages, and motor cars. he had imported gowns and modish oes. She had a maid to fluff out her ft gray hair and a special manicure polish her beautifully shaped pink ails. She had everything that money uld buy, and love and happiness as extra measure. She used to talk me once in a while, dainty feet vinging, eyes laughing, lips parted. nd very often we talked about the oubles of the world. "My dear," she ould exclaim in the middle of some igue argument (we always argued iguely) on modern dress, or graft, overworked shopgirls, "I can't alize these things. I like to get your eas, but somehow I can't sympa- ize or understand. Perhaps I'm not uch of a humanitarian. Perhaps m careless, perhaps I don't care. But mehow troubles don't seem to touch e very deeply—they're too far away, o hard to comprehend."

"But sometimes when you see cold, ngry little children on the streets, esn't it hurt?" I asked.

The lady considered just a moment, en:

"Of course I feel badly when I see em," she answered me. "But when get home with my husband and my rlie; when I sit in front of my ackly fireplace, I forget. Trouble akes very little impression on me."

The little lady's sheltered, happy ex- tence was coming to a climax. Not ng afterward, in a single week, her heme of life flew to pieces and the oken bits were strewn on the floor her heart. Her daughter, well, ppy, at the opening of life was killed stantly when her car turned a sharp rner; and the devoted husband had attack of heart failure that swept m out of her loving arms. Money fairs were in a precarious position, and when the house and the beautiful motors had been sold, the little lady found that she had just enough to live on.

I went to see her, and found a wilted little flower face rising from a bunch of black draperies.

"My dear," she told me as soon as the tearful greetings were finished, "I've been a hard, ungrateful old woman, and I've taken money, and friends, and a home for my just due. I've taken a husband and a daughter for granted. I've walked by sorrow with head in the air and never a bit of pity in my heart. I've made myself believe that the wail of the hungry was only the wind at my door. Things are different now. Sorrow has come to my house and it has left me with empty arms but with a better heart—a heart with pity in it. I'm an old woman, dear, and a lonely woman; but, praise God! after this I'll be a sympathetic woman."

There are two poems that I want to show you—although you probably know both of them. The first is by Longfellow, and is called "The Rainy Day." It begins like this:

> The day is dark and cold and dreary,
> It rains, and the wind is never weary.

The second verse runs:

> My life is cold, and dark and dreary

But the third verse says cheerfully:

> Be still, sad heart, and cease repining,
> Behind the clouds is the sun still shining,
> Thy fate is the common fate of all,
> Into each life some rain must fall,
> Some days must be dark and dreary.

The other poem comes from a battered copy-book of my grammar school days. I am quoting a bit that I remember:

> After a day of cloud, and wind, and rain,
> Sometimes the setting sun breaks forth again—
> And, filling all the darksome woods with light,
> Smiles on the fields until they laugh and sing:
> Then like a ruby from the horizon's ring,
> Drops into the night.

Oh, friends of mine, the way cannot always be bright with the sunshine of love and happiness and wealth. Some rain must fall into every life or else the life will be a barren one indeed. The April showers may come with all the suddenness of the end of life, but the sun will only be behind a cloud, and May flowers will spring up in the quickened soil of the heart while a rainbow curves over the sky of your life.

AN OLD-TIME VERSE

OUR readers will be glad to have the following very old verse in form to preserve:

> Time worketh,
> Let me work too;
> Time undoeth,
> Let me do.
> Busy as time my work I ply,
> Till I rest in the rest of eternity.
> Sin worketh,
> Let me work too;
> Sin undoeth,
> Let me do.
> Busy as sin my work I ply,
> Till I rest in the rest of eternity.
> Death worketh,
> Let me work too;
> Death undoeth,
> Let me do.
> Busy as death my work I ply,
> Till I rest in the rest of eternity.

BIBLELAND TABLETS

EAGERLY SOUGHT BY CHRISTIAN HERALD READERS

THE accompanying illustration portrays in a vivid manner the general appearance of the Bibleland Tablets, which are being eagerly sought by CHRISTIAN HERALD readers, thousands of whom are now taking advantage of the opportunity of possessing one of these original tablets, which were made in the time of Asraham, over four thousand years ago. The fact that they are not copies or replicas, but are actually the original tablets covered with cuneiform writing engraved on them by the ancient scribes, gives them a peculiar historical, not to say Biblical, significance. Every one of the tablets is a real bit of evidence of a transaction that occurred in the most ancient Bible city and therefore convincing, to say the least.

ONE OF THE BABYLONIAN TABLETS NOW BEING SENT TO OUR READERS

Many friends, who have earnestly desired to possess one of these tablets but who do not feel sure that they would be able to induce two friends to send in two eight months' subscriptions at $1 each by the end of this month, April 30, have written asking to have a tablet reserved, so that they may have a further opportunity of securing the subscriptions.

Still others have taken the opportunity to extend the work of the Christian Herald Family in new fields by making a present of the two subscriptions to friends who, in their opinion, would be greatly benefited by being thus induced to become members of the Christian Herald Family. The following letter from a pastor in Illinois is illustrative of this spirit:

We shall take great pleasure in helping the writer of the letter to enlarge the influence of the Christian Herald Family in the manner suggested by him, and we have already sent him a splendid Bibleland tablet, written in cuneiform characters by a scribe who lived in the reign of King Dungi, who flourished 2382-2324 B.C. We doubt not that every one of his parishioners will be deeply interested in this tablet. Certainly every member of his Sunday school will find it an object lesson which will draw them into more intimate knowledge of the teachings of the Old Testament.

Accompanying this tablet is a description which will enable our friend to give quite a discourse before his Sunday school on the tablet and the times in which it was made, together with a specimen translation of the tablet itself. These tablets, for the most part, are records of the general accounts of the temple of En-Lil, in the ancient city of Nippur, also known as Calneh, one of Nimrod's cities mentioned in Gen. 10: 10. The following is given as an example of the contents of many of these tablets:

Also accompanying each tablet is this facsimile authentication of the genuineness of these ancient writings by DR. ALBERT T. CLAY, professor of Assyriology at Yale University, New Haven, Conn., who is an authority on all that relates to cuneiform writing:

DEAR SIR: I have examined the Babylonian tablets, and declare them to be absolutely genuine. They were written during the Dynasty of Ur, 2500 B.C., a little prior to the time of Abraham. Very truly yours,

These tablets are not for sale, but THE CHRISTIAN HERALD will give one to each of its friends upon the following condition:

To any present member of the Christian Herald Family who will induce two friends to subscribe for THE CHRISTIAN HERALD for eight months at one dollar each, we will send one of these tablets free of all charge: Provided we receive the subscriptions not later than April 30.

Each tablet will be accompanied by a facsimile autograph of Professor Clay's authentication.

A. C., Berkeley, Calif. There is no passage Scripture to warrant the theory of a second probation, or to justify the statement quoted your letter.

Mrs. D. G., Baldwin City, Kan. By "a believer" is meant one who receives the essenti facts of the Gospel, i. e., the divinity of Christ the truth of his Gospel, his resurrection, and th efficacy of his atonement.

Reader, Zanesville, Ohio. Ordinarily, co tests involving a display of wide book knowledge are helpful and agreeable. There may b cases, however, in which they are conducted fo the purpose of stimulating acquaintance wit trashy, unprofitable literature, and such con tests are a waste of time and may be objectionable otherwise.

M. A. J., Philadelphia, Pa. We are told to to forsake the assembling together (Heb. 10: 25). Even to the aged, there is strength an spiritual refreshing in joining in the words of the Lord in his temple. There are no ar ments made to help defective hearing, and som of these might help you.

G. F. B., Wingfield, Ia. 1. The sin against the Holy Ghost is believed to have been attri uting the works of the Spirit to Satanic agency This is the prevalent opinion among moder commentators. 2. The passage in Matt. 5: 4 manifestly refers not to degrees of excellence but to the kind of excellence which was to di tinguish his disciples and characterize his king dom. They were to work toward the divin perfection, having God steadily in view as th Great Model. 3. The subject is controversi and one that cannot be helped by discussion.

THE YOUNG PEOPLE'S MEETINGS

NOTES ON THE CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR, EPWORTH LEAGUE AND BAPTIST YOUNG PEOPLE'S UNION TOPICS

What Is Faith?*

DO YOU know what a hypothesis is? It is a large word and sounds very difficult. But its meaning is really quite mple. It is something temporarily sumed as true for the sake of argument or for the sake of further discovy. Almost all knowledge is derived this way. The philosopher or scienst says that if this thing is true then mething else must be true, and when has reasoned or observed until he s found the positive fact he goes ck and substantiates his hypothesis that it is no longer assumed and proven, but tried and proven and ue.

For instance, you come to the bank a river which is frozen. You say: f that ice is thick enough I can walk ross." You do not know whether it thick enough, and consequently you not know whether or not you can t across. But if the case is exemely urgent, if you were being pured by enemies, or if a loved one on e other side of the river greatly eded your presence and help, you ght take the risk. You venture upon e ice on the hypothesis that it is ong enough to hold you up. You d that your hypothesis was true, at the ice is strong enough, and ally reach the other side. Then inead of a hypothesis and a problem u have two certainties. You know at the ice is strong enough to hold u and you know that you did get to e other side of the river, because you e there.

Now the Gospel asks us to do no re than this. Our study to-day is e study of faith. And we shall find at faith is nothing more than the anting of such hypotheses, that may er be proved. The Gospel asks us do nothing more unreasonable than required by logic or science or mathatics; or, in fact, by everyday exriences, for we are constantly asming and experimenting and testing. we saw in the case of the icy river at must be crossed.

It is surprising to note how many of e ordinary events and affairs of life e based upon faith. Every time you p aboard a train or car you put th faith. Others have reached the stination safely for which you are rting. You yourself have perhaps ne so at other times. You do not ow that you will reach the place fely this time, but you believe you ll. So you step aboard the car, and e journey is safely made. You reve a check in payment of a debt. u assume that the check is good, and accept it. You turn it into cash, d so your faith is vindicated. Somees, of course, your faith may be splaced, and in this case you could obably never again trust the person o had misled you. All business is gely conducted on faith. Factories d business houses assume that conacts will be faithfully met and that ls will be paid. When faith is misced ruin and panic result.

St. James uses a striking expression. speaks of those who are "rich in th." These are the people whom d has chosen to be his closest friends d to do his best work. Faith is the rrency of the spiritual world. Jesus d to the blind man: "According to ur faith be it unto you." We can t absolutely nowhere on the way her to peace or power except by th. Long ago the psalmist cried: Lord of Hosts, blessed" [or happy] the man that trusteth in thee." If do not trust we are not happy. t while we trust we are happy, no tter how badly things may be go-low rich are you in this currency of th? If anybody told you that in dollars and cents you could be just as rich as you wished to be you would be greatly delighted. But this is true in the spiritual world. You can have just as much faith as you like. You can trust Christ just as far as you choose, and will find him true and faithful at every step. Nobody can stop you from trusting God.

The verse given for our special study, Heb. 11: 1, is rather difficult. In the old version the wording is: "Faith is the substance of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen." The American Revision translates: "Faith is the assurance of things hoped for, the conviction of things not seen." But neither "substance" or "assurance" gives quite the meaning of the Greek word. It is really the word with the same meaning as our friend "hypothesis." Something which stands under. It is the underlying, or perhaps hidden, pathway by which we get to the things we hope for. The word translated "evidence" might be translated "test," as it is in the margin of the American Revision. Here again is the same idea. Certain things are invisible. We believe they exist, and put them to the test, and so we find out. This is what Columbus did in discovering the New World. It was an unseen world, but he believed in it and made the test, and the unseen world became visible and real. It was a world he "hoped for." He accepted the hypothesis, met the conditions, bridged the treacherous seas with his little ships and his mighty faith, and found the Western Hemisphere.

The Hunger for God*

DO YOU know what it is to be genuinely hungry? How many meals did you ever miss one right after the other? We read about the poor, many of whom are constantly underfed; we read the experiences of those who starve, or nearly starve, but it is hard for most of us to get a genuine appreciation of their feelings, because we ourselves have never been genuinely and thoroughly hungry. There have been times, probably, after a long walk, or a hard game, or a hard half day's work, when we have had a thoroughly good appetite. You remember how delicious the food tasted with which you appeased that hunger.

Then there are other kinds of hunger than physical. There are heart hungers—the hunger for freedom, for justice, for love, for home, for native land. You can remember times, perhaps, when you were homesick; when nothing on earth could make you happy but to get home.

Our topic deals with a kind of heart hunger—the hunger for God, implanted in every human soul, the hunger which leads to God himself, and which only God can satisfy. That is a hunger which is like all these other hungers combined. It is hunger for food and love and home. Wandering from God we are hungry and lonesome and homesick.

In our Scripture lesson the psalmist uses the figure of thirst. "As the hart panteth after the water brooks, so panteth my soul after thee, O God." The picture is of a stag, pursued by dogs, perhaps wounded, "panting" for the safety and coolness and life of the clear streams. So the psalmist sang of his thirst for God, his desire for his presence, with its life-giving and life-saving refreshments.

There is a need, above every other need, for our leagues, our churches, our souls, our nation, to feel again this need of God and to be led to his presence. No league or church is doing its true work unless God's presence is made so real that others whose heart hunger and thirst have driven them to your gatherings will find him there.

The a-b-c of Paint

Information for Every House-Owner

WHITE lead is the most widely used white pigment because it is the only one that can be successfully used by itself for exterior painting. It has a natural and lasting affinity for linseed oil. They unite to form a tough and leathery paint skin which anchors firmly in the pores of the wood and keeps out the destroying elements. This film stretches in hot weather and shrinks in cold without breaking.

"Pure linseed oil is the life of paint." It absorbs oxygen from the air and becomes hard and elastic. It does not evaporate, but actually increases in weight as it dries. Other oils strike into the wood, entirely or partially evaporate, or never dry at all.

Carter is the strictly pure white lead of our forefathers, only whiter, finer and more perfectly made, due to an improved modern process. Carter makes the whitest white paint for white houses and, with the addition of the proper tinting colors, most beautiful and durable colored paints.

Carter is known as "The Lead with the Spread" because it has unusual covering and spreading qualities. While there are white leads which cost less by the pound and paints which cost less by the gallon, none cost less per square yard of surface painted except some that would be dear at any price. Instead of cracking and scaling like paints that contain inelastic pigments, pure Carter White Lead and linseed oil paint wears gradually and though soiled by years of exposure, still fills the pores of the wood, resists moisture, prevents decay, and is ready for repainting without burning or scraping.

CARTER
Strictly Pure
White Lead
"The Lead with the Spread"

While the application of paint appears a simple matter, the services of a competent painter are worth more than their mere labor value. He will show you "The Paint Beautiful" portfolio of color schemes and help you to select suitable and durable colors. He will reproduce exactly, any colors you may select. He will adapt his paint to suit the condition of surface to be painted.

To secure a permanently satisfactory job of painting, go to a competent and reliable painter and specify "Carter White Lead and pure linseed oil" when you ask for estimate. The price may be a little lower if you simply specify "paint," but it is pretty certain to cost you more in the long run.

Every house-owner should send for a free copy of "Pure Paint, a Text Book on House Painting." It goes further into the whys and wherefores and tells you how to test paint in the pot or on the building for purity. With it are four color plates of modern houses attractively painted, from "The Paint Beautiful" portfolio.

ANSWERED PRAYERS

A QUESTION has been asked by one or two readers which should be answered publicly rather than in a personal letter, because others may be uncertain about the same matter. When one sends a request it does not commit him to pledge to pray for all the cases presented. The members of the Prayer League are asked to pray daily at noon for the other members and particularly for the granting of the requests announced. But any one is at liberty to send a request without involving any obligation of any kind.

Prayers Answered

Miss R. C. writes from Richmond, Va.: "I want to tell you that God has been very, very good to me, and just to-day the great burden of sorrow and anxiety and trouble about which I wrote you several weeks ago has been lifted. I thank the Christian Herald Family for their prayers in my behalf." Mrs. M. A. T., of Hartford, Conn., writes: "I sent two requests for healing. Both invalids are improving." H. J. B., of Ensenor, N. Y., writes: "I wish to acknowledge that my heavenly Father has heard me many times when things were dark. When I thought this or that was impossible to do God has always found a way." A mother writes from Westmoreland, N. H.: "I wish to acknowledge answered prayer in restoring the health of my beloved daughter. I requested prayers from the Prayer League and Bowery Mission, and praise God for this and all other blessings."

Acknowledgments of answers to prayers have also been received from:

J. K., Selma, Miss.; A Reader, Alaminos, Pangasinan, P. I.; P. J. R., Atlantic Highlands, N. J.; A. H. D., Jersey City, N. J.; N. E. K., Straw Plains, Tenn.; Mrs. K. A. K., East Helena, Mont.; W. L. AMONG THE WORKERS

A REMARKABLY successful union meeting, conducted by Evangelist Henry W. Bromley, is reported from Shinnston, W. V. It is stated that the packing report seven hundred as having turned to the Lord. Among the number were several city officials, teachers and other representative men and women.

HOPKINS, KAN., was the scene of an interesting revival during the latter part of January. The interest was so pronounced that the local paper, the Herald-Visitor-Commercial, gave one issue over to Evangelist Oscar Lowry and the meeting. Well among the children was a special feature of marked success.

CHAUNCEY W. BAILEY of the Committee on Examination and Observance of the Sunday School Day, Philadelphia, Pa., [illegible] tract on the Sunday [illegible] of the church in winning [illegible]. Accompanying it is a [illegible] candles. [illegible] duration of life at ten years, the second at [illegible] years, the third at [illegible] and so on by eights years, when the [illegible] and the candle has burned to the socket. Figures alongside the candles show the length of life that may be expected to follow, based on actuaries' tables, and these represent the probable years of Christian usefulness. Thus, a child won to Christ at ten years is worth more in the extension of the kingdom than many adults confessing Christ at fifty. The object lesson is an excellent one for impressing an audience.

NOTWITHSTANDING THE fire at the Mayesville (S. C.) Industrial Institute last year, which destroyed its main building, the work of the institute is being maintained with admirable courage and energy. Corn and potatoes yielded 1,500 bushels and the cotton crop was a $1,400 one. Enough fodder for the cattle and vegetables for the school are raised. The trustees are endeavoring to raise funds to rebuild the burned building on a larger and better scale, involving a cost of $10,000. Many readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD are already familiar with the excellent work among the colored young people at Mayesville, and have aided the institution in the past. Mr. Charles Jackson, 19 Congress Street, Boston, will furnish all information concerning the work.

It's Ready for You Today—
That Light Lozier Four—$2100

YOU'VE DREAMED—as thousands of others have dreamed, "Some day I'll own a Lozier, too."

THAT DREAM is now possible of realization. This Lozier at $2,100 is within your reach at the price you want to pay.

YOU'VE ASKED many times, as others have asked, "Why doesn't some concern like Lozier build a car of quality and yet at a price within my reach"—or appropriation, which is the same thing.

LOZIER HEARD—heard you and heard thousands of others ask the same thing—for a car bearing the Lozier name-plate as a guarantee of Lozier quality and yet selling "around $2,000."

AND THIS LOZIER FOUR is the response to that demand—that need—that desire. A Four built just as well as Lozier knows how—and what concern knows better or has a better reputation for embodying the best it knows in its product?

A "ONE HUNDRED PER CENT CAR" in every last detail—including the "hidden excellence" for which all Loziers are famous—seating up to seven passengers and yet selling for $2,100.

NOT A "SIX"? BECAUSE we found after going into the matter thoroughly that a Six could not be made at that price—and you said "around $2,000," you will recall. Not at that price without skimping at many points in materials, work and finish. Points you might not notice when the car was new but which Lozier would know all the time—and Lozier standards permit no such practice.

SO IT'S A FOUR, as it should be—as it must be in a car of that passenger capacity and that price and made as it must be made before we will attach that Lozier name-plate.

THIS CAR IS BUILT FOR YOU—assuming now that you are one of that rapidly increasing class of buyers who ask about maintenance cost before asking the price, and who insist on proof—not mere claims or assertions.

YOU'LL WANT TO SEE THIS sensational car, of course. Not to see it—not to know all about it and be able to discuss it intelligently when the talk turns to the latest things automobile, is to argue yourself uninformed on a matter that is considered vital in the automobile trade at this moment.

YOU'LL WANT TO SEE THIS CAR because it is the Four that stemmed the tide of big, cheap sixes—big only in terms of wheel base and bulk and cheap only in first cost.

AND YOU'LL WANT TO SEE IT because this Lozier is designed for you—made to your heart's desire just as if, in response to that desire you have so often expressed, you, instead of Lozier, had made it. You'll want to see this Four.

DETAILS—NOT HERE. Space forbids. Besides, there are some things one cannot adequately describe in cold type. Have to be seen to be fully appreciated and enjoyed. And you will enjoy some of the Perrin features in this Four—features you will find on many other fours—next season. This season they are exclusively Lozier.

CLEVER—YES. SIMPLE—VERILY. And sane and logical and right at every point. Design—like all Loziers, just a little more artistic, just a little more individualistic—just a little more to your taste. But you'll have to see the car in order to appreciate fully.

WE'LL GLADLY SEND you catalog 84, giving full details, and the name of your nearest dealer.

When the World awakes about the first thing its inhabitants do is to breakfast. Nearly a hundred million people in the United States awake hungry, and most adults realize that the comfort and profit of the day depend largely upon the quality of the meal they start with. Children don't think much about it, but the quality of their food is none the less important.

ROYAL Baking Powder
Absolutely Pure

The clever housewife always meets the emergency. She provides for breakfast nourishing food that will tempt the appetite.

Royal Baking Powder makes possible the earliest, quickest breakfast, with delicious biscuit, waffles, muffins and hot-breads.

Foods made with Royal Baking Powder have been declared by expert physiological chemists more digestible than such breakfast breads made in the old-fashioned way or with other raising agencies of the present day. Royal is a pure cream of tartar baking powder, healthful and economical.

A LITTLE ANGEL OF THE MOUNTAINS

fully converted. However, he did not put his philosophy into practice, for without further ceremony he took a long drag brought. The fat squaw and the slim youth watched him in greedy anxiety. He had some consideration for his family, had this "Heap Big Chief," for at last he passed the little that remained to the squaw and she divided it fairly enough with the young man, her son. Fortunately there had not been enough in the bottle to make any of them drunk.

A wigwam, or tepee, was pitched farther back under the trees, where several Indian ponies were tethered to saplings off at one side. By them were huge packs that evidently contained hides. Yellow Feather was a hunter and made his living by killing the wolves, bears, and foxes which then abounded in the mountains, and selling the pelts. The miners who were crowding into the wild country looking for precious metals bought them for a song, traded them into the stores, and at last they reached Denver and thereafter the markets of the East.

After having smoked silently for a while, Yellow Feather arose, and taking the hand of the tired and nodding boy, led him toward the tepee, and bade him get some sleep. It was a welcome invitation, but as the night was warm and pleasant and the tepee looked close and hot, the boy pillowed his head on one of the smaller packs, choosing to lie outside under the palms in the shadow cast by the tepee. He was so tired that he had scarcely closed his eyes before he was sound asleep.

He was awakened later by the noise of harsh voices raised high. While he had slept two travelers had joined the group around the fire, which had been replenished and was now blazing freely. The boy lifted himself to his elbow, and although he was hid from sight by the dark shadows of the tepee, he could see clearly everything that happened. The newcomers were white men. The four men were grouped together on the grass. Scattered between them lay a number of playing cards. Several empty bottles had been cast aside. The squaw was hovering in the background, her every movement expressing her anxiety and alarm. The four men were drunk and all very angry, apparently.

The two white men were miners, or prospectors, from the camp which lay up the trail to which the Indian had referred. They had chanced upon the Indian encampment. Cards had been produced, for the Indians were inveterate gamblers, and then whisky. The Indians were inveterate drinkers, too. They were as children in the hands of their white superiors. It was evident that Yellow Feather and his son had lost everything they possessed, whether fairly or unfairly, if there could have been anything fair in such a situation, as one would ever know. They were sullen and resentful. They protested vehemently at the turn of events. Accusations of cheating were freely hurled between them. One word led to another. Just exactly what was being said, the boy could not make out, as they were all talking and swearing together, but he could see everything that happened plainly.

Finally all four of them rose to their feet, the younger white man suddenly stepped closer to the younger Indian, clutched his fur, and knocked Yellow Feather's son to the ground. As the young man reeled and fell, his assailant kicked him brutally. The eyes of the Indian burned in the firelight. He flashed a revolver from his belt and shot the man who had struck the blow. Almost before he had pressed the trigger, the member of the older race was out of his senses and the sound of the two shots was practically simultaneous. Yellow Feather pitched forward dead. The first white man fell, badly wounded. With a wild scream, the old squaw came running forward.

Yellow Feather's boy, half dazed from the blow, and almost helpless from the kick that followed, reached feebly for his father's Winchester, which lay close to his hand. But the surviving white man was too quick for him. Leaping over his dying comrade, he kicked the gun away from the boy and then turned and kicked him again and again, and this time into utter helplessness. Why he did not kill him out of hand was not yet apparent.

Meanwhile the squaw had sunk down to her knees by her husband, but at the sight of this brutal action she rose to her feet, her purpose possibly to interfere, although she had no weapon. The surviving white man was quite ready for her. He coolly put a bullet from his heavy revolver through her brain, and she pitched down on the body of her dead husband.

"I'm some killer, I am!" exclaimed the survivor, triumphantly thrusting his gun back into its holster as he spoke. "I wonder if there are any more of 'em."

He stared about him, looking in the direction of the tepee. The skin walls of the tent were open and the firelight gave him a clear view of the interior. Fortunately the boy was concealed behind the pack and in the deep shadow. The white man saw the tepee was empty, and as no one appeared, he jumped to the conclusion that he was quite alone.

Little Olaf Tryggvesson was at that moment a curious compound of paralyzing fear and impotent rage. These Indians had been kind to him and had given him food and shelter; the white men had been the aggressors, and the surviving man had killed the woman and brutally kicked the helpless youth. The boy lay as still as death, scarcely daring to breathe; yet he burned to rush out and attack the murderer. The tepee was not so far from the fire but that he could now hear everything that was said as well as see everything that was done.

"I'm some killer," repeated the drunken white man with hideous complacence, "'specially when it comes to Injuns. I wish they hadn't got poor old Bud, though."

He bent over the form of his companion. The man had plunged down on his face after Yellow Feather shot him. He turned him on his back, and the pain or the motion brought back a glimmer of consciousness.

"I'm done for—pard," whispered the dying man.

"I guess that's so," said the first. "Too bad, Bud; I got two of 'em, though,"—he lifted his revolver again—"an' I'll finish the other one."

"No," said the dying man, "you'd better have him—"

What he had intended to say no one would ever know. For those were his last words. Little Olaf hoped that mercy had been in his mind. The survivor, however, had no such idea, apparently.

"That'll be it," he said triumphantly, quite confident apparently of what his friend would have said. "I'll haul him up on one of these yere ponies, take him to the camp, we'll try him due an' proper an' swing him. These Injuns hates like p'ison to be hung, an' it'll be an example to the rest of 'em when they finds two peaceable gents a travelin' along the trail on their own business, to let 'em alone in the future. I'll take Bud, too. That'll be evidence enough to hang him. Them furs will come in handy, too."

He turned away from the fire toward the ponies, brought them down one by one, strapped the dead body of his companion upon one rebellious pony, lashed the surviving Indian youth, stoically silent under all this mistreatment, until he was as helpless as a log, and fastened him to another pony.

NEW LIFE

After one suffers for months from acid dyspepsia, sour stomach, and then finds the remedy is in getting the right kind of food, it is something to speak about.

A N. Y. lady and her young son had such an experience and she wants others to know how to get relief. She writes:

"For about fifteen months my little boy and myself had suffered with sour stomach. We were unable to retain much of anything we ate.

"After suffering in this way for so long I decided to consult a specialist in stomach diseases. Instead of prescribing drugs, he put us both on Grape-Nuts and we began to improve immediately.

"It was the key to a new life. I found we had been eating too much heavy food which we could not digest. In a few weeks after commencing Grape-Nuts, I was able to do my house work. I wake in the morning with a clear head and feel rested and have no sour stomach. My boy sleeps well and wakes with a laugh.

"We have regained our lost weight and continue to eat Grape-Nuts for both the morning and evening meals. We are well and happy and owe it to Grape-Nuts."

CHURCH AND STATE SEPARATE

Catholic Schools and Public Funds

AT THE meeting of the Representative Council of Newport, held last evening, a petition in behalf of the three [Catholic] parochial schools of the city, asking for the appropriation of $11,610 for the expenses of maintenance during the next year, was laid on the table. This action of the council came after a lively discussion which ended in the adoption of the opinion of City Solicitor Jeremiah A. Sullivan, in which he stated that it was impossible under the law for the council to act on the petition as presented by the three clergymen and the trustees of the parish schools, asking for the appropriation.

Mr. Sullivan pointed out that such an appropriation, if granted, would be illegal, as the Representative Council would be acting without authority. "This petition is not properly framed," said Mr. Sullivan; "a petition asking the Representative Council to request authority from the State legislature to grant such an appropriation would have been the proper procedure."

The petition, which itemized the needs of the three schools and asked that the amount of $11,610 be appropriated and apportioned among the schools at the rate of $10 per capita, was signed by Rev. William B. Meehan, pastor of St. Mary's; E. A. Higney, pastor of St. Joseph's; Martin F. Reddy, pastor of St. Augustine's, and the trustees of the three schools and churches, A. K. Quinn, W. J. McCormick, M. F. Shea, Bartholomew Fogarty, Patrick Costello and Alexander R. Hanley.

When the petition was read by Chairman W. R. Harvey, a motion to table was made by J. J. Peckham, and a request for roll call on the motion immediately followed. F. O. Garrettson asked for an opinion on the legality of the main question, and after a vote, which resulted in a victory for Mr. Garrettson's motion, 87 to 84, City Solicitor Sullivan gave the above opinion and the motion to table was again made and carried.—From the Providence Journal, March 13, 1914.

Time for Our Country to Wake Up

IN ORDER to disarm the foe of our schools, our government and our liberty, we must give up certain practices we ourselves are guilty of. That foe is the Romish Church. Her "toleration" is limited only by her lack of power to persecute. She is the best organized of any sect or society in this country. Her cardinals and other priests soften matters to deceive us.

The object of Rome in this country is to gain power, and her strides in this direction are alarming. Our forefathers intended this country to be a home for all people of all nations and of all religious faiths—not a Baptist country, or a Methodist country, or a Romish country. The effort now is being made to make our beloved land Romish, and prospects are that it will be done unless we Americans wake up and take notice. It was originally intended that we have a complete separation of church and state. As long as we Protestants keep our hands in the public treasury, State and national, we cannot prevent Rome doing the same thing. It is not honest to have our ministers draw pay as officers in army and navy and not be competent to do the duties of such officers.

It is not honest or just that the churches should be permitted to accumulate so much wealth to go untaxed. In many ways we are dishonestly taking public money to further our churches, each for itself, and Rome does not care how she gets it. As of old, "the end justifies the means." It is time for the people of this country to wake up.

Every religious law is one to help Rome. Many Protestants are unknowingly forging their own fetters and those of coming generations. Our only safety is to have a complete separation of religion and government. When our people once are awakened and see the danger that threatens us, the upheaval will not be a small one.

Then he loaded the bundles of furs upon the remaining animals, and leaving Yellow Feather, his squaw and the tepee and the wailing dogs to their own devices, he mounted his own horse, leading that of his companion, and drove the whole bunch of ponies up the trail. They could only go one way, and so long as he was in the rear he had command of the party.

Little Olaf, suddenly introduced to this terrible but rather commonplace tragedy of the frontier, waited until man, prisoner, dead body, and ponies had disappeared up the moonlit trail. Then he crept tremblingly from the shadow of the tepee and made his way slowly to the two remaining tenants of the forest glade.

The boy knew but little of death. His experience had been limited to the passing of his father and his mother, which had not been like this; but even the most inexperienced boy could recognize that there was no more life left in Yellow Feather or in his poor squaw. By tugging mightily at the latter, the small boy managed to roll the heavier woman's body to the side of her husband. He could do no more. He was absolutely helpless. Indeed, he had no idea what to do with himself, much less with them.

As he stood staring at them, a strange, wild, weird cry rose from the wood beyond and echoed and re-echoed through the cañon. It was the howl of a timber wolf, scenting blood from afar The mongrel Indian dogs barked in terror and ran. The sound put a new fear in the boy's shaken heart. The murderer had taken all of the weapons belonging to the Indians, but if he had left them, little Olaf would not have known how to use them. His only safety was flight. He leaped to the trail and turned and ran blindly along it.

Fate, providence, the justice of God, determined his course, for he himself was quite incapable of choice. His nerves had been so shaken that he had lost all command of himself. His steps turned in the direction taken by the murderer and the horses, and as fast as his young legs could carry him he flew up the cañon. He had no idea what time it was; he had no ideas of any sort. He must only run, run madly from that scene of slaughter, from the long, fearful howls of the wolves.

The night before he had slept comfortably and soundly in the sleeping car. Life had been full of promise and hope. He had been glad at the thought that he was going back to God's open country, to a farm, that kind people would receive him, that he would have a home once more where the sky would be something more than a little rift of blue seen between the towering walls of a city street. And in less than one short day he had experienced the desolation of abandonment, the fear of death, the touch of hospitality, human kindness, welcome food after threatened starvation. He had slept peacefully again beneath the stars, only to be awakened to see the end of the drama of greed and drink, and revenge and murder. And now he was flying along the moonlit road with terror in his soul. Fate had plunged him into such experiences as he had never dreamed of and as he could scarcely sustain.

ANSWERS TO FINANCIAL QUERIES

MRS. R. M. L., NEW YORK. We see nothing attractive in Colorado and Southern first preferred stock as a woman's investment.

R. H. V., MINNESOTA. The Knickerbocker Trust & Safe Co., New York, has disappeared from the Street Directory and cannot be found. We are afraid you have made a bad investment.

K. M. A., PENNSYLVANIA. The United States Annuity Society makes a satisfactory report of its financial condition, and while the business is practically small it seems sound.

F. R. O., MICHIGAN. Central Arkansas and Eastern Railway Company first mortgage 5 per cent. gold bonds at 97½ to yield 5.18 per cent. are regarded as an attractive investment.

L. W., NEW YORK. Your $400 may be divided in your $500 Twin State Gas & Electric Company debentures 6 per cent. gold secured convertible gold notes, due October 1, 1914. These notes are convertible at 110 into Preferred and are offered to net 5½ per cent.

E. G., CALIFORNIA. Western Pacific Railway 5s of 1946 are not in the investment class. These bonds are now selling at 89 cents on the dollar, whereas in 1913 they sold at 96. Western Pacific, like all the other Coast roads, has been a source of loss for ill-advised investors.

A. C. G., WISCONSIN. We do not report on fraternal insurance and cannot aid in obtaining a loan on your policy in the Brotherhood of American Yeomen. Fraternal insurance is sometimes sold at cost, but the interest must due in time. A policy in an old-line company carrying many privileges and is worth the added cost.

L. B. I., VIRGINIA. American Gasoline shares stock is listed on the Washington Stock Exchange only. The treasurer advises us that 1913 was the company's most successful year, and a large cash surplus now exists. Dividends may be resumed this year. You are not likely to gain by selling your shares now.

A. W. G., MARYLAND. The Huntington Land and Improvement Company (California) 6 per cent. annual gold bonds are issued $500 and other amounts, as well as $1,000 denominations. We believe that these investments are essentially 6 per cent. investments. Upon request we will forward the latest of the letters from which the bonds may be purchased.

M. W. A., MARYLAND. The South American Copper Company, with mine properties located at Lindsberry, N. M., has been reorganized into the Amalgamation Mining Company, J. B. Johnston, Bellefonte, Pa., president. The reorganization took place about two months ago. The stock was not speculative at purchase. We doubt if a market for your shares will be found.

E. H., MARYLAND. Your Georgia and Alabama Railroad 7 per cent. All Local first mortgage 6 per cent. Railway consolidated 4½ per cent. and Macon, Dublin and Savannah Railroad first mortgage 5 per cent. bonds are not listed on the Baltimore Stock Exchange and, we believe, may be classified as very high-class issues. Consult responsible local Stock-selling Concerns & Co., Baltimore, Md.

J. P. C., NEW JERSEY. The Christian Herald cannot undertake to report on land values. We suggest that before purchasing you submit to a local expert. We cannot undertake to act as agent for land deals but do report and recommend. If local agents have a personal interest in selling land they will be very glad to give you the information you desire. Before purchasing land you should also consult the Secretary of Agriculture, Washington, D. C., who will be glad to send you valuable information bearing upon the subject. Any land deal should be a business proposition.

C. W. W., MICHIGAN. We believe the Prudential Life Insurance Company has a department of new insurance agents. With the information at hand we cannot recommend the Mutual Life of New York Life Insurance Company. Investigate a good fraternal insurance company that gives good protection and has a reputation for the prompt payment of claims. Fraternal insurance is sometimes sold at cost, but the interest must due in time. A policy in an old-line company carrying many privileges and is worth the added cost.

R. E. L., NEW JERSEY. The government has a supervision of some of the Steamship companies entering inland and has also jurisdiction over the Panama Canal Zone. Any such complaints should be addressed to the Interstate Commerce Commission, Washington, D. C., which will be glad to investigate.

How to Make The Best Investment

The prices of standard stocks and bonds are as sensitive to the laws of supply and demand and to business conditions as the prices of any commodities which are actively traded.

Those who make their investments at times when it is particularly advantageous to make them, are not only able to obtain very attractive prices but, in addition, incomes which are larger than may ordinarily be had.

THE CHURCH A LEGISLATIVE FORCE?

ontrary to individual religion, but it nites to it the social."

Dissatisfaction with the doctrinal reaching and the insistence on the old redal declarations of the churches is requently voiced in our day. Roman atholics view this as one of the signs f decadent Protestantism. As a fact, owever, it is the preaching of the old octrines of Protestantism that fills hurches and raises congregations hich are a power in their community ven in our day. We are aware indeed hat there is widespread indifference matters religious throughout the ountry.

But we are also well assured that very respectable body of men and omen are still profoundly interested such dogmas as the plenary inspira- on of the Bible, the divine and hu- an natures united in one person in esus Christ, the redemption by the on of God through his fulfilment of he law in our stead and through his uffering and death in our stead, orig- al sin in its totality and universality, he justification of the sinner by grace hrough faith in the atonement of hrist, the saving power of the Gospel, he resurrection of the dead, a just tribution for final unbelief, and eaven as the bright goal of the be- ever's hope. It is too sweeping an ssertion to say that church people in eneral have lost their interest in the eeds, understood in their old mean- g. But the league evidently has. e take it that the league thinks it a reater feat of religiousness to estab- sh municipal or State markets for ountry produce than to teach men hat there are three distinct persons one undivided and indivisible God- ead; a greater feat to inaugurate dustrial courts for the speedy de- sion of minor industrial disputes an to proclaim the divine law of uffering wrong, etc.

The Council of Each Church

The pessimism of the league in re- ard to the churches crops out for the ird time in the following remark: The church to-day is not wholly free. n Englishman has called the church he Captive City of God.' A church eds money. Missionary work needs oney. Institutional work needs oney. Therefore the church, to a nsiderable extent, has fallen into the nds of those who have money. Not any poor men are elected on our stries or church committees, or are nt as delegates to our conventions. ne church has largely chosen the rich ings of the world and the strong ings of the world and the things hich seem mighty, and has come un- r the power of Mammon. But there a revolt in the church to make it gain the Carpenter's church, and for is revolt the league stands." This aim of the league requires exhaust- e statistics showing the actual num- r of wealthy men in the churches d the exact extent of their influence fore it can be allowed. An exact unt, we are persuaded, would show mparatively few domineering rich en in the churches, while it would ing out the less known fact that ere are not a few consecrated men wealth who are engaged in the urch's work in a modest way, not cting their left hand know what their ght hand doeth. But the over- nelming majority of the members of e churches are from the ranks of e middle class and the poor, and it the well-known solidarity of these ople that ultimately determines all atters of importance in the churches.

Real Business of the Church

It is a great pity that the organi- tion of the league implies this dis- ust in the sincerity of the members the church, the usefulness of much at is in the Bible and the old creeds, d the independence of the members the churches. We believe that the wer of the churches is far greater an the league admits. Their influ- ence is exerted secretly, silently, through teaching, testimony, and character-building. The business of the Christian Church is with the spirits of men, their thinking and their willing. If she succeeds in bringing these under the governing influence of the Spirit of God, she has achieved her one great mission among men. If the church descends into the political arena, if her members dissipate their spiritual strength in affairs of the state, they will find in the end that they have destroyed one of the greatest supports and safeguards of the social interest of the human race. To do her best work, the church must stay out of politics.

The league is also pessimistic in its view of our statesmen and their work of legislation. It points to the irrelevancy of many laws that are passed, to the selfishness that is back of other laws, to the injustice that is wrought by still others. Again we feel that this judgment is not fair. It is one-sided. We have many good statesmen and very good laws. We shall never reach that stage in our civil status where everybody is perfectly satisfied with what everybody else does. We can, with all our striving, expect to reach no better result than this: that we furnish the greatest amount of good to the greatest possible number, and that, when we have made mistakes and blunders in legislation, we correct them. The league will not get any further, if it gets that far. This world is not run in its civil affairs by infallible laws.

Right Relation of Church and State

The league may make an impression in certain circles with a statement like this: "Separation of church and state is well, but we have divorced God and politics, God and business, God and the social life. We have written over the church door 'Give up all politics, all ye that enter here,' and over the caucus 'Give up all religion, all ye that enter here.'" This is but a half-truth. Church and state must be kept strictly separate, which, by the way, is not such an easy thing at all as many imagine. Neither of the two must be permitted to mingle in the affairs of the other. But each can and must support the other.

The business of a Christian patriot is to see that his church and her members stand on the old Bible and the old creeds, and to see that they live Gospel lives as our fathers did, and that he and his fellow citizens elect good men as their lawmakers and law executors. We have not lost faith in either the Bible or the Constitution, the church members or the statesmen of our country. We have not exhausted their power for good. We need no organization like the league, that is neither church nor state, but a strange mixture of both, and that will not benefit us in our spiritual nor in our secular interests.

LUXEBERRY WHITE ENAMEL

To the woman of taste the white enameled room makes a strong appeal. She delights in its atmosphere of cheery, dainty brightness. Not only in her boudoir, bedrooms and bathroom, but in the living rooms as well.

Luxeberry White Enamel produces a rich, deep, snow-white effect unequaled by any other finish. A Luxeberry surface is smooth, satiny and durable, and may be left either a soft dull, or brilliant as the finest porcelain.

Luxeberry White Enamel won't turn yellow, chip or crack, and cleans in a jiffy with soap and water.

In snow-white rooms the natural wood floors should be protected and beautified by the finest floor varnish. Liquid Granite has all the toughness its name implies. It brings out the beauty of the wood, multiplying its attractiveness. Liquid Granite floors have a durable elastic surface that withstands the wear of grown-up feet and the romp of playing children—a surface you can wash without fear of turning it white—even boiling water has no harmful effect.

Berry Brothers' Varnishes have been the first choice of home owners, architects and decorators for over fifty years. Ask your dealer about them or write us direct for varnish information of special interest to home owners.

Maxwell "25"

The Maxwell "25" is a powerful automobile—a real, full-grown automobile—a handsome stream-line automobile, and it looks and acts like an automobile of three times the price.

The Maxwell "25" has absolutely every essential quality, and absolutely every necessary feature found in the very highest priced cars.

In actual economy of operation, in real ability to keep out of the repair shop, it not only equals, but surpasses most cars which cost five times its price.

The Maxwell "25" weighs 1,685 pounds. A wonderful "tire economy car." Has 30-in. by 3½-in. tires, front and rear, permitting rear tires to be shifted to front wheels to give extra long service.

The motor is cast en bloc; 3⅝-in. bore, 4½ in. stroke; adjustable valves completely inclosed. Extra large crank shaft bearings of bronze with babbit lining.

Motor water cooled, will not overheat.

More Power for Its Weight Than All Higher Priced Cars

The Maxwell "25" has a real 25 horse-power motor—which develops more power in proportion to the weight of the car than the engines of most higher priced cars.

The Maxwell "25" can pass most any car on hills "in high."—It is a phenomenal hill climber.

Costly High Tension Magneto—Like Highest Priced Cars

The Maxwell "25" has a Simms high-tension magneto, which always delivers the spark direct to the spark plugs in correct time. This means no coils—no make-shift master vibrators—no mechanism that requires frequent delicate adjustments. The magneto works right, and stays right.

Transmission—4 Speed Selective Sliding Gear, Center Control

The Maxwell "25" has a 4-speed selective type transmission, 3 speeds forward and 1 reverse. The main shaft has Hyatt Roller Bearings at front end—bronze bushing babbit lined at rear. Adjustable cone clutch is lined with motobestos. It takes hold firmly without sudden gripping, and without undue noise.

Control—Brakes of Extra Strength

The Maxwell "25" has left-side, 16 in. steering wheel. There is plenty of room for a big man to drive without being cramped. Spark and throttle control rods are inclosed in steering column. There is a foot throttle or accelerating pedal with foot rest. Transmission Control Lever is in center of car and is operated by the right hand.

The service brake is contracting and the emergency brake expanding. They act on 12½-in. brake drums bolted to rear wheels.

Unfailing, Economical, Springless Atomizer Type Carburetor

The Maxwell "25" has a Zephyr Carburetor — Atomizer Type. This gives unusual high mileage per gallon of gasoline without constant carburetor trouble. Starts and runs right in any weather, and controlled from the dash.

Lubrication—Improved Splash System With Oil Saving Pump

The Maxwell "25" has splash lubrication with a sturdy, slow-moving plunger pump. This saves oil.

Capacity—A Real 5-Passenger Car of Comfort

The Maxwell "25" is a real 5-passenger car. It carries 5 grown people comfortably. There is plenty of leg room.

Phenomenal and Easy Riding Qualities

The Maxwell "25" has 4 semi-elliptic type springs. The front springs are 32 inches long. The rear springs are 40 inches long, fixed at front; shackled at rear, and mounted on a rocking seat. Absolutely no expensive shock absorbers or auxiliary springs are needed.

Fullest Equipment—Complete and of Unusual Quality

The Maxwell "25" has a perfectly fitted top with envelope. The top has the famous "Jiffy Curtains," which fold back in the top and can be let down in an instant without getting out of car.

Full equipment of handsome lamps, Prest-o-lite tank, full set of tools, jack, pump, Stewart speedometer, etc. A strong, good-looking tire carrier comes on the back of the car.

You have no extras to buy. Everything comes with the car.

See the Maxwell dealer in your town at once, and look at this wonderful, complete car. If there is no Maxwell dealer near you, write for interesting, illustrated, descriptive catalogue.

CONGRESS ACTS ON MEXICO

APRIL 20 will hereafter be known as one of the memorable days in American history. At 3 o'clock in the afternoon, both Houses of Congress met to hear the special message of President Wilson on the Mexican situation, and to take such action as was necessary for the purpose of compelling reparation for the insults offered by the Huerta government to our flag. Before the President began his speech, Chaplain Couden made a brief prayer, in which he asked that wisdom, courage and fortitude might be imparted to the President, his advisers, and Congress, "that they may act in accordance with the highest conceptions of truth and justice and right, so that civilization may be advanced and the things which make for peace and righteousness may progress." In a clear voice, the President began his message. He said in substance:

"On the 9th of April a paymaster of the U. S. S. Dolphin landed at the Iturbide bridge, Tampico, with a whaleboat and boat's crew to take off certain supplies, and, while engaged in loading the boat, was arrested by an officer and squad of men of the army of General Huerta. Neither the paymaster nor any one of the boat's crew was armed. Two of the men were in the boat, and were obliged to leave it and submit to be taken into custody, notwithstanding the fact that the boat carried, both at her bow and at her stern, the flag of the United States.

"Within an hour and a half from the time of the arrest orders were received from the commander of the Huertista forces at Tampico for the release of the men. The release was followed by apologies from the commander and later by an expression of regret by General Huerta himself. Admiral Mayo regarded the arrest as so serious an affront that he demanded that the flag of the United States be saluted with special ceremony by the military commander of the port.

"The incident cannot be regarded as a trivial one, especially as two of the men arrested were taken from the boat itself—that is to say, from the territory of the United States. Unfortunately, it was not an isolated case. A series of incidents have occurred which cannot but create the impression that the representatives of General Huerta were willing to go out of their way to show disregard for the dignity and rights of this government, and felt perfectly safe in doing what they pleased. So far as I can learn, such wrongs and annoyances have been suffered to occur only against representatives of the United States.

"It was necessary that the apologies of General Huerta and his representatives should be such as to attract the attention of the whole population to their significance, and such as to impress upon General Huerta himself the necessity of seeing to it that no further occasion for explanations and professed regrets should arise.

"I, therefore, felt it my duty to sustain Admiral Mayo in the whole of his demand, and to insist that the flag of the United States should be saluted in such a way as to indicate a new spirit and attitude on the part of the Huertistas.

"Such a salute General Huerta has refused, and I have come to ask your approval and support in the course I now purpose to pursue.

"This Government can, I earnestly hope, in no circumstances be forced into war with the people of Mexico. General Huerta has set his power up in the city of Mexico without right and by methods for which there can be no justification. Only part of the country is under his control.

"The present situation need have none of the grave complications of interference if we deal with it promptly, firmly and wisely.

"I therefore come to ask your approval that I should use the armed forces of the United States in such ways and to such an extent as may be necessary to obtain from General Huerta and his adherents the fullest recognition of the rights and dignity of the United States, even amid the distressing conditions now unhappily obtaining in Mexico."

As the President concluded, Congress broke into applause, which soon subsided, however.

A stormy session of the House of Representatives, lasting nearly four and a half hours, followed the withdrawal of the Senators. A resolution drawn by Representative Henry D. Flood, of Virginia, chairman of the Foreign Affairs Committee, was introduced. It read as follows:

"Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives in Congress assembled, That the President of the United States is justified in the employment of armed forces of the United States to enforce demands made upon Victoriano Huerta for unequivocal amends to the Government of the United States for affronts and indignities committed against this government by Huerta and his representatives."

During the debate in the House on this resolution, there was a good deal of free criticism of its language as being in the nature of "personal resentment of Huerta," but it was evident from the first that it would be adopted. The House was in the patriotic mood, and would stand by the President. Substitutes were offered and voted down, and at ten o'clock a final vote was reached, the resolution passing by 337 to 37.

The Senate, which had taken a recess early in the evening to await the action of the House, reassembled at ten minutes past midnight to consider the resolution. The Committee on Foreign Relations submitted a substitute, in which the personality of Huerta was wholly eliminated, and to this Senator Lodge offered a preamble reciting the lawless and anarchical conditions in Mexico and the outrages on American citizens. Without taking any action on the resolution, the Senate adjourned until noon of the same day, Tuesday, when this resolution was submitted:

"In view of the facts presented by the President of the United States in his address delivered to the Congress in joint session the 20th day of April, 1914, in regard to certain affronts and indignities committed against the United States in Mexico, be it

"Resolved, That the President is justified in the employment of the armed forces of the United States to enforce his demands for unequivocal amends for affronts and indignities committed against the United States; be it further

"Resolved, That the United States disclaims any hostility to the Mexican people, or any purpose to make war upon them."

One of the significant events of Monday was the introduction in the Senate of a bill providing for the appropriation of $50,000,000, which the President is authorized to spend at discretion "for the national defense." This is identical, both in language and amount, with the famous measure passed by Congress during President McKinley's administration, before our operations in Cuba.

Huerta had been given until the previous evening (Sunday) at six o'clock, to make his final answer to our demand for a salute of the dishonored flag, and had met the last request for an unconditional salute with a blunt refusal.

It is generally believed in official circles in Washington that what are known in international law as "measures short of war," and not involving any formal declaration, will be taken, which will include the seizure of the ports of Tampico and Vera Cruz and possibly the two Mexican gunboats; the seizure of the railroad to a point west of Vera Cruz for the purpose of preventing military supplies from reaching the capital, and probably the blockading of other Mexican ports, east and west.

An order was issued for the seizure, after the goods had been landed and placed in the custom house at Vera Cruz, of 10,000 rifles and 15,000,000 cartridges reported to be aboard the German liner Ypiranga for Huerta. This method of dealing with the first case of the kind would obviate the necessity of stopping the steamship, and avoid complications.

To inform our readers of the events antecedent to the crisis, and leading up to his ultimatum, it should be stated that President Wilson felt compelled to deal firmly with the de facto government

SCOTLAND STIRRED BY REVIVALS

BY REV. WILLIAM H. ROBERTS, D.D.

AS CHAIRMAN of the sub-committee on co-operation with churches of the Presbyterian family of the Evangelistic Committee of the Presbyterian General Assembly, it is with deep interest that I announce the general results of the Chapman-Alexander mission in Scotland during the past six months. The first meeting was held at Glasgow, beginning in October, 1913, and continued for eight weeks. The second was held in Edinburgh, Scotland, beginning January 16, 1914, and continuing until the beginning of March. The third was held in Glasgow for three weeks, and ended early in April. All the meetings were in charge of local committees of arrangements, composed of leading ministers and laymen, and had the co-operation of the churches of Scotland.

It was my privilege to be present at the opening meeting in Edinburgh. All the ministers of Edinburgh and vicinity connected with Christian churches were invited to be present in the smaller hall of the United Free Church Assembly at 3 P.M. on January 16. More than 400 were in attendance, and the presiding officer was Principal Whyte of New College, and pastor of Free St. George's Church. In the evening the ministers and officials of the churches met in the large hall of the United Free Church Assembly, and more than 2,000 were present, crowding the hall to its limit. The presiding officer was the Rev. Dr. George Wilson, pastor of St. Michael's Church of the Church of Scotland. Each meeting was characterized by deep earnestness.

The general evangelistic meetings have been attended under the guidance of the Holy Spirit with the largest success. The mission in Glasgow resulted in the professed conversion of more than 8,000 persons, and the second mission largely increased this number. The meetings in Edinburgh resulted in more than 10,000 conversions, and the limit of the results has not as yet been reached.

After laboring a few days in Edinburgh, Dr. Chapman was threatened with serious heart trouble, and was obliged to rest for a few days. During this interval, the moderator of the Assembly of the Church of Scotland, the Very Rev. Wallace Williamson, D.D., the Rev. Dr. Alexander Whyte of New College, the Rev. Dr. George Wilson, and others took his place for sermons and addresses. Dr. Chapman returned to his work with added zeal, and continued to the close. He returns to the United States the last of April.

As to the general character of the work, it is sufficient to know that men like Principal Whyte, Dr. George Wilson, Sir Alexander Simpson, Lord Balfour, Mr. Alexander Sloan, Mr. R. H. Hunter, and many others united in the declaration that Scotland has been moved spiritually as it has not been since the visit of Moody. There are those who say that the country has not been moved in like manner since the days of George Whitefield. One important outcome of the meetings is the general request for the return of the Chapman-Alexander mission in Scotland in the autumn of the present year.

The prayers of God's people in all the churches are asked for increasing blessing upon the work in Scotland, that this land, so prominent through the generations in connection with the progress of the kingdom of God in the earth, may itself experience a spiritual uplift which shall greatly add to its present power in religious things, and so influence other countries to added zeal in the winning of the world to Christ.

THE WAR FLURRY AT TAMPICO

in Mexico, by a series of deliberate affronts to the American Government, culminating in this open insult to the American uniform and flag. The fact that the Tampico incident might in itself be reasonably explained away does not therefore reduce the occurrence to a merely local misunderstanding. The administration determined that the existing government in Mexico should once for all adopt a right attitude toward the American Government and signify its change of heart by a salute to the Stars and Stripes, fired from a Mexican Federal fort.

The Mexican president soon referred the American demands to his congress, and observers presumably in a position to know predicted that he would be sustained in his refusal to comply. It was suggested that Huerta was playing a desperate political game, and hoped by his course either to increase his own prestige or unite all factions in Mexico against a common enemy.

Mexico has the following important seaports: On the Gulf of Mexico, Tampico, then Vera Cruz and then Puerto Mexico; on the Pacific, across the southern end of Mexico from the last named town, Salina Cruz, then Acapulco, and farthest north Mazatlan. Should Huerta persist in his refusal to order the required salute, these ports would be blockaded and probably occupied by armed American forces. All commerce would thus be denied entrance to Mexico, depriving the government of the revenues from those ports and practically paralyzing the railroad traffic of the country. None of these seaports is fortified in the modern sense, which is of no moment, however, as under the rules of civilized warfare a bombardment would be unlikely.

The mobilization of the American fleet on the Atlantic coast of Mexico immediately began, our battleships speeding toward Tampico from Hampton Roads, from New York, from New Orleans, from Santo Domingo, and from Boston; the torpedo boats at Pensacola, Fla., stood ready to proceed. The fleet sailed under command of Rear-Admiral Charles J. Badger. Orders were also quickly issued to Rear-Admiral Thomas B. Howard, commanding the Pacific fleet, to despatch an adequate number of battleships and cruisers to the Pacific ports named.

The total complement of men upon the Atlantic vessels ordered to Mexico approximates 20,000 men, 5,000 of whom are marines available as a landing force equipped for field service. The following battleships are included in the fleet: Arkansas, flagship of Admiral Badger; Florida, flagship of Admiral Fletcher; Connecticut, flagship of Admiral Mayo; Louisiana, flagship of Admiral Beatty; Utah, New Hampshire, Michigan, Vermont, New Jersey and South Carolina, also the cruisers Chester, Dolphin, San Francisco, Des Moines, Prairie and Hancock. Lesser vessels, colliers and ambulances are also in the fleet. The van of the fleet was expected to reach Tampico about April 22, and with all the vessels ordered there assembled, the United States would have the largest and most effective naval force it has ever mobilized against a foreign country, exceeding by nearly two to one in respect of men, guns and tonnage the blockading fleet at Santiago. Preparations to support the fleet in any contingency by land maneuvers were also reported. Regular troops along the Mexican border were to be augmented by militia. There are at present approximately 18,000 soldiers of the regular army available near the Rio Grande. The Texas Rangers are said to be spoiling for an opportunity to punish their troublesome neighbors for many outrages committed during this long-drawn-out civil war. It is indignantly pointed out by critics of the President's policy of watchful waiting, that American lives have been taken and millions of dollars of American property destroyed without rebuke, whereas a series of seemingly petty insults to uniformed Americans compose sufficient grounds for a hostile movement by the entire navy of the nation and preparations for activities on land. The Texas Rangers have chafed under the situation, and at one moment took matters into their own hands by crossing the border and recovering the body of an American who had been murdered on Mexican soil. Captain J. J. Saunders was said to have commanded that expedition.

MEXICAN REFUGEE FAMILY AT CAMP BLISS

Much speculation is indulged in as to the effect of such a move by the United States upon the Constitutionalists under Carranza and Villa. It was the common impression that the rebel army would speedily join forces with the Federals to defend the honor of their country.

The considerable body of Federal sympathizers sojourning at the United States military post, Camp Bliss, might be disposed to make trouble should they feel the call to arms from a united country, but the soldiers on guard there have that contingent of fighters well in hand.

To the relief of the public and the administration President Huerta finally agreed to salute the Stars and Stripes in token of complete repudiation of and regret for the Tampico affront. It was announced that in keeping with the custom of nations, the salute would be returned by an American battleship, gun for gun. With the adequate punishment of the offending officer at Tampico, the incident would be closed. No halt was called in the administration program, however, pending the peaceable conclusion of the matter.

The administration program of action if Huerta remained obdurate was as follows: Vera Cruz and Tampico to be seized, and ports on the west coast of Mexico occupied, and a "peaceful blockade" of both coasts established to continue until the Mexican Government inflicted adequate punishment upon the Federal army officer who made the arrests at Tampico and a national salute of twenty-one guns had been fired by a Mexican fort to the United States flag. Should circumstances render immediate forceful action necessary, Admiral Badger could follow his own course without waiting for instructions from Washington. There would be no declaration of war. The occupation of Mexican ports would cease when American honor had been satisfied through compliance with the President's demands, unless Congress should determine otherwise.

The Constitutionalists have temporarily suspended hostilities about Tampico, and it is also rumored that the Federals may evacuate the city, in which event the Constitutionalists would take possession. Villa has administered a severe repulse to the Federals in the region between Torreon and Saltillo, and his complete occupation of the railroad line leading to the coast is now predicted. The whole progress of the war may be affected by the Tampico affair.

"MOTHER BIRD" AND HER LIFE WORK

BY MARGARET E. SANGSTER, JR.

VERY frail and delicate, with eyes closed tightly and snowy hair lost in the whiteness of her pillow, an aged woman lies all unconscious of the spring sunshine, and the awakening flowers, and the murmuring breeze. Eighty-two years have passed over her head; eighty-two years, most of them filled with the joy of working, and helping, and loving, in the name of the Master. Eighty-two years filled with the wonderful spirit of a gentle soul. And now she is lying there, her hands folded, her task ended, her voice forever silent.

Some time ago I visited the Bowery Mission, and there for a few minutes I held a slender, blue-veined hand in mine and heard a thin, old, but infinitely sweet voice murmur a conventional greeting, while a pair of dim eyes gazed into mine. That was my first meeting with Mother Bird. I knew little about her then—her work, her charities, her help. The name sounded only vaguely familiar. Since then I have heard many stories, some tragic with the tragedy of the Bowery, some hopeless with the hopelessness of sin, in which her name has played a leading part—in which the kindly shriveled little hands have lifted burdens that were too heavy even for a strong man to carry alone.

I have three pictures on my desk as I write. They all show a woman in a heavy black veil with a widow's bonnet and gown. The face that stands out sharply against the somber background is in all three the same face with a difference. For in the first picture the hair is dark, in the second it is gray, and in the third it is a snowy white. The first portrait shows a woman in the Indian summer of life with light-filled eyes and firm mouth. A tall, commanding figure, large and well proportioned, with soft cheeks, and a shoulder that looks as if a sorry head might find rest there.

The second picture shows a woman a little stouter, a little less commanding, perhaps, but a little more motherly. It shows the gray hair drawn back lighter, the face a little more lined, the eyes a little less bright. It shows a woman growing old gracefully and happily.

The latest picture shows a decided change. It shows a tiny, shriveled, bent form; a noble, consecrated soul shines from a face that is wrinkled and eyes that hold the wistful light of memories. It shows a woman who is meeting the winter time of life bravely—a woman who was ready and waiting for her call.

I came upon an old copy of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD to-day—a copy published in the year 1899. It contained an article written by Mrs. Bird that told the story of a visit to the then famous "Suicide Club."

"I am writing this at three o'clock in the morning," she began, "having just returned from a visit to a dance hall." Then she goes on to tell about the girls she saw drinking and singing in the dirty, smoke-filled atmosphere. "One of them," she says,

THE LATE MRS. SARAH J. BIRD

"told me that they had just made a plan for committing suicide—for taking poison when life began to grow bitter."

Mrs. Bird obtained the girl's address, and the very next morning visited her and found her homeless, penniless, perhaps in disgrace, about to be turned out on the street by her irate landlady. Little by little she learned that the girl came from a good family, that she was a college graduate, that her mother and father were dead, and that nobody cared what became of her. "Mother Bird" had her placed in a hospital and gave her a new start in life.

You notice that the article begins by telling that it is three o'clock and that the writer had just returned from the terrible visit. I wonder whether there are many women who would want to go out alone at that time of night. I wonder if there are many women who would dare to venture alone at any hour of the night through the worst parts of the city. I wonder!

Mrs. Bird's work was very often thankless. It was always hard. Many times she would go out on an errand of mercy with very grave fears in her heart. Yet her courage and faith never failed her. Many times she would be refused admittance to places where her loving spirit drew her. Often she was obliged to go disguised as a beggar, with rags and tatters and dirt that hid all but the light of her smile. But it was seldom that she let anything change her purpose. Furious saloonkeepers, hardened, sin-loving women capitulated before the vigor of her methods. She went out to save souls and, under God, she brought them in.

The Bowery Mission men have as much praise for her as the poor, hopeless girls, so many of whom she has aided. Often she has helped a poor, faltering, wayward one to write the letter home; often she has joined a quavering, boyish voice in earnest prayer. With her own hands she has fed the hungry, while her eyes, now dim in death, have pierced through the armor of reserve to the depths of a troubled heart.

It is the springtime of the year, and the grass is beginning to creep up through the dark of the ground, and leafy buds are showing on the bare brown trees. Little hatless children play merrily on the city streets, under a sky that looks very blue.

It is the springtime of the year, and the warm sunlight lies radiantly over an awakening earth that is filled with music and flowers. The birds, after their short winter visit in the South, are coming home.

Eighty-two years have passed since Mrs. Bird came to visit our earth, but the time now seems all too short. What a glorious use she has made of her life! What a multitude of souls she has led to Christ! And yet eighty-two years are as eighty-two moments in the eyes of God—eighty-two moments that this daughter of the King has spent away from Home.

HER LIFE DEVOTED TO CHRISTIAN SERVICE

MRS. SARAH J. BIRD, widely known among mission workers throughout the country as "Mother Bird" and the "Mother of the Bowery Mission Boys," passed away at her home in Montclair, N. J., on the morning of April 15. She had been in failing health for several months; yet until a few weeks ago she had as warm an interest as ever in the spiritual and humanitarian work to which she had devoted the greater part of her eighty-two years of life.

The funeral took place in Upper Montclair, N. J., on April 18. The Bowery Mission held a memorial service on April 23, when many glowing tributes were paid to her memory.

Mrs. Bird was for many years an active worker in Plymouth Church, Brooklyn, under Henry Ward Beecher. At the death of her husband, who was a successful New York merchant, Mrs. Bird took up the work of holding meetings for homeless men. Single-handed, with no organized staff surrounding her, and no church or religious institution behind her, she opened a room in Madison Street, and there met, three or four times a week, the strangest and most motley crowd that ever composed a religious congregation. She was especially interested in young prodigals, over whom she watched, with whom she pleaded and upon whom she bestowed a wealth of real mother-love. Hundreds of boys have been won by her tenderness and sent back to sorrowing parents.

It was about the time when the late Dr. Louis Klopsch became the head of the Bowery Mission that Mrs. Bird came into the life of the mission. She became one of its incorporators. She was then a woman of wonderful force of character and with a spiritual power, a persuasive eloquence and a kindness of heart that were soon recognized and appreciated. She commenced holding meetings for destitute men, and, not having any building of her own, obtained permission to have two meetings a week in the Bowery Mission. At the conclusion of each meeting she gave the men a luncheon of coffee and sandwiches. Many of the men who were drawn to Christ at these meetings became practical Christian workers. In many other ways Mrs. Bird rendered effective service. Her Christmas tree at the Bowery Mission for the poor mothers and children of the tenements, her mothers' meetings and girls' classes in the settlement she founded were all valuable adjuncts to the great spiritual work among the poor and neglected multitudes of the East Side. She was the friend of the outcasts among both sexes. Many a poor wanderer was led to a better life through her efforts, and the number of those whom she was instrumental in bringing into the Gospel fold during her loving ministry of a long lifetime cannot be estimated. Many a poor outcast has "come to himself" and found pardon and peace in Christ and a better outlook on life through "Mother Bird's" ministrations.

Among the many instances of reunited families, whose members, after long years of separation and wandering, have been brought back to home and friends through the instrumentality of "Mother Bird's" work in the Bowery Mission, there is probably none that is more interesting and instructive than the following, which is truly the narrative of a repentant prodigal. The story is given in a letter written by Helen H. Holcomb, an American missionary at Jhansi, India. She says:

"While on an evangelistic tour in a native State in the heart of India, we spent several days in an 'inspection bungalow' provided by the English Government for the use of its officers when on duty. This bungalow was a short distance outside the walled city of Dalia. One day we noticed two European gentlemen in the vicinity of the bungalow. One of the gentlemen learned that the two occupants of the bungalow were the traveling agents of a large jewelry establishment in Madras, waiting for a command to visit the palace and display their wares. One day one of the gentlemen walked over to our bungalow, and asking to see the gentleman whose acquaintance he had made, communicated to him the contents of a letter which he held in his hand, and which had been forwarded to him from Madras. The letter was from the Bowery Mission in New York, and told him that his son, who had been a prodigal, and had sorely grieved the hearts of those who loved him, had 'come to himself,' was ready to acknowledge his wrongdoing and longed to return to his father's house. 'His repentance seems sincere,' continued the writer of the letter. 'He feels that his heavenly Father has forgiven him, and he hopes that in the heart of his earthly father there is also a place for the repentant wanderer.' The letter bore the signature of the 'Mother of the Bowery Boys,' Mrs. Sarah J. Bird."

HIS PROMISE

"Lo, I am with you alway."

BLESSED promise, for our quest:
Christ divine, our constant guest!
Never absent, ever near,
With a love that casts out fear.

Christ divine, our constant friend,
Friendship true that does not end,
Fraught with happiness and peace,
With a joy that does not cease.

Christ divine, our guard and guide,
Ever present by our side,
Teaching us God's will and way,
More and more from day to day.

Christ divine, our life, our light,
From our Father Infinite,
Source of knowledge, wisdom, power,
Perfect gift, His perfect dower!

Lo! the promises divine
Round our pathway ever shine,
With a grace and heavenly cheer—
Lo, the Christ is ever near!

THE BEATIFIC VISION

A SERMON

BY

Rev. D. J. Burrell, D.D., LL.D.*

TEXT: "In the year that King Uzziah died, I saw—" Isa. 6: 1

THAT was a memorable year, the year that King Uzziah died. His character is outlined in the words, "He did that which was right in the sight of the Lord, save only that the high places were not removed." But there is a world of meaning in that "save only." It gives us to understand that he was a compromiser, who carried water on both shoulders. He worshiped God in his temple and at the same time permitted the worship of Baal in the high places. It is not surprising to learn that he had an overweening sense of his own importance, since weakness and conceit go usually hand in hand. For his presumption he was smitten with leprosy, so that he must needs "dwell in a several house." And the nation meanwhile was rushing headlong down an inclined plane. It had so long and persistently provoked the divine displeasure that it was now likened to "a cottage in a vineyard, a lodge in a garden of cucumbers, a besieged city." Isaiah was in the depths of despair. "Ah, sinful nation," he cried, "a people laden with iniquity; a seed of evil-doers; children that are corruptors; they have forsaken the Lord!" But at length the leper king was dead; lying in state with his white scales upon him. What now? The future gave no promise. The heart of the prophet sank within him.

Then came the vision: "I saw the Lord sitting upon a throne, high and lifted up, and his train filled the temple. Above it stood the seraphim: each one had six wings; with twain he covered his face, and with twain he covered his feet, and with twain he did fly. And one cried unto another and said, Holy, holy, holy is the Lord of hosts: the whole earth is full of his glory. And the posts of the door moved at the voice of him that cried, and the house was filled with smoke. Then said I, Woe is me, for I am undone; because I am a man of unclean lips, and I dwell in the midst of a people of unclean lips: for mine eyes have seen the King! Then flew one of the seraphim unto me, having a live coal in his hand, which he had taken with the tongs from off the altar: and he laid it upon my mouth, and said, Lo, this hath touched thy lips; and thine iniquity is taken away, and thy sin is purged. Also I heard the voice of the Lord, saying, Whom shall I send, and who will go for us? Then said I, Here am I; send me!"

A Vision of God

It is important to note the influence which this vision had on Isaiah's life and character; for it cannot be imagined that such an event would be without definite results. It was in fact a heart-searching, revolutionary experience; insomuch that he could never again be the same man. It must have produced three definite impressions upon him.

The first had to do with God. He says, "I saw the Lord sitting upon a throne, high and lifted up." By this we are not to understand that he really saw the essential God. "No man can see God and live." On a bright morning you look out of your window and say, "I see the sun": by which you mean only that you see the corona which surrounds it. The prophet saw the seraphim, each of them having six wings, with twain covering his face, with twain covering his feet and with twain poising for flight to do his Lord's will. He saw the foundations of the temple shaking and trembling. He saw the Shekinah, the pillar of "smoke." And that was all he saw.

But it was enough to assure him that God was sitting upon his throne, controlling the affairs of the children of men. It was enough to satisfy him that, notwithstanding the desperate condition of affairs in Israel, the Lord had not abdicated his authority but was still competent to administer in all things. And the heart of Isaiah was lifted up accordingly within him.

So did the courage of John the Evangelist revive when, in lonely exile, meditating on the persecution of his brethren, he saw the Lord walking in the midst of the golden candlesticks and heard him say: "I am he that liveth and was dead; and, behold, I am alive forevermore and have the keys of death and hell!"

If ever our courage fails, when the fountains of the great deep seem to be broken up, let us lift our eyes also to the Lord sitting upon his throne, high and lifted up. The darkest clouds are far this side of heaven, where in calm majesty the King wields his scepter. Up with your hearts! God is our refuge and our strength; a very present help in trouble. Therefore will we not fear, though the earth be removed and though the mountains be carried into the midst of the sea.

A Vision of Self

But along with this glimpse of the divine majesty came also voices announcing the divine holiness. "Holy, holy, holy is the Lord of hosts!" He dwelleth in light unapproachable. The stars of heaven are not clean in his sight. He is of purer eyes than to behold iniquity. Angels and archangels veil their faces before him.

The second impression had to do with himself, as revealed in the reflected light of the glory of God. He had been court chaplain now eighteen years; and little wonder if, on entering the temple, clad in his canonicals, he felt a sense of personal importance as the prophet of God. But his pride was destined to have a fall.

In the light of this unveiling the prophet saw his own littleness. Gazing toward the throne-room of the universe, he felt as David did, with his face turned upward to the overarching skies, "When I consider thy heavens, the work of thy fingers, what is man that thou art mindful of him, and the son of man that thou visitest him?"

The tendency of our time is to magnify man and minimize God. There are those who make no scruple of intruding upon the divine Oracles, or taking liberties with the Infinite. They thrust God aside, usurp his prerogatives, discuss the gravest problems with an air of omniscience and take upon themselves the responsibility for the general management of mundane affairs. Thus fools rush in where angels fear to tread. For such arrogance as this there is no remedy but the ineffable vision of the divine glory.

Of still greater significance was the awful exposure of his own sinfulness which came to Isaiah in this experience. Far as he was removed from God by the fact that he was a mere infinitesimal in the presence of the Infinite, he was still farther removed by an overwhelming sense of ill-desert. "Woe is me," he cried, "for I am undone! I am a man of unclean lips and I dwell among a people of unclean lips; and mine eyes have seen the King!" He mentioned his lips particularly because, as a prophet, he had been commissioned to witness for God. He now perceived that he was not worthy to name God, much less to witness for him. Thus does our iniquity separate us from God and thus do our sins hide his face from us.

A Vision of Service

The third impression had reference to the relation of Isaiah with God. He was definitely informed that notwithstanding his insignificance and imperfection, a definite place was assigned to him in the divine plan. It was eighteen years since he had received his original commission and he had sought faithfully to discharge it; but he was now to start afresh. This vision was destined to have a stupendous effect upon him. The Lord had greater things for him to do than he had dreamed of.

But before he could enter upon this enlarged sphere of usefulness he must be qualified for it. The oppressive sense of his sinful unworthiness must be taken from him. His lips must be purged. Then flew one of the seraphim, having a live coal from off the altar, and laid it upon his mouth, saying, "Lo, this hath touched thy lips, and thy iniquity is taken away." The coal from the altar of sacrifice spoke unmistakably of the sacrificial Lamb of God. His blood is like fire, in that it burns out sin. And only so is a man prepared for the service of God.

Now came the call: "Whom shall I send, and who will go for us?" Isaiah had long served under the constraint of duty; but there must be no compulsion in the service of his after-life. The future was dark before him. He saw no prospect of success. He was summoned to go forth on a forlorn hope. Would he go?

The response was immediate: "Here am I; send me!" His words rang like those of Paul when, having seen the sunburst and heard the Voice on the way down to Damascus, he cried, "Lord, what wilt thou have me to do?" He also had seen the King: and the vision transformed his life. He was ready for whatever awaited him: and thenceforth not duty but the love of Christ constrained him.

Then followed the prophet's instructions: "Go thou to a people whose ears are heavy, whose eyes are holden, whose heart is fat; to a people that will not hear thee!" Was it strange that he answered, "Lord, how long?" Alas, there was for him no hope of brighter days. "Until the cities be wasted without inhabitant, and the land be utterly desolate, and only a remnant remains of the holy seed." In other words, his preaching was to be as water poured upon the ground. He was to warn a nation that was doomed to die. He was to beat the air. He was to fail for God. But what of that? Is not this "the whole of man, to fear God and keep his commandments?" Not success but faithfulness is required of us.

The great harvests of the Lord have ever been reaped from the graves of those who have toiled in the night. The priests and prophets all failed. If the ministry of Christ be measured by visible results, he failed too! Paul and all the apostles failed. Augustine and Xavier and Judson and Carey failed; but only as men count failure. He always wins who sides with God! In the long sweep of the centuries success is nothing but simple, unquestioning, patient obedience to the behest of God.

The Practical Vision

The lesson of the beatific vision is of practical import to all who profess the service of Christ. It is many years since some of us closed in with the overtures of mercy and, accepting Christ as our Saviour, set out to follow him. Have we been content with mere perfunctory obedience? Have we been marking time when we should have been engaged on the high places of the field? If so, a vision like that of Isaiah would open up a new world of happy usefulness in the Christian life.

It is our high privilege to see the King. He has been pleased to unveil himself before us not enveloped in "smoke" but visible to our fleshly eyes. "He that hath seen me," said Jesus, "hath seen the Father. How sayest thou then, Show us the Father? Believest thou not that I am in the Father and the Father in me?"

The theophanies of the Old Testament were but foregleams or adumbrations of Christ. In him dwelleth the fulness of the Godhead bodily. He is the exegesis of God. To see him is to behold a vision that casts down and lifts up again; that convicts and converts; that reveals our unworthiness and at the same time endues us with supernatural power. This is the vision that opens the door into efficiency in the spiritual life.

Beatific Moments

I have in my study a remarkable book called The Ten Theophanies, by Dr. Baker, whose name is not unfamiliar in the annals of lighter literature. As his life was wearing to its close, he felt a consuming desire to present his view of the unveiling of God. The book, which was written with a hand growing feebler and feebler, was finished at length in full view of heaven. Here are its concluding words: "Try to bring home to yourself this Friend of mine, who is God yet man, and man yet God. He is ever lovingly near, in the unlimited prime and plenitude and power of his everlasting grace. The man who is writing these lines cannot see them for happy tears. He trembles because unable to contain, while yet unable to express, the thought Immanuel, God with us! And now, awaiting the appearing of our Lord, let me sound his praise; the blessed and only potentate, King of kings and Lord of lords, who only hath immortality, dwelling in the light which no man can approach unto. To him

DAILY MEDITATION

FOR EVERY DAY IN THE YEAR, BASED ON THE WORDS OF JESUS

BY PROFESSOR W. H. T. DAU

SUNDAY, May 3. Matthew 5: 3. "Blessed are the poor in spirit: for theirs is the kingdom of heaven." This opening verse of the famous, yet often misapplied, Sermon in the Mount strikes the keynote of the entire discourse. The Jews prided themselves on their law. They boasted that theirs was the kingdom, and that they were God's race. They despised Jesus and his followers. Now, in the presence of his disciples whom he had taught the way of salvation, not by works which they were to do but by faith in him, Jesus exhibits the law, the true law, in detail. He starts out with the Beatitudes. The people who may consider themselves in the kingdom of God are not people whose spirit is filled with great notions concerning their own worthiness and superiority, but people who have become penniless beggars in the sight of God, people who declare with Paul: "I know that in me, that is, in my flesh, dwelleth no good thing." When the true knowledge of the law reveals to a person the emptiness of his boasted perfections; when man comes to look upon himself as a pious sham, when he begins to despair of himself and is reduced to nothing, then he is a fit subject for grace to work upon. His spiritual poverty becomes a blessing, because the Lord loves to take such a person into his kingdom and keep him there.

MONDAY, May 4. Matthew 5: 4. "Blessed are they that mourn: for they shall be comforted." He who has been visited by affliction or has had the depraved condition of his own heart and the moral corruption of the world mirrored to him in God's law, has a great sorrow. What a church like that of the Pharisees in the days of Christ offers, cannot soothe his grief. But there is a solace for such a sorrow, and the comfort which the Gospel of Jesus brings comes like balm on his wounds. His mourning is turned into rejoicing. Those who have never tasted the bitterness of the law cannot fully appreciate the sweets of the Gospel. Such a one finds in Jesus an inexhaustible well of pure pleasure and heavenly joy. Even the ills of this life which he shares with others, or the peculiar ills which befall him as a disciple of Christ, cannot dry up the spring of joy and comfort within him. "Blessed are ye that weep, for ye shall laugh."

TUESDAY, May 5. Matthew 5: 5. "Blessed are the meek: for they shall inherit the earth." The worldly are thoroughly selfish, unsubmissive, unyielding. They bow not to God, neither do they respect man. They insist on their "rights." They wrest prerogatives to themselves. They push others aside, quarrel with them on the least provocation or without any provocation, and browbeat them. And their self-seeking, greed and ambition are often made to pass for clear-sightedness of aim and courage begotten of conviction. They want the earth, and at times it looks as if they were getting it. But it is a delusion. The men who really and permanently succeed in this life are those in whom divine grace has subdued the wild tempers of the flesh, and implanted the spirit of the meek and gentle Jesus. To this class of people the inheritance belongs, and over and above that, peace of mind and the good will of every upright fellow man. On close examination, it is found that the greatest power in any community are not those blustering fellows who lord it over others, but the meek and quiet Christians.

WEDNESDAY, May 6. Matthew 5: 6. "Blessed are they which do hunger and thirst after righteousness: for they shall be filled." He who has found Christ and has faith in his forgiveness, possesses that righteousness which is valid before God. But such a one also strives after that other righteousness which is attained by sincerely following the holy, just, and good law of God. He yearns for righteousness in his every act; he loves justice, uprightness, fair-dealing, honesty. Persistently he labors not only for his own improvement in practical righteousness, but for that of his environment along the same line. He seeks to lead a truly pious life—to "live soberly, righteously, and godly in this present world." His is a different sort of zeal for holiness from that which is found where piety is interpreted to mean outward compliance with certain religious forms, rites, ceremonies. One who has this "hunger and thirst" "shall be filled." His longing shall be satisfied, indeed, only partially in this life, where he will have to wrestle with imperfections, but completely in that new heaven and new earth wherein dwelleth righteousness.

THURSDAY, May 7. Matthew 5: 7. "Blessed are the merciful: for they shall obtain mercy." True, the Christian desires to see justice prevail in all relations and dealings of men; but he knows from the Word of God and from his own experience that sin has darkened the understanding and enfeebled the will of men in regard to their temporal affairs. The Christian knows the errors to which men are prone, their frailties and shortcomings, and the misery and suffering which prevail in this world. While his heart is hard as flint when he must cope with sin, it is soft and tender when he deals with the sinner, the unfortunate, the fallen, the erring. He does not restrain his merciful inclinations in dealing with such people. He is not merciless in his judgments and actions, like the stern Pharisee who, even before God, declared his aversion for the publican. The merciful shall obtain mercy in turn from their fellow Christians. Their own shortcomings shall be judged mercifully. And though at times they may fail here of obtaining mercy, God will in mercy receive them at the end, if they come enfolded in the arms of the merciful Jesus.

FRIDAY, May 8. Matthew 5: 8. "Blessed are the pure in heart: for they shall see God." To keep oneself unspotted while passing through a sinful world is a task indeed. Thought and speech are in constant danger of defilement by what we read, hear, and see round about us. Worst of all, the remnants of evil that still remain in us after grace has begun its purifying work upon our corrupt hearts sully our inner life and taint our outer conduct. The child of God seeks to keep his heart and affections pure while engaged in his daily occupation and in his intercourse with his fellow men. By sincere submission to the word of God's truth, and by fleeing and avoiding all occasions of impurity, he keeps his heart chaste, and crucifies the flesh with the desires and lusts thereof. Still, while sojourning here below, his eye is hourly offended by contaminating sights, and his heart is grieved. But when the phantasmagoria of this world's wickedness vanishes before his fading eyes, and he awakens with spiritual vision to see the great white throne and the pure Jesus, the joys that will then thrill his soul will cause all else to be forgotten.

SATURDAY, May 9. Matthew 5: 9. "Blessed are the peacemakers: for they shall be called the children of God." When the Prince of Peace came upon earth, the angels sang: "Peace on earth, good will toward men." He became our peace by his living and dying, and, departing, left us his peace in the benediction of his Gospel. Moreover, his Spirit implants the virtue of peaceableness in the hearts of his believers. "The fruit of the Spirit is love, joy, peace, longsuffering, gentleness, goodness." The followers of Jesus are "not desirous of vainglory, provoking one another, envying one another." As much as in them lies, they seek to be at peace with all men, and endeavor to establish peace among their fellow men who are at variance with one another. By so doing they reveal traits of their heavenly parentage. Their Father in heaven harbors thoughts of peace concerning all men, and his children attest their descent from him by grace, through their peace-loving and peace-making efforts in a world where sin constantly disturbs every relation of men.

be honor and glory everlasting!" His labor of love was finished; the pen dropped from the trembling fingers; a new theophany had burst upon the writer's soul. He was in the midst of the beatific vision at home with God!

To one who had thus looked on God, revealed in the majesty and holiness of his beloved Son, there must of necessity come a corresponding conviction of littleness and unworthiness. So was it with Peter on that morning by the lake of Galilee, when he and his fellow fishermen, having toiled all night and taken nothing, saw the Master on the shore. At his bidding they "cast their nets on the right side of the ship," and then came the miracle! Peter had long known Jesus and endeavored to serve him; but in that wonderful moment he caught a glimpse of his Lord's majesty, and of the ineffable holiness which ever accompanies it, that filled him with an overmastering awe and forced from his lips that strange and apparently inconsequent cry, "Depart from me, O Lord, for I am a sinful man!" Thus to see Christ is to see ourselves, not "as ithers see us," but as we really are in the clear white light of his eyes.

And never until we have caught this vision shall we be the sort of Christians that we ought to be. Never until then shall we rightly apprehend our place in the mighty plan of God. Never until then shall we escape the drudgery of duty and enter on the joy of voluntary service with the cry, "Here am I; send me!"

Meanwhile, let us cease from measuring life by what men call success and hold ourselves in readiness to fail, as men count failure, if our Lord so wills it.

Full forty years did Moses watch his flocks in the desert of Midian before he caught the vision; and when it came his life was cut in sunder by it. Out of the burning bush came the Voice, "I have seen the oppression of the people; and I will send thee to deliver them. Go and say, I-am-that-I-am hath sent me!"

A hopeless dreamer of dreams was Elijah until he caught the vision on Horeb. He shook and trembled as the earthquake and the tempest and the fire passed by: then came the still small Voice, "Go, return!" Then and there a new and better life began for him. He knew now that the King was on his throne, high and lifted up; and that this God was his God forever and ever! Oh that the Voice might come to us, to us who feel our inefficiency and would fain enter upon a higher and more useful life! We may have the vision if we will. The Voice is calling, "Whom shall I send, and who will go for us?" Are we ready to answer, "Here am I; send me!"

A MORNING PRAYER

LORD, I would look into those eyes of thine
Ere on day's trail I start;
One moment let their beams upon me shine,
And needed aid impart.

Then ere to evil's wiles I be a prey,
As I too oft have been,
Like reinforcements on a hard-fought day
Thy face shall come between!

ALEXANDER LOUIS FRASER.

BULGARIA'S QUEEN TO VISIT US

BY ZORITZA D. FURNAJIEFF

AMERICAN high ideals and ideas are not strange to the people of Bulgaria. The only country in the Balkan Peninsula that has given its people religious liberty, it has opened for fifty years its doors to American missionaries and American education. The American schools in Bulgaria and the two colleges in Constantinople have been the alma mater of many Bulgarian boys and girls, who have become leaders in political and educational centers. Thus America, through her representatives (the missionaries), her literature and her schools, has had a large share in the development of that small but beautiful country and its brave, ambitious people.

The 15,000 Bulgarian immigrants to America who returned to Bulgaria in response to the call for the Balkan War were another powerful means of transplanting American ideas in Bulgaria and Macedonia. America's responsibility to her immigrants is very great; for whatever impression they receive of America and her people, that is the impression the world will take also through them, on their return to their countries, or through the letters sent to their homes.

Bulgarians now in America as citizens, students or workingmen are looking forward with great enthusiasm to the visit of Queen Eleonora of Bulgaria to the United States. She comes to study our methods of dealing with social and economic problems and hospital work, etc. She is a keen observer and a painstaking student of all that relates to human betterment. Bulgaria has been especially favored by God in having a queen who has endeared herself to her people by the sympathy, modesty and nobility of her character.

Having been privileged to meet the queen on several occasions, I have been personally impressed by her dignity, which inspires respect, and also by her kind, sweet, queenly disposition, which makes us love her.

Queen Eleonora is well known among the people, for she is often seen in her carriage, with the two white horses, or in her auto, dressed in her white nurse costume with its red cross sign decoration, going from hospital to hospital on her mission of service and love, visiting the wounded and the sick.

What an angel of mercy and comfort she has been during the past year to many of our brave soldiers! The greatness and nobility of Queen Eleonora's character is revealed in her quiet way of planning and doing all she thinks best for the country and its people. She has rejoiced with us in our progress and wept with us in our sorrows. In every national catastrophe she is among the first to give relief. A few years ago, Philippopolis was damaged by the inundation of the river Maritza. The queen at once went to the place, planned the means of raising money for the sufferers; went to their homes, and with her own hand distributed blankets and clothing and gave money to relieve as much as possible the needs of those whose homes were damaged by the flood. Last year, during the latter part of June, a severe earthquake ruined the two cities, Turnovo and Gharma Riahovitza. The very next day after the earthquake, Queen Eleonora was on the scene of the disaster, investigating for herself the damage done, ordering and doing all that was possible to save, help, comfort and alleviate the suffering of the victims.

As soon as the war broke out, the queen called the mayor of Sofia; the president of the Red Cross, Mr. Radeff; the presidents of all the women's benevolent societies; Rabbi Erenprice, and a few other leading men to form a Red Cross relief committee. Their duty was to canvass the whole city, dividing it into six sections, to enrol the names and to gather money and clothing from all who were able to give, and then in a systematic way to find out the needs of the poor soldiers' families. This plan of work was followed in almost all the large cities.

Queen Eleonora's foresight and executive ability, which have always been used for the welfare of the country, have placed her at the head of many benevolent societies. Three years ago she opened a nurses' course named the "Samaritans." Women and girls (above twenty years of age) from among the rich and the poor, were invited to take the course for the benefit of their own homes, and for the country in time of need. Two hundred graduates were ready to take up their places in the hospitals as soon as the war broke out.

It is the queen's longing to have the latest and best methods for the hospitals in Bulgaria that is bringing her to the United States. We hope and pray God that she may be spared any trouble on this her mission of love and noble enterprise to acquaint herself with the best methods of helping those who have to be on the bed of pain and suffering.

America, with her rich, well-equipped hospitals, her renowned surgeons, her progressive ideas, her fine Christian men and women, is indeed one of the best countries our queen could have chosen to visit. We all hope that this visit will be another strong link to unite closer Bulgaria to this great country.

FADELESS FLOWERS OF SPRING

BRIGANDS going about in bands to plunder and kill have produced a state of terror in different parts of China. The government is seriously disturbed by these disorders, but while an official edict against this lawless element is being put into effect whole communities suffer in ways that are unknown in peaceful America. These things occur in such out-of-the-way places, and on comparatively so small a scale, that the news of the day contains scarcely any reference to the situation. It is a well authenticated situation, however, and many glimpses are afforded of the state of things by letters from faithful missionaries who remain at their posts in the midst of the gravest danger.

"Through all the turmoil, persecution and strife, we have felt that so soon as it was over there would be a great turning to God. It seems that the turn of the tide is now come. From all parts of our conference we hear reports of unprecedented openness of heart to receive the Gospel. Over six hundred persons attended the quarterly conference recently held near the village where our Christians suffered most. In our city (Hinghwa) over five hundred new persons have been gathered in in the last year. Both as a test of sincerity and as a necessary equipment, the pastor requires those who enroll as inquirers to bring fifteen cents with which to buy a Bible and hymn book—the equivalent of at least $1.50 in our money." This is a statement by Rev. F. S. Carson in a letter enclosing reports of the work throughout that district.

Rev. W. B. Cole, missionary in the same district, writes: "In the Sueyu region a little seven-year-old boy was awakened by shouting, battering in of doors, and rush of footsteps. The bandits were plundering his home, for his people, being Christians, were suffering persecution on account of the attitude of the church against the planting of poppy. The little fellow was carried away to a mountain retreat and held for ransom. Just before he and other captives were to be killed unless the ransom were forthcoming, government troops rescued them. When this boy reached Hinghwa City he created amusement by complaining that the bandits took all of his Sunday school picture lesson cards. That may have seemed like an ordinary incident, but to us it tells in the most eloquent way all that it means to these little children to learn about Jesus and to be taught to trust him."

If a hostile fire should spread through an American town, destroying the possessions of many families, which of his several losses would the average child most bewail? Into the lives of these little Chinese has come something that means to them all that a parent's warm interest and constant protecting love would mean to the boy and girl in our homes. The colored lesson cards stand for something in their opening, trustful minds. That little fellow who was robbed by the bandits, and who had come to prize his "Jesus cards" above everything else, so that their loss was the one thing in his almost fatal experience that he could talk about, is not an exception among the many orphan children who are being cared for and educated by the missionaries in China.

"HELP US, AND WE WILL DO OUR BEST"

Out of great danger, and often out of dreadful domestic surroundings, these children have come one by one to the safety afforded in the Christian missions. They were not sought out, or coaxed away, or taken by force; they were literally set down on the steps of the missions, as we have so often expressed it, by Providence. No Christian heart could turn them away, in view of the circumstances which bring them. The missionaries take them in faith; and they set themselves to the opportunity which each child affords for training an unspoiled native child to become an out-and-out native Christian worker. The missionaries cannot allow themselves to doubt that the "lead" of God, who seems thus to be providing himself with workers for the days ahead, will be followed with faithful zeal by Christians at home who are praying for just such expansion of the work in the foreign field.

A new quarter is beginning in the administration of the orphanage work supported by the CHRISTIAN HERALD Family. A thousand and five children look to us for their daily bread, their clothing and their instruction. It costs only twenty dollars per annum to provide that for one child. There are many, some are shown in the picture on this page, who do not have the protecting care and the stimulating interest of a patron—one who provides the annual cost for a child by name, and who receives reports regularly from the child. The winter is past, the spring with its promise and uplift is here; it is a season of new hope, new courage, new endeavor. We wish, greatly wish, that more of our readers would take a part in this important work. How rich we are as a great, numerous family: what store of good things, of blessings, we possess: how fair with pleasant friendships each day is: above all, what joy of childhood is all about our pathways! Why not spare something for these far-away, homeless, almost friendless little lives whom God has asked us to look after for him for a while?

We wish to enroll more patrons. We will welcome all gifts, great and small. Send what you can. We will acknowledge them and set them promptly to work in this special way. Address China Orphan Fund, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, New York.

Is this not a time when our friends might find it in their hearts to repeat former gifts made to this beautiful cause? We want you to have a continual, direct interest in the welfare of these orphans and their future Christian work. And we are inclined to urge upon all who have not yet added their help, to do so now when Christian hearts are so filled with the joy of living.

A WEEK IN THE WORLD'S NEWS

Attempt to Assassinate Mayor Mitchel

AN ATTEMPT on the life of New York's mayor, John Purroy Mitchel, was made at noon April 17 by an unbalanced man of seventy-one years, who fired a revolver point blank at the mayor. Mr. Mitchel was seated in an automobile, which was about to start, with Corporation Counsel Frank Polk and the new police commissioner, Arthur H. Woods. The bullet missed its mark, but hit Polk's right cheek, shattered his jaw bone, knocked out two teeth and passed through his left cheek. He was taken to a hospital, where his condition was pronounced not serious. The mayor, as soon as he realized he had been shot at, drew a revolver—which he carries because of the murderous assault upon his predecessor, Mayor Gaynor—to defend himself, but the would-be assassin was quickly overpowered by the police commissioner and the chauffeur, and arrested. He gave his name as Michael P. Mahoney. He had been brooding over imaginary wrongs of Mayor Mitchel's administration. A great crowd gathered, and the startling news spread rapidly through the city.

Chinese Revolution Squelched

NEWS reports, dated April 15, state that revolutionaries from Japan had been arrested in Shanghai by the Chinese Government on the charge of inciting regular soldiers to sedition. Documents containing detailed plans for a general uprising accompanied by wholesale massacre of officials this month, and said to bear the signature of Dr. Sun Yat Sen, formerly provisional president of the Chinese Republic, were seized. Unrest and incipient revolts are widespread in China.

American Heads Surgical Congress

NEW YORK CITY has been entertaining the fourth Congress of Surgeons from all parts of the world, and at the session of these eminent men amazing advances in surgical treatment were described. The presence of ambulances from all countries on the battlefields of the Balkan war was mentioned as an example of the increase of humane sentiment expressed through medical care. Dr. W. W. Keen of Philadelphia was elected president of the Association, which meets next in Paris in 1917.

Big New Railway Brotherhood

IT IS announced that a new organization, to be known as the Federated Council of Railroad Brotherhoods, is in process of formation, and that Charles S. Mellen, former president of the New York, New Haven and Hartford Railroad Company, may become the active head of the order. There is no central body with which the various railroad employee organizations are now affiliated.

Tolls Exemption Repeal Bill

THE tolls exemption repeal question now before the Senate has been materially affected by the treaty with Colombia just submitted to the governments of that country and the United States for ratification. By agreement with England the treaty gives free use of the Panama Canal to the navy of that country, and that fact was utilized by opponents of repeal to prove that the "all nations" clause of the Hay-Pauncefote treaty is elastic. On the other hand the argument was advanced that the obtaining of England's consent to the above exception to that clause establishes its binding force upon this country. In an interview, published in the New York Herald of April 12, with the late American secretary of state, John Hay, who signed the treaty, occurs the following conversation: "I asked Colonel Hay if the phrase 'vessels of all nations' was intended to include our own shipping, or was to be interpreted as meaning 'all other nations.' The secretary replied: '"All" means all. The treaty was not so long that we could not have made room for the word "other" if we had understood that it belonged there. "All nations" means all nations, and the United States is certainly a nation.' 'That was the understanding between yourself and Lord Pauncefote when you and he made the treaty?' I pursued. 'It certainly was,' he replied. 'It was the understanding of both governments, and I have no doubt that it was the understanding of the Senate when it ratified the treaty. You will remember that when the former treaty was before the Senate this very question was raised, and an amendment was proposed exempting American shipping from tolls, and it was overwhelmingly rejected.'"

National Prohibition Advocated

A CONSTITUTIONAL amendment that would give Congress control over the sale of intoxicating liquor for beverage purposes, proposed in a House resolution of Representative Hobson of Alabama, and now under consideration by the House Judiciary Committee, was urged by representatives of the W. C. T. U., the Anti-Saloon League and other organizations at a hearing before the committee, April 15. W. H. Anderson, president of the New York Anti-Saloon League, submitted a letter addressed to a "drink-cure" concern by a distiller's distributing company, offering to sell the former the names of 50,000 "regular consumers of liquor" as prospective "patients." The proposed amendment would permit the manufacture of liquor for use, but not for sale; i. e., for "home consumption" only, and not for commerce.

Albania Faces War With Greece

PRINCE WILLIAM of Wied, who only recently mounted the throne of his new principality, the kingdom of Albania, created by the Powers of Europe as a political expediency in the settlement of the war between Turkey and the Balkan States, and who hesitated, it was said, because of the doubtful task of holding that warlike people in the paths of peace, has already had occasion to consider taking the field at the head of his Albanian troops against Greek irregulars who have risen to overthrow the decision of the Powers awarding certain towns to Albania. Early in April a mobilization of Albanian troops was under way, and fierce attacks by the Greeks upon the towns in question were reported.

Disastrous Copper Strike Called Off

THE great strike of the copper mines of northern Michigan, which had lasted since July 23 last, ended on April 13. The miners claim that they have won all their demands, excepting recognition of the union, which latter demand the operators have insisted they would never grant. The strike has been under the direction of the Western Federation of Miners, and is said to have cost the union more than a million dollars. Between 15,000 and 18,000 men left work, although it is stated only 4,500 originally belonged to the union. There were many instances of violence reported on the part of both the militia on guard and the strikers; several lives were lost and charges of oppression were freely made by the miners. A Federal investigation has been under way for some time collecting testimony concerning the methods of strikers, conditions of labor and the alleged unwarranted use of force by the authorities.

Home Rule Waits on Parliament

DEFINITE action by Parliament on the Irish Home Rule bill is expected at an early date, as it is understood that the government will dissolve Parliament in June. So far as reports indicate the attitude of the political parties is not changed, and Ulster is still understood as intending to resist home rule should the bill become a law without submission to popular vote. The Independent Labor Party on April 14 requested Labor members of Parliament to act independently of the Liberal Party, and to vote on all issues only in accordance with the principles for which the labor party stands.

Solving the Farmers' Problems

THE problems of the farmer have engaged the second annual conference on marketing and farm credits held this month at Chicago. Better accounting, greater co-operation, more education, improved roads, use of modern facilities, closer relations with the consumer and consumer organizations, increased credit accommodations, were among the first-aids to the farmer discussed. The proposed Moss-Fletcher national system of land loan banks was attacked by some delegates as faulty. Effective organization of rural interests—the one hope of the farmer, according to some—was declared to be the most difficult problem in the world.

Attacking Medical Safeguards

LEGALIZING mental or spiritual treatment of disease without use of material remedies, and by persons of whom no technical qualifications are required, was hotly fought at a hearing accorded on April 13 by Governor Glynn of New York on a legislative bill to permit such practice. A thousand Christian Scientists, besides representatives of other cults, attended. Many medical societies, the State Board of Regents, and the State Department of Education united in urging the governor to veto the bill.

The Insult to the Flag

NOT the long proffered olive branch of friendship, not the soothing persuasions of diplomacy, but the big rush of our battleships and cruisers southward convinced Huerta that he must mend his ways, and begin at once, by saluting the flag he had insulted at Tampico. Even this promise he gave with a bad grace. But the time had come for us to draw the line. Our government has borne with the turbulence of Huerta's administration with a patience that was remarkable. Its friendly efforts have been scorned, its sincerity misinterpreted. It bore indignities and outrages without a murmur, and up to a point that excited the amazement of other governments, and although it has now been forced to take a firm and decisive stand, it is not the armed hand of war, but the restraining hand of peace that is extended to force Mexico back into an attitude where she can contemplate her own helplessness. Will Huerta read the warning, or will he, as some profess to believe, provoke a still worse situation in the hope of saving his own tottering rule?

The Way of Safety

"A FELLOW living straight, earning $6 a week, is better off than any man who gets a thousand dollars a week if he does not get it straight." This from Harry Horowitz, who, while earning his right to sit in the electric chair, earned also the horrible title of "Gyp the Blood." "Stick to the 'shool,'" he said further, meaning the synagogue. Louis Rosenberg, "Lefty Louie," sent this message to the boys of the East Side by Rabbi Goldstein: "I want to urge them to go to the synagogue and to love God. If I had given attention to the synagogue and to my God that I should have done I would not be here to-day."

The execution of the four "gunmen" found guilty of the murder of Rosenthal brings up again, with all its ghastly horror, the fact of the allurement of sin, and emphasizes the other fact that about twelve hundred homicides are committed every year in the United States.

"Lefty" Louie apparently went to his death with a lie upon his lips, yet his message to his friends of the East Side was true. "The synagogue and God!" Translated into Christian terms that means the church and Christ. Here are the great influences that can be safely trusted to lead any boy through the temptations of youth to the noble achievements of manhood. No child or man or woman is for a moment safe without God.

But it is not enough to resist the temptation to evil. There must be positive impetus and enthusiastic effort toward the good. The Boy Scout ideals of definite helpfulness are right. Get the boys to win their reputation for courage by doing helpful rather than harmful things. Nothing in life has so fine an appeal to all the high and healthy instincts of young life as the appeal to join in the crusade of Christ against the wrongs and sins of the world.

All four of these young men had had good homes. Rosenberg in his message, sent through the rabbi, spoke affectionately and gratefully of his father and mother. It was too late for him now to follow their example and teachings. But it is not too late for other boys to remember that home ties are safe. And it is not too late for the parents of the young people of America to realize their duty to make home, next to the church, the most cheerful, winsome, alluring spot on earth.

A Consecrated Life

IF WE were asked to write an epitaph on that admirable Christian, Mrs. Sarah J. Bird, now passed from earth to the higher life, we would compass it in one comprehensive line—"She made the whole world brighter." From the time when, in the ardor of youth, she consecrated herself to the service of humanity, until she took on "the silver livery of old age," she was a true and zealous servant of the Master, devoting to that service her wealth, her energy, her talent and her social position. All that the world holds precious she gave unreservedly in the spirit of complete surrender. And the blessing that unfailingly attends such whole-hearted sacrifice came to cheer and comfort her. She was endowed with the power to communicate to other lives that serene and firm faith which made her own life so beautiful.

Mrs. Bird's mission of charity and helpfulness among the poor, the sick and the neglected was a characteristic of her generous nature. In her eyes, all were God's children and equally entitled to her loving offices. For more than twenty years she was the efficient ally of the Bowery Mission in its work of reclaiming the drunkards, the homeless and the wanderers who had lost their bearings and traveled far from God along the road of sin and suffering. In this work her ardor leveled all distinctions and won her universal love and respect. "Mother Bird," as the men of the Bowery Mission called her, was not a meaningless appellation. It was a well-earned title of endearment, for to many she was indeed a mother in Christ, leading them into the light of God's grace and forgiveness and to a finer and nobler life than they had ever known. Among the poor women and children of the East Side she was an angel of mercy. Her heart overflowed with kindness. She relieved the suffering and fed and comforted those in homes of poverty. She brought sunshine and joy into the hearts of thousands through the work of the Settlement which she founded and conducted.

The influence of such a life does not cease with the passing of the vital breath, but goes on expanding in ever-widening circles. Many of Mrs. Bird's converts, now actively engaged in Christian work, will carry forward her soul-winning and body-reclaiming mission, although she herself leads them no longer. Thus the good seed which she sowed in toil and consecration will bring a rich harvest in the years to come. Many will miss the kindly face of the aged saint and her gentle ministrations; but their loss will be sanctified and sweetened with the knowledge that she was one of those to whom the Master's words may be applied in their fullest significance: "Well done, thou good and faithful servant: enter thou into the joy of thy Lord."

Seed and the Soul

FULL-ROBED spring, in her gorgeous raiment of budding flowers and blooms, brings a message of hope and courage, of vigor and activity, of purpose, of planning, of planting—the gladdest message of all the year. The warmth and radiance of the sun, the merry chattering of the birds, the strange, delicious balm that permeates the air, the flare of colors and the wealth of odors, all combine in the most precious promise that the material world knows.

These spring days of full splendor, fraught as they are on every side with evidences of renewed vigor, replenished stores and revived gardens, appeal to the spirit and indeed to the whole being in the nature of a rich, exhilarating tonic. The seeds bursting in germination and the stalks straining upward toward the sky, filling the world with beauty and sweetness and plenty, ought to remind us that there is a time for the sowing of seeds in the soul, as well as in the soil, and that their bloom and fruition are likewise sweet.

But for the seedtime there could be no harvest. And it is just the same in our own natures. Unless we have implanted within us the seeds of wholesome impulses and generous sympathies, the heart will never know the summer harvest of sweet satisfactions, and the winter of old age will be drear and desolate.

It is an old, old truth. But truth, like the seed, grows to bear and to grow again and again, to be scattered by the winds of time upon all sorts of soils, but ever and everywhere producing the same seed again. This old truth is good seed that has brought sweet bloom into the lives of millions. It is bad for us if it finds our hearts stony soil.

We never realize so fully the material blessings of life as when we come into close contact with nature. Then we feel as never before the richness and fulness, the glow and glory of living. Then we realize how much there is in common between man and nature. Then only do we gain a clear conception of the way in which these two great component parts of the world should work together, the one teaching and encouraging the other to higher ideals and nobler attainments. Reflected in the beauties of the blossoming world we find a solace indescribable. Some of the questions that long vexed us are forever answered, and new problems are brought forward which may prove a source of unending pleasure.

To the believing heart, the enlightened soul, that is accordant with nature and which recognizes the great purpose in man's life, our existence here has a new meaning. If we have the Spirit of Christ, our lives become fruitful, constant in growth and yielding good increase as they respond to the touch of the divine Gardener. If we have not that Spirit, but are of the earth earthy, they produce weeds, unsightly and noxious, with neither beauty nor utility—the weeds of evil passions, selfishness, greed, hatred, malice, worldliness, which usurp the soil of the soul in which we might have nourished love, sympathy, sacrifice, purity and many other flowers of character, whose bloom and fragrance would have been a sweet lifelong benediction and a blessing to all around us.

Age of the Babylonian Tablets

ALTHOUGH we had announced that our offer to send a Babylonian tablet to any of our friends who secured two eight-months' subscriptions at $1 each would be withdrawn on the last day of April, we have received so many requests from friends who have not been able to get the two subscriptions within the required limit asking us to grant them further time in the matter, that we are impelled to do so. We are not surprised that these Babylonian tablets, coming, as it were, right from the time of Abraham himself, should have aroused such a widespread interest among our readers that it would almost seem as though every one desired to possess one of these remarkable relics of early Bible times.

The world is just beginning to learn the great essential facts concerning Babylonian history, religion and culture. In his official attestation of the genuineness of the Babylonian tablets, Professor Clay states that they were written during the Ur dynasty, between 2200 and 2400 B.C. The Schaff-Herzog Encyclopedia refers to the Babylonian records as indicating that Abraham lived in 2300 B.C., and that the events related in Gen. 14 occurred about that period. This agreement of two recognized authorities is of great importance to Bible scholars and readers of the Word everywhere, as pointing to the conclusion that the patriarch was alive during the period in which the tablets were written in cuneiform and laid away among the records of the royal temple of the kings of Ur.

We are unable to state definitely just how long we shall be able to supply these tablets. We have obtained a limited number, but the demand is growing and we cannot tell how long the present supply will last. We are therefore compelled to continue the offer until further notice, the duration of the offer being wholly dependent on the supply.

Child Killed Chasing Doll

LENA CICIONE, five years old, of Jamaica, N. Y., was run over and fatally injured the other day as she was trying to save her doll from a runaway horse. The animal, frightened by a Long Island train, dashed for the sidewalk where the little girl was standing. She was about to run when she remembered her doll and, rushing to the curb where she had left it, she seized it and tried to get out of the way. It was too late, for the horse struck her and dragged the wheels over her body. They hurried her to the hospital, where the physicians said it was impossible for her to recover. We see here the mother instinct beginning just out of babyhood. A girl always wants a doll for a Christmas or birthday present. In the palace of wealth, the girl has a doll as large as a real baby, with beautiful eyes that open and shut, and red lips that laugh and cry, adorned by a professional dressmaker, while the child of poverty takes a bottle and puts a rag around it, and ties it at the neck for a head for her doll, which she prefers to any other plaything because it appeals to the maternal instinct. Little Lena felt she was the mother of her dolly, and fearing it would be killed, she lost her life in attempting to rescue it. This is the story of motherhood, which often gives itself up for its offspring at the start or wears itself out in some form of slavery to save the little ones from starvation, or sinks down fainting and dying in an unsuccessful attempt to rescue a wayward boy or girl. Oh, how good God is to bless this world with a heroic, sanctified motherhood! God thus likens his love for us to the love of a mother for a child:

As one whom his mother comforteth, so will I comfort you. (Isa. 66: 13.)

3,000 Girls Visit Ship

MISS ANNE T. MORGAN, daughter of the late J. P. Morgan, sent out invitations to 3,000 of the working girls of New York for a visit with her to the ocean steamship Imperator. About all responded to the invitation. The excursion was a part of the educational work being done under Miss Morgan's leadership for the girls of the Vacation Savings Fund. There are already 16,000 members. After the ship had been inspected, Miss Morgan took the 3,000 girls and treated them to a luncheon. The girls are soon to visit West Point in a body, and the officers and cadets are to take special recognition of their visit. A great reception is to be given to members of the society in the near future in the Grand Central Palace. It is a beautiful picture to see women of wealth and social culture taking such an intense personal interest in the happiness and prosperity of the working girls in the shops, stores and offices of the city. There is this mention of such an one:

Now there was at Joppa a certain disciple named Tabitha, which, by interpretation, is called Dorcas: this woman was full of good works and almsdeeds which she did. (Acts 9: 36.)

Cow Takes World's Record

A NEW world record in the butter production from a single cow's milk was announced the other day by W. D. Caldwell, who is the secretary of the Guernsey Cattle Association. According to Mr. Caldwell's report, Marona, a Guernsey cow owned by E. B. Cassatt in Berwyn, Pa., yielded during the year 1913 a total of 19,639½ quarts of milk, from which 1,059.59 pounds of butter were made. The best previous record was that of a Holstein cow owned by F. F. Field of Brockton, Mass., the yield during 1911 being 1,058 pounds. It will be seen that Marona led her premium sister by only 1.59 pound in the yield of over 1,000 pounds for the year. What a blessing the cow has been to the human race, in furnishing it, and especially the younger part of it, with so much of its life! What a symbol of efficiency and downright benevolence she has ever been. With her milk and butter and offspring the cow was indispensable to the life, industry, and religious ritual of the Jews:

And Abraham ran unto the herd, and fetched a calf, tender and good. And he took butter and milk, and the calf which he had dressed, and set it before them. (Gen. 18: 7, 8.)

Cigar Wrecks a Dirigible

THE dirigible balloon, Città di Milano, which was built by public subscription and presented to the Italian army, was entirely destroyed on April 9. The dirigible landed outside Milan, owing to damage to her motor. Almost immediately afterward a crowd gathered, and, notwithstanding the warning of the officers aboard, some one imprudently lighted a cigar. A tremendous explosion resulted, and fifty persons suffered injuries of various kinds. An outburst of flames completed the work of destruction. This is the first accident that has ever happened to any Italian dirigible. The one destroyed had a capacity of 12,000 cubic meters. What damage carelessness sometimes causes! The careless handling of a lamp in a stable burned Chicago; the firecracker, the live cigar and the lighted match have started conflagrations that have swept other cities. These are types of the explosions and conflagrations in the industrial and religious world, through careless word or deed. One hot word or the crack of one pistol has started a war.

Behold, how great a matter a little fire kindleth! (James 3: 5.)

THE BRILLIANT EASTER PARADE

ALTHOUGH there was snow in Texas and rain in some parts of the country, including White Sulphur Springs, where President Wilson spent the day, the weather in most States on Easter was all that could be desired. This gave opportunity for the Easter parades on the residential avenues in cities which are becoming more popular each year. The one on Fifth Avenue, New York, always brilliant, was more so this year than ever. At ten o'clock the parade was under way, and when the throngs of worshipers entered the churches, filling them to overflowing, there must have been a quarter of a million people on the sidewalks, and in the automobiles and carriages that filled the streets between them, perhaps one-half of that number being strangers or sightseers. There must have been a thousand photographers in line, and the moving-picture men were stationed at important points on the line. The bright apparel and radiant faces reflected the sunshine, the life, the beauty and the love of the glorious Easter morn. Let us trust that the thousands of paraders entering the churches realized afresh the meaning of these words: "But now is Christ risen from the dead, and become the first fruits of them that slept." (I Cor. 15: 20.)

The Royalty of Democracy

BISHOP GREER of New York preached an Easter sermon in the Cathedral of St. John the Divine on "The Crown," in which he said, among other things: "Everybody to-day seems to be trying to find a crown. In the ancient world such was not so. Crowns were then supposed to be the property right of the few, while the privilege of the many was to permit the few to wear them. Nowadays, instead of crowns for the few, there somehow obtains the notion that there ought to be crowns for the many—crowns enough to go around." The bishop argued that such ambition was not, in itself, wrong, but was a natural expression of healthful democracy. "There is, however, another feeling that is beginning to work," he said, "that the crown of human life is something to be found in life itself, not in what it has, or hopes to have. The true and proper crown of a democratic age is not circumstance, but character." Loyalty in service to the end insures the crown of character and eternal life:

Be thou faithful unto death, and I will give thee a crown of life. (Rev. 2: 10.)

Operation Checked "Black Death"

IN a remarkable operation in St. Agnes Hospital, Philadelphia, in April, a piece of the skull of James McMonigal, aged three years, was lifted out and a thorough cleansing given to certain affected parts of the brain. The boy had been stricken with tubercular meningitis. The hospital authorities claim that the boy was brought to them in the last stages of "black death," and that the operation is going to restore him to health. What a menace will be taken away from the life of childhood and the happiness of the family if there can be found a certain cure for this terrible malady that has meant death to so large a proportion of the victims it has attacked! Christ can cure the moral and spiritual maladies of old and young, if his remedy is accepted. The boy's brain was washed and cleansed by the surgeons; Christ washes and cleanses the heart. For this cleansing and cure of sin the psalmist thus prays:

Purge me with hyssop, and I shall be clean: wash me, and I shall be whiter than snow. (Ps. 51: 7.)

$10,000 Too Small

THE daughter of one of the wealthiest and most influential families in this country applied to the courts through her guardian recently for an increase of the annual allowance of $10,000, left her by her parents, to $15,000. The young lady is eighteen years of age, and the will provides that a very much larger income will be allowed her each year when she shall have reached the age of twenty-one. When a majority of the men of this country are compelled to support families on less than a tenth of that amount; when there are thousands of girls in their teens in stores, shops, and offices compelled to live on from $7 to $10 a week, it does seem that this daughter of wealth might have managed, with reasonable economy, to have gotten along on an income of $200 a week. Had she asked the court for the increased allowance to help a hundred widows, or orphans, to aid a hospital or a struggling church, the request might have been justifiable; but to ask for another hundred added to the two hundred dollars a week to keep up a certain standard of luxury leaves ground for criticism. Fortunately, our present civilization and a better knowledge in the school of Christ recognize the emptiness of earthly luxury and vanity as compared with the sweet ministry of service to which the Lord's children have been called. No charge to wealth, ancient or modern, is superior to that of the apostle, who cautions against the pride that sometimes tempts it, and thus enjoins benevolence:

That they do good, that they be rich in good works, ready to distribute, willing to communicate; laying up in store for themselves a good foundation against the time to come. (I Tim. 6: 18, 19.)

CHAPTER III

Wherein We Are Introduced to the Mining Camp of Cañon Creek

THE mining camp of Cañon Creek was so named with singular and characteristic lack of imagination because of its location solely. It was in a cañon and on a creek. The village, if by such a pastoral and idyllic name it might be called, rejoiced in the fact that it supported two saloons and gambling houses, with other questionable resorts. It was not especially concerned or troubled over the further fact that it had no church, and no religious observance of any kind, within its borders. It cannot be said that Sunday was kept just the same as any other day in the camp. On the contrary, it was observed quite differently. This fact was not due in which any especial pride was taken, but nevertheless it was true that Cañon Creek made a pretense of keeping at least the spirit of one of the Ten Commandments, in that it did no work on the first day of the week. However, it would be futile to claim that there was any religious motive back of the once-a-week abstention from labor in Cañon Creek.

The patronage of the two saloons was a more or less continuous performance every evening. It began to approach its maximum on Saturday night, and it reached its climax very early on Sunday morning, while it was as dark naturally outside as it was morally inside, in spite of the glare of kerosene lamp or tallow dip.

In short, from quitting-work time on midnight daily throughout the week, Cañon Creek was as bad as it could be, and it could be pretty bad. And from quitting-work time on Saturday evening until any time at all on Sunday morning, noon, or night, as the case might be, it was even worse than it was throughout the week. I do not mean to say that everybody was all bad, even in Cañon Creek, or even that everybody there had fallen to the same low level of moral indifference and degradation. Not at all! There are degrees among sinners, even if there be no degrees of hell to grow. And this was true of Cañon Creek as of the greater world beyond the sky line of the mountains.

Cañon Creek usually did some work, too. It had to work to live. "He that will not labor, neither shall he eat," was just as true of this camp as it was of old Judea or of Jamestown.

The principal industries of the town, aside from gambling, drinking and murder, which last rose sometimes to the dignity of a profession, not to say a fine art, were trading and mining—prospecting, rather. The everlasting hills around the basin of huts and hovels that made up the camp were filled with precious metals and covered with prospectors, not so precious in their own eyes or those of any one else. The businesses of the place, its distance from the connecting link with civilization, the railroad, the vast expense of transportation, the fact that there were other and richer fields nearer and more accessible, had saved it from that sudden mushroom growth which had turned cities into mining camps over night, and mining camps into towns and towns into cities, almost within as many days.

The rather desultory work done by the inhabitants in mining, hunting, and trading produced plenty of money for food and drink and play. The Indians in the territory around about brought in hides and pelts, as whatever they could, to get their coveted opportunity to indulge in the pastimes most prevalent in the community. Like their white exemplars, they, too, drank and played.

Architecturally there was no beauty or significance in the buildings of the camp. The men and what few women there were lived in rude shacks hastily put together and set down scramblingly anywhere on the mountain side. The general stores were of somewhat better construction and, of course, were larger buildings. The saloons and gambling houses, in reality mean enough to resemble outwardly their inward purpose, were almost palatial in appearance when compared with their squalid surroundings. In winter they were warm; in summer, cool; and always inviting.

But as I have said, Cañon Creek was not all bad. As there is some bad in the best and some good in the worst of us, so was this true of this and every other mining camp of that bygone day. The desire thereof were not always drunk, nor did they always gamble. Although the good was, it must be admitted, mostly latent, it was evidentially there, as occasion sometimes demonstrated. Sometimes the miner on the mountains high uplifted, the hunter ranging the forest glades, gave a thought to God, and frequently these came to them, alone in the everlasting hills, tender recollections of happier days, purer hours, and sweeter lives. Childhood memories, mother touches, faces of fathers were not all obliterated from the recollection. Sometimes in the morning Cañon Creek awoke ashamed of itself, and plunged frantically into work.

But the whole place lacked leadership in the moral field. There was nothing to precipitate the latent goodness and everything worked to keep it in solution, as it were. The camp did not know it, would have denied it strenuously, but it was waiting for a response and a responder to the God touch. Now the Hand of the Divine was being tendered it, as always, but the moral sentiment of the town lacked a focus. It could feel vaguely, it was dimly conscious, but that consciousness was wanting in definiteness.

Cañon Creek was as lawless as most mining camps in those days; but it was not altogether and entirely without some sort of law and some sort of order. Man has never been able to get along without some kind of law, and without some kind of enforcement of it—not even in a Garden of Eden, to his sorrow! If murder was committed in the camp, justice was not unknown, or the administration of it, albeit both were of the rough-and-ready kind and "Judge Lynch" was the only presiding officer of the frontier court, if it got that far before any individual took upon himself the ancient rôle of an avenger of blood.

There was also growing up a certain sort of zeal for God in the community, as expressed in a rude craving for justice, fair dealing, and some kind of regulation, even without an expressed knowledge of him and quite unrecognizable even by the most zealous. And this was the best feature of the situation: that half-conscious zeal was growing. This tendency to be fair and to be square and to put a higher value on life than the cheap estimate of the earlier days, this yearning after order, was actually increasing.

Here and there, on this particular Sunday morning, some, at least, of the men of Cañon Creek were beginning to recall that the Lord's Day was designed for other purposes than mere physical pleasure or physical rest. No one would have confessed it, but there were in more than one heart secret aspirations for something religious. To be sure, these aspirations usually came most forcibly to the man who had been "cleaned out" the night before, who had lost everything at the gambling table, even the means to buy a drink. But however they came and to whomsoever they came, they were there. Man has never yet been able to get along without some kind of a religion. When two or three are gathered together, sooner or later there is inevitably God.

The week preceding the Sunday with which we have to do had been an unusually fortunate one for prospectors. Several rich "pockets" had been found; the washings of the river had resulted in more than wonted treasure. The pleasant days of the spring had been fruitful in trade. There had been an abundant supply of gold dust, nuggets, and even real money to spend Saturday night. And it had been spent freely. More liquor had been drunk, more treasure had been won, and incidentally more had been lost—for it cannot be gainsaid that whatever is won by somebody must be lost by somebody else—than on any previous Saturday night in the recollection of the oldest denizen of the place.

The camp awoke very late that Sunday morning, feeling distinctly sick of and disgusted with it all; that is, the great majority of it did. The lucky few who had won from the reckless, mutable many had carefully put away their winnings and had gone to bed to deep the sleep of the satisfied—the gorged bird of prey. What dreams might come would be determined later. So Cañon Creek as a whole crawled out of its shacks, out of conceit with the camp, down on its luck, with a raging headache, a sick view of life, a loathing of self and fellow men, and in a bad, bad humor.

"Why in thunder," said one of the leading citizens, "ain't there no religion in this yere blamed town?"

LEBRON BEE ARMED YET UNARMED, CARRIED OLAF INTO THE HOUSE

THE CHRISTIAN AS A GOOD STEWARD*

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON BY DR. AND MRS. WILBUR F. CRAFTS

THE unjust steward, upon whom Jesus commented as he taught his followers, may have been an actual case—probably was. t least there were just such men to e found in Palestine, on all sides. We ould say the steward was "loose" in ie management of his master's af- irs and quite deserved dismissal. He ntinued his dishonesty by the way e took to make friends for the time hen he should be adrift. In doing is he still further defrauded his aster by forging in part those who ere indebted to his master. He falsi- ed accounts—that of one debtor he ade one-half, of another he took off venty per cent. Of course the two ebtors felt under obligation to the eward, and they were won as his iends. And the changes made orked in still another way: that is, ie steward seemed not to have wasted much of his master's substance as e had been charged with. He was ven commended by his lord that "he ad done wisely."

What had Jesus to say about it? hat the steward had shown himself oth shrewd and prudent, but in a bad use. Jesus recommended a like agacity on the part of his disciples nd followers. In substance he said: By using money with prudence like at of the unjust steward, but under higher motive, gain for yourselves iends rather than estates and man- ons. Mammon (money) is not to be ade a friend, but to be used in mak- g friends of such persons as widows nd orphans, and those who are unfor- nate. They will be waiting in eaven to welcome you as their bene- actors." On another occasion Jesus ounseled his followers to be as "wise s serpents." Matt. 10: 16. When esus spoke of the "mammon of un- ighteousness," he meant the deceitful ature of earthly wealth.

At this point in the lesson we should onsider the Golden Text: "He that is aithful in a very little is faithful also n much, and he that is unrighteous n a very little is unrighteous also in uch." These words also were spoken y Jesus. May we not put them into ur everyday language thus: If you ake a right use of your money it will e seen that you can be trusted with he spiritual riches God has to bestow. nother part of the Golden Text is: He that is unrighteous in a very lit- le is unrighteous also in much." It vas as if Jesus had said: "Those who heat and steal and lie when they have noney to handle are not to be trusted vith what pertains to God." Let each f us search his own heart and life vith these sayings of Jesus. Would hat each one of us might deserve the ame epitaph placed on our tombs that vas placed on the tomb of Alotus at Rheims: "He exported his fortune efore him into heaven by his chari- ies. He has gone thither to enjoy it."

The deeds which selfish hearts approve
And fame's loud trumpet sings,
Secure no praise where truth and love
Are counted noblest things;
And work which godless folly deems
Worthless, obscure and lowly
To heaven's ennobling vision seems Most godlike, grand, and holy.

DEWART.

Let us imagine an outer circle gath- ered around the disciples of Jesus. They were the Pharisees, who had come to listen to him that they might find fault with him, but Jesus meant that his words should have a special meaning for them, for he regarded them as the unjust stewards of the law and the prophets. It has been said of the Pharisees that "they had used their self-esteemed holiness for their own profit in worldly things." It was they who had made the house of the Lord "a den of thieves." "Their unfitness to be entrusted with the true riches of the kingdom of heaven was the burden of Jesus' arraignment of them." Even to-day there are people of that kind; we do not call them "Pharisees," but "hypocrites," and that was a term used by Christ. It should be our concern not to hunt them out, but to take good care that we do not get into their class. A father wrote a letter to his son, who was just coming into young manhood: "You are now at that period of life in which you must make a turn to the right or to the left. You must now give proof of principle, determination, and strength of mind; or you must sink into idleness, and acquire the habits and character of an ineffective young man. I am sure that a young man may be very much what he pleases. In my own case it was so. Much of my happiness and all my prosperity in life have resulted from the change I made at your age. The longer I live the more certain I am that the great difference between men, between the feeble and the powerful, the great and the insignificant, is energy, invincible determination—a purpose once fixed, and then death or victory." That is good as far as it goes, but it does not go far enough: it does not take hold on God.

Dr. Guthrie, the eminent Scotch minister, once said in a sermon to young men: "Not simply to the wind, however auspicious, does the seaman owe his progress. Without it indeed his ship would but rise and fall in the swell of the deep; but without the skill to catch and use the breeze, and compel it when adverse, by dexterous trimming of the yards, and setting of the sails, and handling of the helm, to force him on and over the waves, what service were the wind to him? So was it in Joseph's and so it is in all cases of success. God gives the opportunities, but success turns on the use made of them; on the promptitude with which we seize the openings of Providence; on the weight of character we bring into the field; on the resolution and energy we throw into the business." In two words it may all be expressed: Consecrated energy. The unjust steward had energy, but not consecrated energy.

William George Jordan has said: "When a man fails in life, he usually says: 'I am as God made me.' When he succeeds he proudly proclaims himself 'a self-made man.' Man is placed in this world not as a finality, but as a possibility. Man's greatest enemy is himself. Man in his weakness is the creature of circumstances, man in his strength is the creator of circumstances. Whether he be victim or victor depends largely upon himself. Until man be truly filled with the knowledge of the majesty of his possibility, until there comes to him the glow of realization of his privilege to live the life committed to him as an individual life for which he is individually responsible, he is merely groping through the years."

Men talk of ownership, but God's word is stewardship. As the public has begun to realize how little a man can really earn himself, and how much he owes to the work of his predecessors and contemporaries, and especially to God who furnishes the raw material, such as gold, silver, minerals, etc., more and more it is expected—almost demanded—that people who have amassed fortunes by aid of favoring circumstances, partly by public laws and franchises and patents, without which their wealth would vanish in an hour, shall use them in part for the public good as stewards of the nation's prosperity as well as stewards of God.

Successful or faithful—which shall it be for you and for me? We have searched the Bible through, and we can find no promise for success, but we do find many promises for faithfulness such as "A faithful man shall abound with blessings." Prov. 28: 20. "Well done, thou good and faithful servant. . . . I will make thee ruler over many things." Matt. 25:21. "Be thou faithful unto death, and I will give thee a crown of life." Rev. 2: 10.

Two young men came one day to a farm seeking work. They had their axes with them, and they were sent to the edge of the swamp, where there was an extensive woodland. They were instructed to cut the wood in four-foot lengths, and make piles of them eight feet long and four feet high—that is, they were to cord the wood, and they were to be paid for as many cords as they should cut. After three days the owner of the farm went to examine their work. He was disappointed to find that the sticks they had cut varied from three to five feet in length, and it was piled in a tumble-down fashion. When the farmer expressed his dissatisfaction, one of the young men exclaimed, "Oh, well, it will average about right." "But," replied the employer, "I can not sell wood by the 'average.' I sell it by the cord, which is exactly four feet high and eight feet in length." Of course the two young men lost their job. If they had not been discharged the farmer would soon have lost his reputation for selling an honest cord of wood. Unfaithfulness and dishonesty are riveted links of a chain which cannot be severed—one is sure to follow the other. Do you not remember that it was the unfaithful steward who plotted to cheat his master out of what was due him?

Look at that boy sitting at his desk in his school; his history is lying open, but if you will watch him for a few minutes you will notice that he does not turn a page of it. Observe him still more closely and you will see that he has a paper-covered book down under his desk that he is reading most intently. It is a story of robbery and murder. He turns the leaves often. Presently his class-mate sitting beside him gives him a nudge and tells him it is "time to recite." "But I don't know a word," he replies, "you'll have to prompt me." It was hard for a good boy to consent to do that, but he did it. At first the teacher did not discover the game, but when she did, both boys were reprimanded and disgraced. One might say probably that the boy who had learned his lesson and was able to prompt his class-mate was not as dishonest as the other. This would make a good subject for a debate in a boys' class in the Sunday school, so we will suggest it, and not try to answer it ourselves. We will ask this question, however: Was the boy who did the prompting at all like the unjust steward whom Jesus described?

Jesus said: "Ye can not serve God and mammon." That would be like a servant trying to serve two masters. But we can serve God with mammon. That does not mean we shall give what is sometimes called "spare cash," that which is left over after we have satisfied all of our wants, gratified all of our tastes and imaginations; the amount left over would be all too small. But rather let us spend little upon ourselves and give the larger part to God's work in the world.

* THE INTERNATIONAL SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON for Sunday, May 10, 1914. The Unjust Steward. Luke 16: 1-13. GOLDEN TEXT: "He that is faithful in a very little is faithful also in much; and he that is unrighteous in a very little is unrighteous also in much." Luke 16: 10.

ENJOYS EVERY DEPARTMENT

Why do I subscribe for THE CHRISTIAN HERALD another year? Because it brings the whole world to me; and, seated in my armchair, before the fireside, I can gaze out into the unattainable and there see that man has yet a great task to fulfil—the salvation of the world for Christ. I enjoy every department of the periodical, especially the weekly sermons, which give me "at home," through a happy medium, the best in pulpit thought and action.

In the weekly class of news magazines, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD leads a long line of American endeavors to give the people what they most need; what they least appreciate. Rightly named—the Herald of Christianity.

Wishing you every success in your great task for man and God, I beg to remain,

THE YOUNG PEOPLE'S MEETINGS

NOTES ON THE CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR, EPWORTH LEAGUE AND BAPTIST YOUNG PEOPLE'S UNION TOPICS

Our Bodies for Christ*

IT TAKES us a long time to get acquainted with our bodies, and find out what they are really for. The relation of the body to the personal desires and motives is a subject that the wisest men investigate and ponder, and differ about. In earliest life the problem is easy. The new baby's wants are very simple: it wants to eat, to sleep, and to be kept free from pain. Its body rules it altogether. Hunger brings distress to the tiny baby mind, and leads to tears and cries; and the tears and cries bring food. Or pain leads to a somewhat different kind of tears and cries, and these bring mysterious relief.

But as the mind develops the child learns that the things the body wants not always bring satisfaction. Too much food or a certain kind of food, even though it appear very attractive, will bring pain. Still later another kind of distress begins to be noted. The body suggests that something forbidden be eaten or some forbidden act indulged in. Then there comes a nauseating sense of guilt, worse than physical pain. The mind at length awakens to a great fact: "The body is a poor guide, a poor master."

Other hopes and desires come thronging in with the years. We observe people with all sorts of attitudes toward their bodies. Some continue to be slaves of their bodies and bring their lives to ruin. Some choose other kinds of bad impulses and use their bodies to aid them in the wrongs they commit. The thief or murderer, the hard business man, the dishonest politician, use their hands and feet and tongues to do wrong to other people. And the sensible young observer of human life sees that this way of living is unwise and in the end unprofitable.

There is one other way to consider the body. Some people seem to use it as an instrument for helping others. And this strikes the thoughtful observer as a really rational and profitable plan. Moreover, it is a plan advised and recommended by the world's greatest Teacher, and commanded by him of those who would become his followers.

When we accept this plan of life and begin to follow it out, we find that matters which before were perplexing become simple. We find that every detail of life can be fitted into this program with beautiful harmony. Particularly is this so when we recognize fully that this Christ, who has shown us what our bodies are for, and how to use them, must be the center of all our thinking and acting. We give our bodies to him, to be used at his direction for helping others in just the way he would help them if he were here in the flesh as he was two thousand years ago.

Every problem then about right and wrong, as it concerns the body, narrows itself down to this simple question: "Will this make my body less efficient or more efficient in its work of helping others?" Our bodies are simply machines, machines under the control of Christ for carrying on his task of saving and blessing and helping men. We dare not do anything that will harm them, any more than we could harm a machine in the factory of a man for whom we were working. We cannot fail to do anything which would enable us to turn out more and better and more perfect work.

You have known men or boys who were "in training." It was not hard for them to deny themselves the sweets and pastries and stimulants. They were doing something they liked better than these indulgences. They were making their muscles hard, their nerves strong and their brains alert for the contests at hand. They wanted to win, for the honor of their school or college or town. So we are playing a game, the winning of which means the keenest delight that can possibly come to a human soul. We do not want to invite defeat or to make our victories less glorious by weakening our bodies and lessening our skill through foolish indulgences.

This lesson should be led by a physician, a Christian physician, one who understands the body and its laws, and who understands the claims and purposes and promises of Christ. He will emphasize the need of wholesome food, of plenty of sleep, of the avoidance of stimulants, of plenty of exercise, of high ideals, of good habits. He will specially emphasize the power and importance of habit. Real miracles can be accomplished by the training of the mind and will and body, particularly under the power of our Christ. We can train ourselves to a scorn and distaste of everything that is degrading and harmful as we develop, through Christ's help, our ambitions and our skill for doing good.

Notice the lesson study for the Epworth League on this same page. You will find there some additional hints about the right use of the body.

The Laws of God's Kindness*

THE Epworth League official who framed the subject of our meeting to-night deserves the heartiest thanks of every one who will try to study or teach or speak upon or consider the lesson in any way: "Framing God's compassion into laws."

If every one of us could get those words stamped on his brain and firmly woven into his soul we should find it ever after easier to do good and harder to do wrong.

What, then, are God's laws? Why does he tell us not to do this, and command us to do that? Are they whims of his, those great laws? Does he want to spoil our good time and make us uncomfortable and miserable?

Not at all. Every law of God is an expression of his love. He asks us to do certain things because he knows that the doing of them will bring us most real and most lasting happiness. We are apt to think of God's promises as signs of his kindness and his laws as signs of his sternness and justice. But this is a great mistake. Love lies back of all. His commands are just as truly the signs of his love as the promises. Back of every law is the Father's great and changeless love.

How shall we keep his law, then? By coming to love him. Christ, by the power of his death on the cross, can so change our hearts that we shall really and truly love God. Then his laws shall be no longer irksome, but delightful. We shall see in every one of them a proof of his love. We shall come to understand that he is longing for the salvation and happiness of every human being, and we shall joyously and valiantly ally ourselves with those who are working to have the laws and customs of earth coincide with our Father's will so that his will may indeed be done on earth as it is done in heaven.

One thing more. We see that God's laws have his love back of them. Does this not imply that with every law there may come the power to keep it? Every law is a promise. It is a promise that by his grace we shall have power to keep the law. Ezekiel, in that wonderful prophecy of the work of the Holy Spirit, combines beautifully the promise and the law: "And I will put my Spirit within you, and cause you to walk in my statutes, and ye shall keep my judgments, and do them." (Ezek. 36: 27.)

A World-Full of Children

Gain Much of Their Vitality from Luscious Quaker Oats

For 25 years, tens of millions of children have been brought up on Quaker Oats.

They have gained from it energy and vim—better brains and nerves and bodies. The delightful flavor has led them to love it and to eat it in abundance. We figure that five million children each morning breakfast on this food of foods.

Stop and think what this dish has contributed to their sturdiness and strength.

That could never have been so were it not for this flavor. It is this taste and aroma which win the children to the food you know they need.

Quaker Oats

The Big, Rich, Luscious Flakes

Quaker Oats is made only from the cream of the oats—from the rich, plump grains alone. All the puny grains are discarded. A bushel of choice oats yields but ten pounds of Quaker.

The result is these large and luscious flakes, fragrant and inviting. And those flakes have won the world.

You will find Quaker Oats in nearly every grocery, and it is always as we describe. Never will any but the choicest grains be used in making Quaker.

Now a 25c Size

Our new large package — for 25 cents — gives you nearly three times what the 10-cent size gives. All by saving in packing. Try it next time — see how long it lasts.

You can get it always, without extra price, by simply saying Quaker. And sight, taste and aroma will all point out the extra quality.

Then serve it at least once daily for its vim-producing powers. If there are growing children, twice a day is better. This is Nature's premier food for growth.

Well, religion is not an artificial problem. Neither is it to be found walking abroad seeking whom it may devour—that is Satan's privilege and habit. Nor is religion ever extraneous to the individual. It has taken mankind, collectively and individually, centuries to comprehend even partially the statement of its Lord as to just where the kingdom of heaven is to be found—not without, but within! It was to be found somewhere in Cañon Creek, doubtless; but like the precious metals, it had to be mined for, and there was no miner at hand.

Came into Cañon Creek on that Sunday morning a precipitant. It arrived in the shape of a small pack train, Indian ponies and Mexican burros, loaded with hides, skins, and various plunder, together with three broncos quite differently burdened. The biggest and ugliest was bestridden by a tall, hard, desperate-looking individual who was known as Dead Shot Jackson. What his real name was did not matter; nor would it help matters much to make any inquiry. Men found it profitable not to inquire too particularly into the real names or the former careers of their fellows. They took the names given, or applied some appropriate sobriquet, provided it was willingly accepted, and said nothing. They had little concern with the past, less with the future. They lived in the present.

To return to the pack train; across each of the other two broncos was lashed a human body. A glance told even the inexperienced—and the men of Cañon Creek were not that in such grave matters—that one was dead and the other living. One lay limp and inert, swaying in its lashing with every movement of the horse; the other seemed to breathe defiance at every jolting footstep of the animal. Driving the burros and ponies before him, Dead Shot Jackson stopped before the nearest saloon.

He dropped to the ground the reins of the bronco he rode, threw his long, heavily booted leg clumsily over the saddle, and slid awkwardly to the road himself, leaving his loads of merchandise, human and otherwise, dead and living, to the care of the crowding citizens who came toward him from all directions, their interest aroused by the dramatic possibilities of the situation.

Credit was not extended in Cañon Creek, by the way. That wonderful development of modern economics by which business is carried on had not been arrived at in the present state of the evolution of the camp. You might die of thirst for liquor, but unless you could pay for it in gold, or nuggets, or hides, and other things of more tangible value than a word or promise, you could die. Water was to be had freely—water of the sweetest, the softest, the purest quality—in the brook that had its source in the everlasting snows a little distance overhead. But water, in the unwritten creed of the camp, was good for beasts, not for man.

Yet whenever a man was reduced to the last extremity by wounds, gunshot or otherwise, it was always for water he cried, just as the Name that was upon his lips under such conditions was a Name with which he was perfectly familiar, but which he ordinarily used in an entirely different sense. But then, Canon Creek was not philosophic. It did not wonder why the dying craved water, or said piteously, "My God." Truth to tell, it did not concern itself much about the dying, or what he said. Life—passionate, intense, exhausting, terrible—was the main thing. The future and whatever it held could care for itself.

Dead Shot Jackson thrust himself into the nearest saloon, which rejoiced in the historic name of The Black Pup because it was the youngest and latest addition to these forces of civilization. The newcomer slammed a little nugget of silver down on the bar, struck the pine slab with his big hand, and roared in his great voice:

"Drink! And be quick about it!"

The barkeeper philosophically put a bottle and glass before his imperious customer, and while the latter poured out for himself as much as he wanted—an amazing quantity, by the way—the former slipped the little nugget into a pair of scales with a dexterity begotten of long experience, estimated its value to himself, and proceeded to make change. But Dead Shot Jackson, being in a generous and incidentally a politic mood, waved the change aside with a proud air in front of the drunkards in the saloon, some of them "all-nighters," and invited the whole company to be his guests on this occasion.

Dead Shot Jackson, who was the center of an admiring throng and the object of an agreeable curiosity, but with whom no one dared to take the desperate risk of questioning concerning his prisoner, presently stepped outside the saloon. He was followed by most of those inside, and was thus, with those who had assembled upon the news of his arrival, surrounded by pretty much the whole population of the town. It was a delightful moment for the desperado and the bully. Men such as he live on adulation. He strode through the crowd until he reached the two broncos. Standing on one of the rocky boulders in the street, if street it could be called, which no one had cared to have removed, he began a carefully prepared address.

That very same morning, shortly after the arrival of Dead Shot Jackson, a very small, a very dusty, a very tired, a very heartsick, a very frightened little boy had drifted into the camp some distance in his wake. Little Olaf Tryggvesson had caught up with Dead Shot Jackson during the night. Recognizing him in the moonlight, he had not joined him for obvious reasons. But he had not lost sight of him, himself unseen. Although the man was a murderer and everything else that was wicked apparently, he was still a man, and the lad had kept close enough to him to call upon him for help if need be. Bad as he was, in an emergency he might be a protection against the ghostly and animal terrors with which the boy's imagination filled that dreadful night.

The narrowing, ever-mounting trail up the gorge, or cañon, at times was a terrible one, easier perhaps for footmen than for horsemen, and the boy had without difficulty kept within sight and hearing of the man without attracting attention to himself. When day broke, however, he had been forced to conceal himself from any possible backward glance of Mr. Jackson's, and therefore he did not reach the town until some time after that estimable gentleman, who little knew what vengeance was dogging his steps.

Olaf stopped at the first house he came to. Fortune, Providence rather, had led him to the very best place, almost the only place, in the long straggling line of "shacks" that marked out what was fatuously called the main street, where he could be sure of decent treatment. There lived in that shack a man who was known by the sobriquet of Parson Bill. The name had been bestowed upon him, not because he possessed or exhibited any of the conventional attributes of the preacher, but on account of the wonderful flow of language—bad morally, but on occasion quite classic in its vocabulary—in which the gentleman was wont to indulge when in his cups or very much moved.

"He talks jest like a parson," said one, when overwhelmed on one occasion with an astonishing flow of words; and this happy characterization seemed so suited to the person to whom it was applied that it had stuck, he himself making no objection.

Parson Bill had been at heart a gentleman—and at heart he was one still.

HAYNES
AMERICA'S FIRST CAR

Motorists Who Drove Haynes Cars in the Early Days Still Drive the Haynes

Twenty-one years ago, Elwood Haynes built the "horseless carriage"—the little machine that gave birth to the American automobile industry. Ever since then, Haynes cars have been built, year in, year out, without interruption.

And during these twenty-one years, Haynes owners have been demonstrating in "road races," "reliability runs," in "hill climbs" of every description, under all conditions, in this country and abroad, with themselves the only "competitors," that the

is a good car, and that, given ordinary care and attention, the Haynes remains a good car, a mighty good car—indefinitely.

That's why these owners, after years of service, again purchase a Haynes. That's why such a large percentage of the Haynes annual production is sold every season to owners of old Haynes cars. That's why you should investigate the Haynes before you buy any car.

Elwood Haynes was ahead of the times when he built the first Haynes, back in '93. He is ahead of the times now in adopting the greatest automobile refinement in recent years—the Vulcan Electric Gear Shift. This device eliminates the hand-shift lever entirely, and so simplifies the control of the Haynes that anyone may readily drive it. With it, the Haynes is electrically controlled throughout, inasmuch as gear-shifting, starting, lighting and ignition are accomplished by electricity.

TO HONOR "WILLIAM THE SILENT"

NEW YORK is to have a monumental statue of William the Silent and the Holland Society purposes to raise the nds. That illustrious statesman s thus far received little recognition America and particularly in this y, of which he might almost be rded as the founder. It was because him that the Dutch Republic arose d began its colonial expansion.

Indeed, it was largely because of illiam the Silent that Puritanism ose to so great strength in England d sent its colonies hither. In the igns of Edward VI and Elizabeth ns of thousands of Dutchmen settled England, especially at Norwich and that other city of Worsted, which as once a place of great importance, t the very name of which is now rgotten excepting as applied to the ods which were manufactured there. f course, the story of the English lgrims at Leyden is familiar to every hoolboy.

It was the revolt of William the lent against Philip II of Spain that arted the entire train of events hich led to the foundation of New ork, and he of all men is to be rded as the patron saint of the nickerbocker City.

William, Prince of Orange and unt of Nassau, born at Dillenburg, assau, on April 25, 1533, had a caer strangely resembling in some spects that of the great Albanian ro, Scanderbeg. On his stalwart ung shoulder Charles V leaned in 55 at the ceremony of his abdication favor of Philip II, and he succeeded the good graces of the latter monch to such an extent as to be entrusted with the command of his army ainst France. It was while he was a nspicuous member of the Spanish urt that he acquired the name of The Silent." This was given to him t because of his lack but rather of his scretion of speech, for he was in fact particularly fluent and charming nversationalist and an eloquent ator. But he never spoke without st carefully thinking.

It is not necessary here to rehearse en in epitome the marvelous story his revolt against the Spanish ranny in the Low Countries and his ars of indomitable conflict against what seemed hopelessly overwhelming odds. There is no more superbly heroic chapter in the history of the world. It was an achievement which secured the liberation of the Netherlands, which enormously encouraged and facilitated the triumph of freedom and human rights in England and elsewhere, and which made an indelible impress upon the shores of the New World.

In the eloquent words of his American historian: "He went through life bearing the load of a people's sorrows upon his shoulders with a smiling face. Their name was the last word upon his lips, save the simple affirmative with which the soldier who had been battling for the right all his lifetime commended his soul in dying 'to his great Captain, Christ.' As long as he lived he was the guiding star of a whole brave nation, and when he died the little children cried in the streets."—From the New York Herald, April 12.

The foregoing announcement of the projected statue in New York to "William the Silent" is of universal interest at this time. William of Nassau was the prince who, though a Catholic by inheritance and training, patriotically espoused the cause of the Netherland Protestants during the period of their terrible oppression by their own Catholic monarch, augmented by the power of Catholic Spain, then a dominant factor in Europe. The Inquisition was established in the Netherlands and nameless tortures were inflicted upon the people. Massacres were frequent. At last the people rose in defense of their religious and civil rights. William led the rebellion until the great wrong on the Netherlanders was redressed. He founded the Dutch Republic. One of his biographers pays this glowing tribute to his character: "In a dark and troublous time, when his country, by the persecution of her foes, was brought to the very verge of ruin, his invincible will and calm defiance still stood upright in the storm. Not all the honors and distinctions which Philip of Spain, or indeed all the sovereigns of Europe, could offer were sufficient to seduce him from the high and straight path of duty. He lived without fear and died without reproach."

lthough he would have protested gainst any personal deprivation from ie pleasant pursuits of the "gents" the camp, whose language he spoke id whose vocations he shared, and though he did not commonly justify is title in speech until he was drunk, excited, he was, at heart, still an onorable man. He could not cover up disguise that fact. Everybody recgnized it. His word was as good as is bond. Nobody disputed it. He ad never engaged in any shooting crapes. There had never been any ecessity for him to do so, although e had often gambled and lost money. fe was excessively amusing when runk, and not unsociable when sober. his was not a cheerful situation for ne "gentleman." He wanted to be ust like the rest, and that was one of ie reasons why he very carefully ried to be so when he was sober; except that he told no lies, and he did no urder, and, if he could possibly help , he did not fight. Yet no one entertained the slightest suspicion of his ourage.

Parson Bill, after a hard night of ambling and drinking and a short, roubled sleep, was already awake hen the small figure of little Olaf ryggvesson practically collapsed in is doorway. Parson Bill stared in pen-mouthed wonder and surprise at ne little lad, for there were no children in the camp, not a single one. he sight was amazing. The big iner—Bill stood six feet in his gray oolen socks and was broad-shouldered accordingly—was filled with surprise and dismay, and yet he enjoyed a distinctly pleasurable sensation at the sight of the newcomer. He picked the boy up, carried him into the house, and set him down on the rough plank shelf or bunk which served for a bed, and little Olaf suffered him gladly and without demur. With the unerring instinct of a child he divined that here was a friend, a man to be trusted—a gentleman, indeed.

Parson Bill had something of a woman's intuition. He did not ask any questions; he brought soap, water, and a towel. He was a finicky chap, and the camp thought this towel business was part of it. He washed the grimy face and hands of the lad. There was a rude stove in the shack, on which water was boiling in a kettle. Ripping open a can of soup, he soon had the savory mess hot. Together with some hardtack, he placed it before the youngster.

This kindness was too much for the soul of the boy. He stared into the grave face of his host and burst into tears. The towel soon dried these, however, and the soup and hardtack began rapidly to disappear. Not until he had finished, greatly refreshed thereby, did his considerate host ask him any questions.

In the narration of his adventures little Olaf had got as far as his leaving the train and his wandering up the trail, when the conference was interrupted by the arrival of a messenger.

Let Them Get the Same Beans at Home

Men who lunch down-town, in cities, find in countless places a remarkable dish of Baked Beans.

The Beans are whole and mellow. A piquant Sauce is baked into them. A slice of tender pork lies on top.

Men like those Beans. Legions daily go to places which serve them. And many a lunch room owes its fame to this perfect dish of Beans.

Those places by the thousands buy Van Camp's. Even Broadway hotels serve Van Camp's. For they cannot match this dish. They know it, and they long ago ceased to try.

VAN CAMP'S
PORK & BEANS BAKED WITH TOMATO SAUCE
Also Baked Without the Sauce

The only way to serve such Beans is to do as they do—buy Van Camp's. The Beans must be selected by laboratory analysis. They must be tested by sample bakings.

The Sauce must be made from tomatoes specially grown; from certain seed, on certain soil, and ripened on the vines. Then it requires rare skill to compose it. We employ for the purpose a famous Parisian chef.

Costly ovens are needed to bake in this way, so the Beans come out mellow, uncrisped and whole.

These facilities are unique, such materials are rare, and this skill is inimitable. Find out what a dish they combine to produce and you will always want Van Camp's in your home.

That will lead you, we hope, to try other Van Camp Delicacies. We have spent years and fortunes to give to them the qualities you like.

NEW OPPORTUNITIES—OLD IDEALS

WE MIGHT be far less particular in the matter of our advertising columns, less "scrupulously exacting," as we are sometimes called, without even appreciably lowering our standards. But we want advertisers who are particular about the company they keep; adver-ers whom we can take the same pride in introducing to the Christian Herald mily as we would in making one friend acquainted with another.

We are not satisfied that the advertising pages of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD all present a high standard; we want to establish the highest standard. Just THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is foremost in spreading the doctrines of Right and uth and Brotherly Love, so we believe it should rank foremost among the tter magazines in the clean, white precedent of its advertising.

There is always, too, the thought that more advertising means ultimately re reading columns and that with a bigger and more beautiful CHRISTIAN RALD comes a larger field for its work.

Every time you patronize an advertiser in these pages, you help us, by your pport of one whose support we need to carry on this work. In return we dge you our guarantee:

Should any subscriber be defrauded by an advertiser in THE CHRISTIAN RALD we will make good the claim, provided only that the subscriber—who ust be of good standing on our books—has mentioned THE CHRISTIAN HERALD writing to the advertiser, and has also made the claim to us within two months the appearance of the advertisement. This guarantee does not apply to vestment advertisements.

Your Walls Must Be Right

You can tear out a faulty heating system. You can re-lay poor floors. But the construction of your walls must be right in the first place. The permanence and beauty of inside plaster and outside stucco depend upon the wall base. The base that is absolutely reliable under all sorts of conditions is

Kno-Burn
Expanded Metal Lath

Plasterers do good work and quick work over "Kno-Burn" because it is rigid and offers a smooth surface to the trowel. It expands and contracts with the plaster when the temperature changes suddenly. This prevents cracks. It will never rot away, because it is a metal lath. It compares favorably in cost with other plaster bases. Ask your architect.

Perhaps you are not thoroughly familiar with the superiority of metal lath. Then send for our new book, "Practical Homebuilding." It contains house plans, cost estimates, comparative costs of different forms of construction, numerous photographs and the best of general advice on home-building.

A May Day Treat For You

Let the Knox Cooks send you enough to make six plates of Cherry Sponge

KNOX
GELATINE

1 tablespoonful Knox Sparkling Gelatine.
½ cup cold water. 1 cup cherry juice.
Juice of one lemon. ¾ cup sugar.
1½ cups cherries. Whites of two eggs.

Soak gelatine in the cold water 5 minutes and dissolve in the hot cherry juice. Add Cherries (stoned and cut in halves) and lemon juice. When jelly is cold and beginning to set, add whites of 2 eggs beaten until stiff. Mold and when ready to serve turn on to serving dish and garnish with whipped cream, putting chopped cherries over the top.

NOTE: This same recipe may be used with other canned fruits.

THIS will be our treat to you for the month of May. You will be so delighted you will always have Knox Gelatine in your home.

Send us your grocer's name, enclosing a 2-cent stamp and we will send you the Knox Gelatine.

We want every reader of this publication to know how to use KNOX GELATINE for all kinds of Desserts, Jellies, Puddings, Ice Creams, Sherbets, Salads and Candies.

We will send you, free, an illustrated book of receipts with the Gelatine.

ANSWERED PRAYERS

THE Prayer League letters bring pictures of both sorrowful and joyous experiences in many homes. Both the following letters, one written in grief, the other in joy, must arouse deep sympathy in the hearts of our readers. The members of the Prayer League will be glad to unite with these friends in further prayer for God's comfort and blessing. In one particular both letters are alike. Each asks prayers for the assurance of acceptance with God. We suggest that these friends read the answers to inquiries from Miss L. W., Mrs. D. G., Mrs. M. G., in our Mail-Bag of April 8; from "Distressed," in the Mail-Bag of April 15, and from J. K., in April 22. The one answer to every such problem is "faith." We must simply trust the promises of God. There is nothing else to do. And while we are trusting rest and assurance come.

Mrs. I. G. J. writes: "My husband has been one of your subscribers for years. He is now gone to heaven. I am broken-hearted, and write to ask you and the Bowery Mission to pray for me that I may know that I am a child of God. I want such assurance that I am his child that I will doubt no more. I am greatly afflicted, and my eyes are so weak that it hurts them to write this. Pray that I may be restored to health and also that my sight be restored. My husband was a great and good Baptist minister. He was indeed one of earth's brightest and best. Oh, pray for me that I may have the same strong faith that he had."

Mr. and Mrs. William T. S. write: "Some time ago we wrote you asking prayers in behalf of our little girl who had typhoid fever. We are truly thankful to say that God spared her life. She was very low. Her pulse ran to 140, and then apparently stopped; so you see it was more than human aid that saved her. We take this way of expressing heartfelt thanks to the Prayer League and of acknowledging God's goodness and mercies to us, and we pray that he will bless you all. We ask the prayers of the League for a closer fellowship with Christ and to know fully that our sins are forgiven. Please pray also that he will bless our family altar which we have just started in the home."

A piteous appeal comes from one who is in great mental distress and asks prayer for the pardon of sins and restoration to health, peace and usefulness. This case is especially sad, and the members of the Prayer League will, we are sure, be led to pray with special directions and faith for the writer of this letter, Mrs. G. W. G. Another reader, C. A. D., asks prayer for power to overcome a drug habit of long standing. The letter closes: "I am past sixty years of age, and sometimes nearly blind. Oh, I hope you will help me."

For Revival or Reform

Miss S. R. M. asks prayer for a revival in the church at Colora, Md.; Mrs. J. J. H., for a revival in the church at Big Rock, Mich.; Mrs. S. J. J., for a revival at Toulon, Ill.; Mrs. A. D., Mrs. E. A. I., and Mrs. K. L. S., for the removal of a saloon from their town; W. J. B., that the saloons may be abolished from Phœnix, Ariz.; Mrs. A. A., for a revival at New London, N. H.; Mrs. M. B. W., for a church at Pittsfield, Me.; Mrs. S. W. A., for a church at Spotsylvania; S. C., for an outpouring of the Spirit during meetings at Downsville, N. Y.

Five Thousand Dollars Cash

A man was accidentally killed in a train wreck. (It might have been you.) He was on his way home. He had earned a good salary, but had saved little, and his funeral used that little up. His widow and children were left, as they thought, penniless. In his desk, however, a "Folded Paper" was found, which he had obtained only a few months before. It was

An Ætna Accident Policy

It brought to that sorrowing and well-nigh penniless family a check for FIVE THOUSAND DOLLARS.

Thousands of accidents occur every day. It may happen that your life will be snuffed out; that you will suffer dangerous injury or the loss of hand, limb or eye

Sometime your family may have use for the "Folded Paper" that means food, clothing and shelter to those you love. Ætna Accident Policies cost little and pay a generous weekly indemnity if you are kept from work by accidental injury.

Pick out your California Farm this Spring

Look into the money-making possibilities of dairying, poultry-raising and fruit-growing in the San Joaquin Valley—heart of Golden California—now. This year will see thousands of homeseekers in California. Your foresight should lead you to anticipate this influx.

Here is a wonderfully fertile valley whose deep, rich soil, all-the-year-'round growing climate and irrigation facilities make it a food factory that produces a great range of crops in bountiful measure. Its location gives it ready access to markets eager for all that can be produced.

It is already a well-developed country. People here get together and coöperate to save and to make money for each other.

I am here to help you to locate to advantage. I am not selling land—but I can point out the land best adapted to various crops. I can save you time and travel. I want to secure ambitious, progressive farmers to cultivate these prolific acres along the Santa Fe.

Write for our free books, "San Joaquin Valley," "Dairying" and "Poultry." Read what they tell of the reasons why this country is good—of people who have made successes, and how—of results which you can get if you have only the necessary energy and ambition.

I would like you to read what the farmers already here have to say in regard to what has been done by them to win fortune in this land of big returns.

Send coupon, or your name and address on a postal, saying "San Joaquin Valley." This will bring the books promptly and any additional information desired. Write to-day.

AN OLD STORY RETOLD

A NUMBER of letters from CHRISTIAN HERALD readers have come in during the past two weeks asking if the fireless cookers "really cook—anything, that is, outside of oatmeal or mush"—and a dozen different "hows" and "whys" for us to answer. Doubtless there are others among our readers, too, who would be glad to know something more on this very interesting subject; so, in this one reply to all specific inquiries, we hope to answer many unasked questions as well.

"If it is all so perfectly simple," writes one woman, "why in the world didn't somebody discover fireless cooking ages ago?" Somebody did; so long ago that no one can say who did "discover" it. Even the fireless cooker as we know it to-day, while a modern invention in many respects, is, after all, a very old story, for we find its forerunner in the ancient hay-box used by the Norwegians and others for many years.

This was simply a crudely built box stuffed with hay, into the cavities of which these wise housekeepers put the different pots containing their partly cooked food, and then left them to "finish cooking by themselves." And why not? Everybody knows that during the ordinary processes of cooking there is a tremendous loss of heat due to radiation from the cooking utensil and to escaping steam. Consequently any poor conductor of heat, such as hay, if closely packed around a kettle of food already brought to the boiling point, will maintain for a number of hours a sufficiently high temperature to complete the cooking process.

Probably most of us have at some time or other doubted the strict veracity of a friend who, proud of a new possession, prates about the wonders of her "fireless" as if nobody ever heard of such a thing before. But why look amazed? Certainly there is nothing new in the idea of interposing a poor conductor of heat between an article which is hotter, or colder, than the surrounding air, and the air itself. And that is the very simple principle from which our "magic" cook-stove is evolved. Every time you wrap newspapers or carpet around ice to keep it from melting you act upon the same principle. And the various vacuum bottles and boxes that are so widely used to-day offer another illustration, only here the non-conductor is the vacuum itself.

But we do not have to look abroad to study the early application of the principles of fireless cooking. Turning back in the history of our own country we find the Indians in their clam bakes heating a number of stones very hot, then, placing the clams upon them, and covering stones and all with seaweed, they left the cooking to "take care of itself."

So the wonderful modern "fireless" is really a highly perfected cook-stove built upon time-old principles of conserving heat; the raising of food to a certain temperature and then inclosing it in a receptacle as airtight as possible and leaving it to continue cooking, away from contact with the air; or putting a heated stone or its equivalent directly above and below the food to act as an oven.

The simplest form of fireless cook-stove, developed from the old idea of the hay-box, is practically an insulated box of one or two compartments in which it is only possible to boil or stew. But see what even such a simple contrivance means to a busy woman. For one thing it means that you may "start" your breakfast cereal the night before while you are clearing away the supper things, letting it cook for five or ten minutes over the kitchen stove, then put it in the cooker (in one of the special utensils that are part of its equipment) shut the lid tightly and—that is all; this uncomplaining servant which, unlike most cooks, works while you sleep or play, will do the rest. When you come downstairs in the morning the oatmeal or hominy is not only ready cooked, but, in all probability, far better cooked than had you prepared it in the old way. Of course all meats and vegetables that are boiled or stewed may be cooked with as little trouble and as much success.

But the latest models are by no means limited to the simpler forms of cookery. In these it is possible to roast or bake "to the queen's taste." Such fireless cookers have what are called "radiators." These are round discs of soapstone or other material, as a rule nearly two inches thick, bound with aluminum or nickel and fitted with an iron screw-eye so that they can be lifted even when hot. Before using the cooker to roast or bake these discs are heated by a coal or gas or oil stove for twenty to thirty minutes—following the directions for testing heat of radiators that always go with a cooker.

Then the meat to be roasted—leg of lamb, or a whole chicken, or whatever it may be—is placed in the utensil, and this is set directly on one radiator while the other is lifted by its hook and placed above the utensil. When the lid of the cooker has been shut down, your labors, dear housewife, are over; go to your sewing, your social visiting, your church society meeting or where you will; do as you please and forget the kitchen, for on your return you will find a delicious roast, juicy and savory as an epicure would wish, cooked and ready to serve. Indeed, it is possible to "start" your evening meal right after breakfast, put it in the fireless and go off to town for the day, if you wish; nothing will be "spoiled," or "dried up," or "cooked to a cinder" should you come home an hour late: and supper will be ready.

The writer was once invited to a dinner given by a neighbor who, hearing that some of her friends were inclined to pity her husband and family because in summer most of her cooking was done "by fireless," asked us in for "a good square meal." A party of doubting Thomases we went, and behold! A six-course dinner, at which the eight different cooked foods were all the product of one cooker, put a speedy end to solicitude for her household.

Incidentally it inspired the writer to look up the origin of the fireless cooking, with this as a result. Perhaps you, too, when a neighbor begins to "brag" about the wonders of her new cooker, will enjoy looking wise and saying: "My dear Mrs. X., there is nothing wonderful about it, and there is nothing new under the sun; fireless cooking is as old as the hills and as simple as two and two make four." But just the same we are only waking up to the fact that one need not be a Norwegian peasant or a primitive savage burying a saucepan in a hole in the ground to enjoy fireless blessings.

The American Flag and The Panama Canal

Compare size of Flag with the height of the Children

Here is your chance to possess a beautiful portfolio in colors of the Panama Canal, the eighth wonder of the world, containing:

1.—Full descriptive text of the history of the Panama Canal.

2.—Photographs of all of the most important and interesting points along the new waterway.

3.—Colored maps showing the topography of the Canal Zone.

4.—Diagrams showing the great changes in routes of ocean transportation.

5.—A map of the United States in colors.

6.—A map of the world in colors, illustrating the greater means of communication by reason of the canal.

7.—Eight photographs depicting the main buildings, grounds, and bird's-eye view of the great Panama-Pacific International Exposition.

A Remarkable Portfolio—In Colors

This remarkable Portfolio will give you a comprehensive idea of just what the Panama Canal looks like and what its completion means to the United States and the world at large. This Portfolio will answer for you almost any question you may wish to ask concerning the Panama Canal, and as this "short passage to the Indies" will be opened for traffic before very long, you will need an American Flag to celebrate the event.

A Flag for the Holidays

You will also need the Flag for every holiday for years to come, and you can use it constantly for decorative purposes in public and private sociables, in the schoolhouse, in the church, and, best of all, in the home. You will be able to celebrate Memorial Day properly with this Flag.

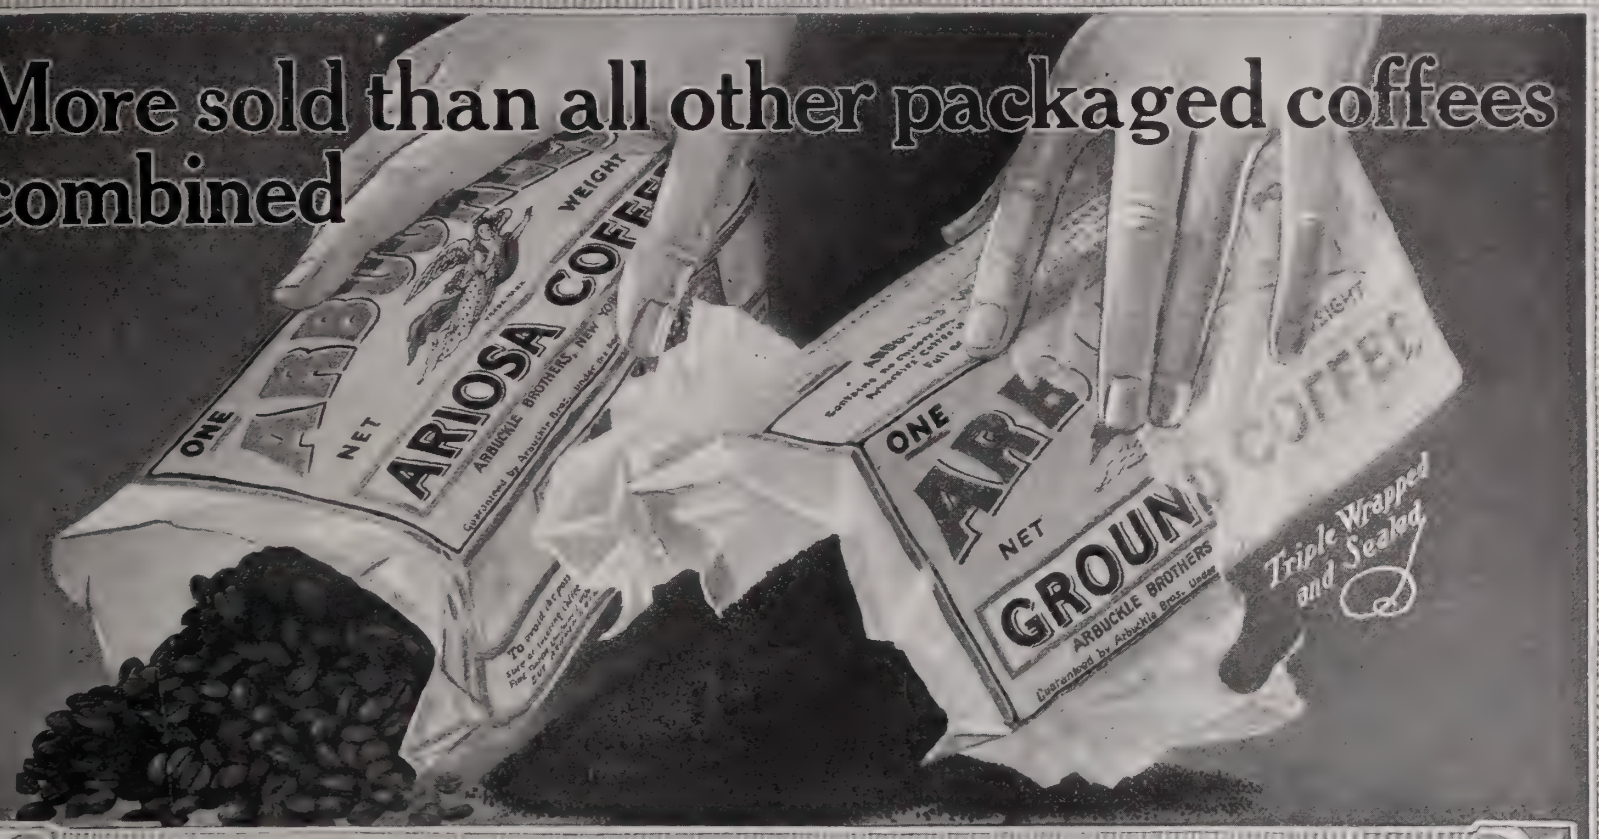
More sold than all other packaged coffees combined



FOR many years Arbuckles' Coffee has been used in more American homes than all other packaged coffees combined, and its sale is increasing.

It is this enormous sale that makes it possible to give the splendid value for which Arbuckles' is famous.

The moment that this coffee was brought out, years ago, its popularity began.

People liked its rich, delicious flavor; the sealed package which kept it fresh and protected it from moisture and store odors.

They liked it because it was always 16 ounces to the pound; all pure, honest coffee and always the same; because they could rely on their coffee every morning. Because it gave a surprising number of fragrant, full-flavored cups to the pound—it was economical to use as well as to buy.

The final step in Arbuckle convenience
You can now get Arbuckles' Coffee "Ground" as well as "Whole Bean"

As so many people now want to buy their coffee ground, Arbuckles' is put up in that way too, in an extra sealed moisture-proof wrapper. This is the final step in Arbuckle convenience and satisfaction—thus making this coffee suit every need and preference.

If you have not used Arbuckles' lately, try it now and you will see why it is the favorite coffee of America. Get a package from your grocer today, and see for yourself what a splendid coffee it really is.

This woman fills her home with useful things, FREE!

Here are some of the fine things a woman got for herself and family, just by saving the signatures on Arbuckles' coffee packages:

> She got six silver spoons; a pair of lace curtains; a gold-filled ring; silk stockings; a silk scarf; a manicure set; a neck chain and pendant; a wool sweater; an umbrella; a watch; a fountain pen; half a dozen handkerchiefs.

Arbuckles' premiums are almost as famous as Arbuckles' coffee.

In every state in the Union you will find homes made more comfortable and more beautiful by these valuable gifts.

These fine premiums are given free of cost to users of Arbuckles' coffee. All you have to do to get them is to save up the Arbuckle Brothers' signatures, which are on every package.

LIPTON'S TEA is never sold in bulk

Always in sealed Air-tight Tins

THE Package Way is the Right Way—the Economical Way to buy Tea!

Tea is extremely delicate and sensitive, quickly absorbing moisture, foreign flavors and odors—exposed to the air it also rapidly loses its strength and flavor.

Bulk tea cannot be properly protected by the grocer; therefore when you buy bulk tea, in most cases you get only the form of tea. The delightful aroma, the strength and the refreshing properties of natural tea, have all vanished when you buy other than tea packed in sealed, airtight tins.

LIPTON'S TEA

Lipton's Tea is perfect tea. It brings to you unimpaired that finer flavor of the leaf that drinkers of bulk tea never know—that others than drinkers of Lipton's seldom enjoy. Every impurity has been taken out—even the dust of the tea itself has been removed. Lipton's sealed airtight tins keep out air, dust, moisture, odors, impurities of all kinds, and keep in all the strength, aroma and refreshing properties.

Lipton's Tea is always of the same quality—each of the eleven different blends is ever the same. Lipton's Tea is most economical, too—from 200 to 300 cups to the pound.

Be sure to read "How to Make the Most Delicious Tea," in every tin of Lipton's Tea.

Send TODAY for TRIAL PACKAGE—enough for 40 cups!

LIPTON'S Yellow Label COFFEE

An extra choice blend scientifically roasted by Lipton's quality process and ground to suit your coffee pot. Makes a delicious, satisfying cup of coffee of quality and taste not always to be found in coffee sold loose.

LIPTON'S JELLY TABLETS

Non-acid—no artificial flavors, only the pure juices of fruits. A few pellets make a pint of jelly. Nine flavors to choose from. Nothing to add but hot water. Wholesome, nutritious and delightful.

If this were a moving picture presently you would see brother rush up the stairs for his bedtime bath while sister, after hers, hurries off to slumberland. Then probably would come mother and father and the rest of the family, for this habit of taking a bath before retiring seems to be contagious, especially where Ivory Soap is used.

The reason is evident: With the help of the mild, copious lather, the lukewarm water is introduced so thoroughly into the pores that its soothing effect is increased greatly. At the same time the soap itself cleanses and refreshes the skin most delightfully. Naturally such a bath helps put mind and body in the condition most conducive to sound, restful sleep.

It is for the same reason that the use of Ivory Soap in the cold, morning bath materially increases its bracing effects. In any bath at any time, the pure Ivory lather does the twofold work of cleansing gratefully and enabling the skin to enjoy the full benefit of the water.

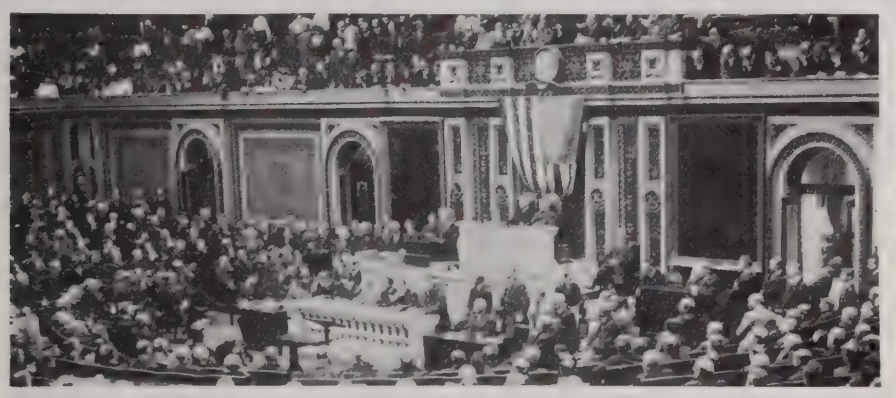
MAJOR-GENERAL LEONARD WOOD — CONGRESS IN JOINT SESSION, APRIL 20, HEARS PRESIDENT ON MEXICAN CRISIS — GENERAL VICTORIANO HUERTA



Photos copyright, International News Service

THE TAKING OF VERA CRUZ

ARMED United States forces have taken possession of Mexican territory. Congress has given President Wilson full authority to enforce amends for indignities committed against the United States. Preparations for conducting military operations by land, including mobilization of regular troops and the militia, have been made. The governors of all the States have taken preparatory steps for the calling out of the National Guard. The Atlantic and Pacific fleets, with their auxiliary torpedo boat flotillas, are under orders for action. The Red Cross Society has made its arrangements for duty at the front. Formal severance of relations between the two governments has taken place. Mexico, instead of uniting to unseat the usurper Huerta, may unite to defend his defiance of the United States. War, it may be bloody and prolonged, knocks at the gates of two friendly nations.

Thursday, April 9, occurred the incident at Tampico—the arrest of United States sailors, subsequently released with apologies, and disavowal from Huerta—which caused President Wilson on April 20 to ask Congress to empower him to compel General Huerta to salute unconditionally the Stars and Stripes in token of complete disavowal and apology for all affronts the United States had endured at the hands of Huerta's representatives.

An impressive debate in the Senate, lasting two days, preceded the passage by that chamber of a resolution justifying the President in using armed force in Mexico. Influenced by the masterly speeches of Senators Lodge and Root, the Senate took the view that the resolution drawn up at the White House and presented to the joint Congress in the afternoon of April 20, by confining the cause of action to an individual, Huerta, did not state adequate grounds for measures which might lead to war with a whole country. Its Committee on Foreign Relations presented a substitute resolution which omitted all reference to Huerta, and "justified" the President in the employment of armed forces to compel "amends for affronts and indignities committed against the United States." "The United States," concludes the resolution, "disclaims any hostilities to the Mexican people or any purpose to make war upon them." To this resolution Senator Lodge (Massachusetts) offered the following preamble, which defines the Senate's view, though it was not adopted as part of the resolution:

"That the state of unrestrained violence and anarchy which exists in Mexico, the numerous unchecked and unpunished murders of American citizens and the spoliation of their property in that country, the impossibility of securing protection or redress by diplomatic methods in the absence of lawful or effective authority, the inability of Mexico to discharge its international obligations, the unprovoked insults and indignities inflicted upon the flag and the uniform of the United States by armed forces in occupation of large parts of Mexico territory have become intolerable.

"That the self-respect and dignity of the United States and the duty to protect its citizens and its international rights require that such a course be followed in Mexico by our government as to compel respect and observance of its rights."

While the Senate was debating, United States marines were taking Vera Cruz. Four men were killed and several seriously injured in the first clash of arms. Admiral Fletcher in making this move acted under orders of the President. Referring to this grave act, reported to the Senate while he was speaking, Senator Thomas (Colorado) declared he wished Congress had power to force newspaper owners, editors and those who cry for war to go to the front in place of privates in the army: "I would not give one single clear-eyed American boy," he said, "the pride of a father's ambition and the center of a mother's earnest love, for all the land and all of the people of Mexico." In opening the fight to amend the resolution, Senator

MILITARY STAFF AT MEXICO CITY OF GENERAL HUERTA

Lodge said: "I for one, when I demand atonement for the insult to the flag at Tampico, cannot put aside those one hundred and fifty American citizens, innocent, helpless people, who have been murdered upon Mexican soil and whose deaths have gone unnoticed and unavenged. . . . I cannot be placed in a position where I appear either directly or indirectly to pick and choose between the factions which tear Mexico asunder at this moment. I will not, for one, without a protest at least, join in any resolutions which can by any construction put the United States in the attitude of selecting one murderer and cutthroat in preference to another murderer and cutthroat" (as an object of punishment for indignities to the United States). He continued: "Let us be under no misapprehension as to where this resolution leads. It leads to armed intervention. The day we take Vera Cruz we have intervened."

The warmly contested debate in the Senate was listened to in intense silence by packed galleries. Senator Root (New York) spoke with dramatic feeling. He showed in an incisive speech that under the House resolution the whole ground for employing the armed forces of the United States in Mexico was reduced to a matter of the form of salute to the flag, to the number of guns comportable with this nation's dignity, to the extracting of the last iota of submission from the individual Huerta. He urged the broader and sufficient grounds already recited by Senator Lodge, as necessary to be stated because "it is intervention technically, but it is war in its essence that we are to vote to justify to-night. Men will die, men dear to us will die, because of the action that we are to approve to-night. American homes will be desolate, American women will mourn, American children will go through life fatherless because of the action that we are to approve to-night; and when these children, grown to manhood, turn back the page of history to learn for what cause their fathers died, are they to find that it was about a quarrel as to the number of guns—on the form and ceremony of a salute and nothing else? . . . Oh, Mr. President, how inadequate! How can we justify ourselves if we have no justification but that?"

The Senate finally passed its substitute resolution at 6.21 A.M., April 22, by a vote of 72 to 13. It was accepted by the House nem con immediately after that body convened, was sent to the White House and signed by the President at 2.07 P.M. But Vera Cruz was already taken.

The battleships Florida and Utah, and the transport Prairie were at Vera Cruz under Admiral Fletcher. Early April 21 he requested General Maas, commander at Vera Cruz, to surrender the city and was curtly refused. Shortly after eleven o'clock in the morning a flotilla of boats put off from the warships, carrying nearly a thousand seamen and bluejackets. The population of the city filled every available spot from which to view the spectacle. Within an hour the American forces were ashore and spread over the lower part of the city. But a shot had been fired.

In the Federal barracks there was a garrison of eight hundred men. Presently these scattered in groups through the central portion of the city, taking positions on house roofs, in windows and behind corners and doorways. They were joined by numbers of armed citizens. At about 12.30 a fusillade from all quarters was begun. Then Mexican artillery opened fire.

The Americans had taken up stations at the heads of the streets they occupied. Their machine guns covered the approaches. The fire of the Mexicans was returned, and a spirited exchange of shots continued for some time. The guns of the Prairie went into action and soon shelled out the Mexican artillery. When this first clash of arms ceased, four Americans lay dead, a number were seriously wounded and upwards of two hundred Mexicans had perished. General Maas had fled the city with his forces. The Americans were in possession of the custom house, post office, the railroad terminal and yards, telegraph and cable offices. They had also cleared parts of the city of combatants.

The following day sniping warfare was begun by the Mexicans. Sentrymen and others were shot at from concealed positions by individuals firing at will. By noon the entire city, however, was in possession of the landing party. A total of six fatalities and about thirty wounded was the score of casualties. Admiral Fletcher had established headquarters in the city to direct the land operations, and Admiral Badger, who had arrived in the harbor with five battleships, took command of the fleet. He at once landed about three thousand marines and bluejackets to help patrol the city.

A rather stubborn attack on our forces was begun in the morning, but the Americans spread out, taking block after block, and searching houses until the city was practically cleared. Snipers were in constant evidence; the machine guns of the Americans barked steadily through the day. Operations were covered by the guns of the fleet. Buildings that afforded the Mexicans substantial advantage were demolished by the accurate fire of the four-, five- and six-inch guns. Admiral Fletcher issued a proclamation to the citizens of Vera Cruz urging them to continue their peaceful occupations and assuring them protection.

IN THE CUSTOM HOUSE AT VERA CRUZ

On the 23d the total number of Americans ashore was nearly 6,000. Detachments had seized positions three miles outside of the city. Intrenchments had been thrown up commanding the approaches to Vera Cruz, as it was understood that General Maas was organizing a strong counter-attack to retake the city. Fighting within the city had entirely ceased and business was being slowly resumed. Three more deaths were reported. The ships of the fleet were so disposed in the harbor as to command the city, ready for instant action.

On that date President Wilson, yielding at last to pressure and in response to representations from Admiral Badger, issued orders to send army troops to Mexico. The Fifth Brigade of Infantry and a detachment of artillery under command of Brigadier General Frederick Funston, and comprising 5,200 men, at once embarked on transports from Galveston for Vera Cruz. A second brigade and artillery were ordered to the Mexican border. The embargo against shipment of arms into Mexico was restored.

The President and others in official circles continued to hope that war would not be declared. And yet on the 23d of April General Huerta handed Chargé O'Shaughnessy his passports, and Secretary Bryan in response to the request of the Mexican representative at Washington, Algara, handed the latter his. Severance of diplomatic relations in this manner is tantamount to a declaration of intention to declare war. The Constitutionalist leader, Carranza, had addressed a letter to President Wilson denouncing the attack on Vera Cruz, and intimating that a united country would oppose the continued occupation of that city. As a strong force of Constitutionalists was near Tampico ready to cooperate with the Federal forces in that city, the intended seizure of Tampico was postponed to prevent a conflict of the proportions which would have followed the landing of marines.

The situation has become tense, surcharged with danger to both countries. Reports are received of a threatening attitude in Mexico City toward Americans. It is possible for the Mexicans to destroy a great deal of the railroad between Vera Cruz and their capital. Bridges span rivers and great gullies; the railroad winds upon narrow ledges and runs through dark cañons; the hundreds of miles of roadbed would be a pathway for our troops through an enemy's country where every advantage save that of numbers lay with the enemy. The Mexican fighting strength cannot be correctly stated, but it is estimated at from 80,000 or 90,000 trained fighters down to a bare 20,000. Its fleet is negligible.

General Villa, suspending operations against the Federals, came to the border for a conference with his American friends and announced that nothing can draw him into a war against the United States. His attitude of hostility against Huerta is unchanged. While the report is not confirmed, it is believed that Villa and Carranza have definitely broken and that each will claim to be the head of the Constitutionalists.

In preparation for eventualities, the entire military and naval forces of the United States are in motion. The militia of each State is perfecting plans for mobilization, subject to orders of the War Department for national defense. Many are prepared to respond if the President calls for volunteers; he is being urged to make an immediate call for 100,000 men. The governor of California has already despatched militia to the border. The Red Cross organization is reported to have its plans well in hand for meeting whatever situation may arise.

The attitude of foreign countries is friendly. It was rumored that Japan would side with Mexico in case of war, but that country has announced its neutrality. France, England and Germany have given evidence of their confidence in President Wilson to handle the situation. American interests in Mexico will be safeguarded by Brazil during the interruption of diplomatic relations. The German steamship which was said to have on board military supplies for Huerta refrained from attempting to land them, and her commander, it is said, offered his friendly services to Admiral Fletcher.

Many refugees from Mexico City have arrived at port towns, and large numbers went aboard the vessels in the harbors of Tampico and Vera Cruz. Thus far no violence toward non-combatants has been reported. Huerta is said to have assured Americans of safety, and some have signified their intention to remain in Mexico without fear.

PUTTING IT UP TO THE BOY

BY MARC N. GOODNOW

THERE is no longer any reason for boys going wrong in Michigan, for the Michigan Young Men's Christian Association, after years of experiment and hard experience, has something that really interests boys, that keeps them out of mischief, that shows them the Christian character of work and play, and puts into them the spirit of action and service.

And one could easily believe that after seeing 1,200 boys over fifteen years of age in the great annual State conference in Saginaw, Mich. Here were delegates from every nook and corner of the big State, representing one hundred and fifty communities and five hundred boys' organizations. A dozen hundred boys in rollicking mood, singing, yelling, laughing, playing and fellowshipping together. Twelve hundred of them eating at the same banquet board. Boys on committees. Boys presiding. Boys speaking. Boys listening. Boys debating. Boys uttering and cheering sentiments as lofty and as ennobling as any their elders ever contemplated or uttered—and, after three days, boys returning to homes of poverty and wealth, but all animated by a high ideal of Christian service before them.

This is one of the most remarkable things about it—the fact that there is so much religion in boys from fifteen to twenty-five years old. Most of us can remember when we were ashamed to make any sort of open declaration for Jesus Christ—except under our breath; it was not considered manly. It was a "sissy" thing to do. We regarded the revivals and protracted meetings in our town as a huge joke on our community eccentrics and used to attend them merely for the purpose of seeing some one "get religion" and shout and sing. But that is not the order of the day, in Michigan at least. The conference, as well as the association, contradicts the lie that young men to be decent must be "sissies." It gives one a new outlook on young America to-day to hear boys speak openly and reverently of Jesus Christ as a definite personality influencing their daily lives, and to discuss Christian ideals and principles without the least flush or fear of being called "softy" or "effeminate."

But follow these boys to their homes. What do they do? Their first desire is to talk—to tell other fellows about it—to "make their reports." All over the State they arrange for union meetings of the local churches and for an hour or two before the high school, so that delegates may tell the community what took place at the conference and what its moral and spiritual effect was upon their lives.

In the small town of Plymouth, Mich., for example, where there is no Y. M. C. A., thirteen boys who attended the last State Boys' Conference told of their experiences there before the entire membership of the high school, which was dismissed from classes for this purpose, and declared that if any "fellows in this town expect to amount to anything at all they've got to become Christians." They so aroused local interest that several boys were influenced to become Christians and the school authorities arranged for a series of lectures on character building and for features that would keep alive the spirit created by the conference and the local delegates.

At Flint, Mich., three boys who had been delegates were to be given the minister's time at a Sunday service. It was planned to have each of the boys deliver a five-minute talk, and the minister surreptitiously prepared a sermon so that he might be ready should one or all of the boys fail to make good. The first boy spoke for seven minutes; the second boy talked for fourteen minutes, and the third boy actually preached a sermon for forty-four minutes by the clock—at the end of which twelve boys of his own age and three grown men came forward at his invitation and joined in a declaration for the Christian life.

And how are these results produced? Why are the boys so interested? Because they do the things themselves. It isn't a work for boys, but a work with boys. The whole idea, of course, is that instead of doing the thing for the boy the association puts the thing up to the boy himself, to be done by and through his own initiative, genius and effort. You can never excite his interest in anything wholesome, worth while or lasting merely by making him an onlooker. "A task for every man and boy; a man and boy for every task," is the motto.

The Michigan Y. M. C. A. is proving itself a very great factor in stemming the cityward drift of boys from the farms, at the same time teaching the dignity of agriculture as a profession. The County Associations of this one State engaged a total of 528 boys and 77 girls in agricultural contests of various kinds in 1913; corn-, potato-, tomato- and beet-growing and also chicken-raising contests.

The average crop of corn in Michigan is 32.4 bushels per acre, but if the farmers of the State had grown corn as well as did ten boys in Hillsdale County two years ago, the yield of the entire State would have been doubled. Not one of these contestants was more than fifteen years old. Some of them were inspired by the contests to continue their agricultural work and later enter the Michigan Agricultural College.

MICHIGAN Y. M. C. A. BOYS STORMING CONVENTION HALL

By meeting the play instinct of young people the fourteen county associations in Michigan last year brought together 9,194 boys and girls in every kind of athletic meet and play festival. The old-time, obsolete folk-games and dances were revived under competent supervision and a new standard of athletics has been established, all in the belief that the ability to work together as men and women is the natural and logical outgrowth of the ability to play together as boys and girls.

THE CONVENTION SEES THE CITY

At the invitation of the county school commissioner a county secretary taught simple games in twenty-five rural schools. When the weather was too cold or inclement for outdoor demonstration, he explained four or five games with chalk and a blackboard. During fair weather at special fifteen-minute periods the teacher and pupils joined in games under the secretary's direction. After three weeks of practice in such play during short recesses and noon hours, a teacher wrote the secretary: "We never knew our children before. Teach us more games, for they have not only opened the way for us to get better acquainted with our boys and girls, but since they have been used it has been easier to conduct our regular school work."

A country school teacher organized a group of boys with himself as leader. The six boys who responded to his invitation elected for their president a lad who, on the following day, went to his teacher, saying: "Dad says I can't belong to this Y. M. C. A. because he doesn't want to help pay for a building in town. He says he'll let me have a new rifle and a boys' magazine if I promise not to waste my money in this."

The group elected a new president, after which the leader produced a set of boxing gloves, something the boys had never seen before. Under his direction they enjoyed a lively frolic for several minutes. On the following morning another boy walked to the teacher's desk and withdrew his membership in the group. "Pa don't want me to belong, for he don't want me to grow up to be a pugilist, he says."

"Hereafter, then," said the leader, "we'll begin our meetings with Bible study. After that we'll have some athletics so that you can train your eyes and muscles and learn to think quickly and to control your tempers. Then after a while we'll have a doctor or lawyer come out from town and talk to you."

In many instances, following their organization as an association group, the boys begin a campaign against smoking, drinking, swearing and unclean stories. In one of these campaigns every boy in school signed the pledge to abstain from the use of tobacco in any form until he is through college. They feel the responsibility of organizing Bible study classes and of exemplifying in their lives the lessons they have learned at their association sessions or at the conference. The spirit of service unfailingly gets into their motor nerves and makes them active. By putting this same idea of community service up to the boy while he is still a boy, he is much better equipped with the spirit and enthusiasm to carry on his unselfish work in later life. He has learned not to rely upon others to do the thing for him, but to do it himself.

Life After Death

"IF THERE be no continued life, what a strange aspect is cast thereby on the obligation that an honest man feels to tell the truth at all costs," writes Professor J. T. Bixby in Harper's Magazine for May. "How foolish seems the honesty of a bankrupt whom a lie might have kept rich! What a mistake is the voluntary death for another's sake of the seaman or patriot who might have saved himself, or the martyr's death at the stake, in order to be loyal to truth, faith, or conscience!

"If a true man has no deathless claims on the eternal, then neither his honor nor his duty would demand any such acts of self-sacrifice. Jesus and Paul, Savonarola and Huss and Lincoln—what were they, on the materialistic theory, but fools who, under the hallucination of duty, squandered the one life granted to our poor forms of clay? Unless we are ready to accept as the models of wise and true men those who brazenly throw overboard all inconvenient scruples about integrity, justice, patriotism, and self-denying mercy, we must accept these great commanding ideals as pointing to a realm above sense and beyond the veil of death; a real world whose steady gravitation it is that draws the human heart, at whatever fleshly cost, to obey its laws."

BIBLELAND TABLETS

HAVE you secured a Babylonian tablet? It is remarkable the interest these tablets have awakened among our readers. Clergymen are using them to illustrate sermons on the time of Abraham. Sunday school superintendents are using them as object lessons on the times of Ur. We have had many requests to sell extra tablets, but this we cannot do. The tablets are not for sale. They can be obtained only by members of the Christian Herald Family, who send us two new eight months' subscriptions at one dollar each. Remember that the number of these tablets is limited. They will not last forever. If you desire to secure one, you should act at once.

CHRIST'S HABIT OF PRAYER

A SERMON

BY

REV. J. H. JOWETT, D.D.*

TEXT: "And as he was praying, the fashion of his countenance was altered." Luke 9: 29

IT IS a very momentous matter reverently to study any one of the personal habits of Christ, to seek to enter into his secret faith and thought. For when a man begins to make reverent quest into the life of Christ, Christ knows it. On this plane study of the work and the word is communion with the speaker and the worker. To contemplate a personal habit of Jesus is to enter into fellowship with a person. We not only observe, we are observed. We not only make observation, we obtain recognition. The student of the Master becomes the Master's friend. Or, to put it in another way, a reverent study of the historic Jesus puts us into communion with the living Christ.

I find the Master praying when temptation drew near. I am not going for my illustration to that early experience in the Master's life which we describe as "the temptation"; but I will go to another experience when I think the temptation was even more subtle and more secret, where the snare was even more enticing. I will seek my illustration of the temptation of Jesus on the Mount of Transfiguration. On that mount he won his victory over his greatest snare.

What was it? Let me remind you of the situation. We have got to get beneath the circumstances as they appear, the mere superficies of the occasion, and we have to get down to the secrets of the soul. See what had happened. Our Lord, before the experience, had manifested his love. He had declared his purpose. He had confirmed his message by his deeds. He was already shedding his blood in sacrificial service. And with what result? The horizon was already blackening with omens of rejection. Storms of hostility seemed to be brewing on every side. The air was thick with menace, with rejection, with plot and mischief. "He came unto his own, and his own received him not." And just then, when storms of hostility were gathering on every side, when the tempest of antagonism was drawing ever nearer and nearer—just then, I am told, "he went up into a mountain to pray."

Praying to Choose

Now, why do you think he went? The more human we can be in interpreting our Lord, the more we shall eventually glorify him. Why did he go? Just grip the situation. He had declared his love. He had been going about doing good. He was shedding his blood in chivalrous and sacrificial service. And there was the darkening road that led to desolation and crucifixion. What was the temptation? Is it worth while? Should he go to night and desolation and crucifixion, or should he there and then finish with translation?

Reverently I have come to believe that these were the two alternatives presented to our Lord on the mount—translation, desolation. And as though to emphasize the inducement, we are told there appeared unto him Moses and Elias, the very two who were reputed to have finished by translation and to have escaped the common death. And it does appear to me as though their very presence gave a subtlety to the snare by which he was beset. Should he exit by re-entry into "the glory which I had with thee before the world was," or should he choose re-entry into the road of resentment, down among the evil spirits, the malice, the rejection? And, we are told, he prayed. "Up or down." Finish there or back to the thorny road? And so here even Simon Peter comes in to emphasize the snare. "Lord, it is good for us to be here. Let us make three abiding places," and stay, and not return again to the way of blood, and to the way of the thorns, and to the way of rejection, and perhaps ultimately to the cross. "Lord, it is good for us to be here; let us make three abiding places."

But the Lord brushed it aside. He prayed, and he chose. And he chose desolation, crucifixion, death. When Peter said, "Let us stay," he brushed it aside and said, "Down, down, down again, down to the waiting multitudes, down to the envious eyes, down to the malicious designs, down to the cross."

Well, now, don't you think that we have similar hours, as far as our own limitations will permit? That bit of blood-demanding work of yours—have not you come into this church this morning feeling inclined to ask the question "Is it worth while?" Those lads you are working with, their levity, their flippancy, their almost contempt. Is it worth while? You have come to your crisis. I always remember that wonderful incident in the life of Josephine Butler, as you can see her life in the life she herself wrote of her husband. That woman, comparatively frail and fragile of body, retiring, reticent in spirit, called to a publicity from which she shrank, called to a loathsomeness of ministry which to her was a constant crucifixion, called to do it amid the almost brutal indifference of the majority of men. If you turn to that life of sensitive sympathy you will find that Josephine Butler was continually enticed to say to herself, "Is it worth while? Is it worth while? Shall I keep on the bloody road or go back to the beautiful deanery, to that delightful and delicious cloistered seclusion? Is it worth while? Shall I go back to my husband and the quietness of family life, or back to the dark and troubled way?" And you can hear her praying; and while she prayed she chose—back to the ways of shame. And if you want to know what the Lord did for her, look at her face. It was transfigured with the only light that ever beautifies a woman, the light of a glorious self-sacrifice. She prayed and chose, and was illumined with the light of life.

A Bulwark of the Soul

And that bit of work of yours in one of the slums of the city, you know perfectly well that while I am speaking you are just balancing. There are Sunday school teachers here who are just balancing. They have never had a convert. They have never yet gleaned a golden ear of harvest for the garner of God, and they are saying here this morning, "Is it worth while?" Well, now, Jesus prayed when he came to that point, and while he prayed he chose.

Now, may I turn you to another example of the Saviour's personal private habit of prayer? May I read to you a passage, and ask you to note the wonderful sequence, and to mark the wonderful force of the conjunction on which the sequence hangs? "And he healed many that were sick with divers diseases, and cast out many devils; and he suffered not the devils to speak, because they knew him. And in the morning, a great while before day, he rose up and went out, and departed into a solitary place and prayed." Why? Why did he go apart just then for private communion with his Father God? He was himself intently doing good. The once-blind eyes were now radiant with thanksgiving. Men and women who were carried to him maimed and halt were now leaping about in buoyancy of heart. He was doing good work and enjoying a measure of public favor. Why leave the sick and the infirm and go away into a solitary place to pray?

I think he went aside to pray that he might provide against nervous exhaustion. All that healing, all that steady giving, all that sympathy meant expenditure of vital force. There is nothing so exhausting as healing. The hardest part of a minister's life is the expression and expenditure of sympathy. Every minister, when he goes around visiting the sick, careworn and burdened, will return home very much more weary than if he had been spending the time preparing sermons. When Jesus had been healing the crowd I do not wonder that he went apart to pray, to be quiet, to provide against nervous exhaustion.

I remember that the Dean of Salisbury some time ago, at the opening of the session of one of our great medical schools, delivered an address in which he counseled the medical students to find reprieve from their somewhat exacting studies in the ministry of poetry. I thought that counsel was eminently healthy and sane and peculiarly relevant to the strain and stress of our time. But without disparaging the ministry of poetry I should say that there is no nerve rest, no nerve restorer, nothing that quiets and refreshes the body, as the ministry of quiet prayer. You cannot meet that by argument, but only by experiment. If, exhausted by the turmoil and trouble of daily life, you can get apart and enter into quiet communion with your Father you will find that you are in touch with the fountain of life. The river of the water of life will flow into your very being. You will rise from your knees as though you had been dipped in a bath of regeneration, and you will be able to say, in the beautiful phrase of the twenty-third Psalm, "He restoreth my soul."

If I am to give a second reason why after a very successful day our Lord went into retirement for prayer, I should say this: that our Lord went away to pray that he might secure his soul against the perils of success. He very rarely had the perils of triumph presented to him in his earthly life. They were usually the perils of defeat. But I think our Lord knew this: that success can bruise the spirit even more perilously than defeat, and that where there are six men that can bear adversity, only one can stand the test of prosperity.

And so our Lord prayed—prayed in the hour of popular favor, not merely that he might be saved against nervous exhaustion, but lest his very success should impair his life of service.

If I may add one other illustration of our Master's habit of prayer it shall be this: I find that whenever our Lord was going to make a great decision he went aside to pray in order that he might refine the instrument of choice and sharpen his judgment to a fine and exquisite discernment. Listen to this passage, and mark the sequence: "And it came to pass in those days that he went out into a mountain to pray, and continued all night in prayer to God. And when it was day, he chose twelve." The words are their own exposition—the night of prayer and then the great decision. He took time to pray over great choices. Before he made the choice he spent time to prepare the instrument and implement of choice.

The Lever of Prayer

And we have similar choices to make in our own individual or private or corporate life. We have to choose our careers. We have to choose at many-winding and ever-turning ways. Christ went aside to pray before he made a great choice in order that the greatest considerations might fill his mind. We are so prone when making great decisions to make them from small motives. We can make a great choice in a little way. Now to go aside and pray gives us the big manner. It gives us the great way of making a great decision. There is nothing so kills little things like prayer.

And you remember the end of it all. Christ of Nazareth, when he prayed like this through all his day, prayed too in the moment of death. "Father, forgive them." "He prayed for them that did the wrong." A prayer like that could never have been offered unless prayer for others had become habitual. Our Lord prayed in the hour of baptism and he prayed in the hour of death, and between his baptism and his death the light in the temple of his soul never went out.

And if all this is true there is only one conclusion—we are exceedingly wise when we pray, and we are exceedingly foolish when we cease to pray. To stop praying is to seal up your windows, to close your ventilators, to shut out light and air, to imprison your soul where you are deprived of all inspiration. If you are burdened in heart this morning, pray. If you are carrying a heavy cross, get aside and pray. If you are eaten up and consumed by secret sin, pray. And you will find that the Father in heaven who communed with his son Jesus Christ will commune with you, and your yoke will become easy and your burden will become light.

Her Joy in Helping

I TAKE this opportunity to tell you a little of the joy that has come into my own life during the past year through co-operating with THE CHRISTIAN HERALD in past years. Now I am the proud "mother" of an Indian youth in the Theological School in India, and another little fellow of nine years has recently been put on my scholarship at the Baroda Boys' Orphanage. The letters I have from the Christian workers in that country as well as those from the boys themselves go far toward brightening my lonely life and making me feel that I can still be of some use to some one of God's needy children, and I can say, from the bottom of my heart, thanks be to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD for putting me on the right road. DAILY MEDITATION

FOR EVERY DAY IN THE YEAR, BASED ON THE WORDS OF JESUS

BY PROFESSOR W. H. T. DAU

SUNDAY, May 10. Matthew 5: 10, 12. "Blessed are they which are persecuted for righteousness' sake: for theirs is the kingdom of heaven. Blessed are ye, when men shall revile you, and shall say all manner of evil against you falsely, for my sake. Rejoice, and be exceeding glad: for great is your reward in heaven: for so persecuted they the prophets which were before you." This concluding beatitude we might call the beatitude of the cross-bearers. It merges the fate of the disciple in that of his Master. As Jesus was maligned, reviled and slain for well-doing, as all sorts of suspicions were entertained about him by men who scorned his teaching, his followers too are evil spoken of because of their faith in him and because of their conduct in accordance with his Gospel. It is not a pleasant prospect to which Jesus points his followers. If the disciples had allied themselves with the lawyers and priests of their nation, their fate would have been altogether different. As cross-bearers they entered an illustrious procession of martyrs which included the ancient prophets. And Christ here speaks precious words of cheer to them and points to the gracious reward of glory after they shall have passed through their Gethsemanes.

MONDAY, May 11. Luke 6: 22, 23. "Blessed are ye, when men shall hate you, and when they shall separate you from their company, and shall reproach you, and cast out your name as evil, for the Son of man's sake. Rejoice ye in that day, and leap for joy: for, behold, your reward is great in heaven: for in the like manner did their fathers unto the prophets." The last beatitude is so rich that it deserves to be pondered once more in the form in which Luke has recorded it. The motive which prompts those who persecute the followers of Christ is here declared to be hatred, and such intense hatred as to cause the persecutors to ostracise and excommunicate the believers "for the Son of man's sake." That is the ordeal by which the believer receives his knighthood in the order of the Cross-bearers. The Captain, however, urges them to look upon such suffering with beaming countenance, and "rejoice and leap for joy!" This is the hour when the mettle of their faith is tested, and their persecutors, who have posed as the servants of Jehovah, shall be revealed in their true character.

TUESDAY, May 12. Luke 6: 24. "But woe unto you that are rich! for ye have received your consolation." By way of contrast, Luke has joined to his account of the beatitudes a series of woes which Christ pronounced on those who refused to be his disciples. His first woe is hurled against the rich. To be rich is not wrong in itself. But obtaining wealth, or retaining wealth, in defiance of the will of God; allowing wealth to prevent us from joining the company of the despised Jesus, or to interfere with the consistent application of Christian principles—that is wrong. Our wealth is accursed when it becomes a wall of separation between us and Christ. The Lord shuts out such rich men from the consolations of the life hereafter. They have made mammon the cherished object of their affections and the foundation of their confidence. With Dives, they will have to be satisfied with those comforts which purple and fine linen and sumptuous living afforded them in this life. The comforts in Abraham's bosom are not for them.

WEDNESDAY, May 13. Luke 6: 25. "Woe unto you that are full! for ye shall hunger. Woe unto you that laugh now! for ye shall mourn and weep." When the self-satisfied man of the world spurns the services of a Christian missionary and of the church; when he answers an invitation to read the Bible with a gesture of disgust and receives the call to repentance with a boisterous guffaw, he may be a prophet of his own ruin, and preparing the instruments for his own destruction. It is a terrible rebuke that Christ administers to such men. But even this is meant to reclaim them from their reckless career of self-destruction. Let them count the cost of their wantonness; for the day is coming when the tables shall be turned on the carnally secure. Then they shall have gnawing hunger for their plenty, and tears for their mirth; for the mouth of the Lord hath spoken it.

THURSDAY, May 14. Luke 6: 26. "Woe unto you, when all men shall speak well of you! for so did their fathers to the false prophets." There is a kind of praise bestowed by men which condemns those that receive it. If they were conscious of guilt, or if they had not become callous, such praise ought to cause the blush of shame to mantle their cheeks. Such praise came to certain prophets of old, and it still comes to some in our day. Men who are commissioned to speak with their fellow men in behalf of the Lord are specially exposed to this kind of praise. A time-serving pastor who blandly smiles at the wickedness and wantonness of his parishioners; a popularity-hunting preacher who smoothes down a harsh truth till it becomes acceptable to a refined audience; a minister whose exhortations are efforts to chase devils with a straw, who caters palpably to the likes and dislikes of influential members, will get a lot of this praise from the people whom it would be his sworn duty to offend for their salvation. A true prophet of God declines such praise, and considers it an affront when men offer it. If he accepts praise of this kind, he will have to accept this woe of Christ in addition. God pity the preacher, and the professing Christian, "when all men speak well of him!"

FRIDAY, May 15. Matthew 5: 13. "Ye are the salt of the earth: but if the salt have lost his savor, wherewith shall it be salted? it is thenceforth good for nothing, but to be cast out, and to be trodden under foot of men." The virtue of salt to stay decomposition is well known. This fact the Lord makes use of to describe the practical purpose for which he keeps Christians in this world, scattered among multitudes of unbelievers. Their other-worldliness, their heavenly-mindedness, their chaste conduct, their clean speech, their pure thought, above all, their faith in the Word of God and their fearless and trenchant testimony against every form of wickedness, are to check and confine the operation of the forces of moral corruption. Christian, have you considered your great mission? If you, being a believer, a church-member, become worldly, you lose the savor and virtue of witnessing faith. You are become good for nothing. Men will soon find out that your profession is the vapid mouthing of an empty heart, the cant of a hypocrite; and they will spurn you. And what is your denatured Christianity worth to you?

SATURDAY, May 16. Matthew 5: 14-16. "Ye are the light of the world. A city that is set on an hill cannot be hid. Neither do men light a candle, and put it under a bushel, but on a candlestick; and it giveth light unto all that are in the house. Let your light so shine before men, that they may see your good works, and glorify your Father which is in heaven." In another striking image, the mission of a disciple is here set forth. "Ye were some time darkness, but now ye are a light in the Lord," says Paul, and Peter puts the same fact thus: "Ye should show forth the praises of Him who hath called you out of darkness into his marvelous light." In spiritual things, in the affairs of the soul, in matters pertaining to salvation, men are oh! so ignorant, so full of error. The Christians "into whose hearts God hath shined to give them the knowledge of the glory of God in the face of Jesus Christ," and who "discern spiritual things spiritually," could often tell their erring fellow men things that would make for their eternal peace and happiness. God has made Christianity a beacon light on the shores of time to guide the passing craft to the blessed haven beyond. What a misfortune if the lightship on a perilous coast is put out of commission by some accident! Why do not Christians shine by their testimony and their virtues? Is it modesty, timidity, fear of awkwardness, or is the oil consumed in the lamps? Christians, consider your calling as torchbearers of salvation to a world in darkness. "Shall we, whose souls are lighted with wisdom from on high—shall we to men benighted the lamp of life deny?"

These Daily Meditations by Professor Dau will appear in each issue during 1914.

THE TRANSFORMATION OF BILLINGSGATE

BY CLARA L. DIXON

"THOSE who knew Billingsgate when it was a byword for bad language, and compare it now, will be surprised at its entire change of tone and temper." Thus writes a London daily paper in an article entitled "The Taming of Billingsgate." Billingsgate as a by-word is known world wide.

We ask, "What has wrought this change?" and we find the answer in a sign which hangs out over the post office opposite the fish-market: "Billingsgate Christian Mission and Dispensary." Here then we have the secret of the wonderful transformation of Billingsgate.

Eight thousand men are employed in the market from 3 A.M. to 1 P.M., and accidents frequently occur. It is then that they go to the mission, where they find a doctor, with four or five trained nurses, ready to dress their wounds and also to put in a word for the healing power of Christ. In one year there are 13,000 attendances, and wonderful conversions have taken place while the patients have been waiting.

It is difficult to hold regular services, as the men must be on the look-out for the fishing-boats, which are apt to come in at any time. However, every Monday and Thursday, at one o'clock, from forty to fifty men gather and hear a Gospel talk, which is followed by a cup of coffee and bread. The influence of these meetings is far-reaching. A missionary among the deep-sea fishermen off the coast of Labrador noticed a tract in the cabin of one of his men, and he asked him about it. "Oh," replied the man, "that was given to me at the Billingsgate Mission, where I was brought to Christ." The little mission did not hear of this encouraging incident till years afterwards.

Patiently and prayerfully, the Christian workers have labored against great odds. Thirty years ago, it was not an uncommon thing for them to have their hats knocked off and clothes rendered useless by the rough treatment of the men; but now they know that the little mission room represents love and help, and they realize that the workers there are friends who are always ready to serve them in their need.

On holidays they have their games. Both the fish men and the meat men have football teams, and last year in their match game the "fish" team carried off the honors.

To see them at their best, one must arrive at the market between four and five in the morning. Such fine-looking fellows they are, carrying the fish in great boxes on their heads, and moving about with graceful vigor. It is indeed an inspiring thought that even Billingsgate can be won to the service of Christ. "The things which are impossible with men are possible with God."

METHODIST COLLEGE IN ROME

BISHOP AND MRS. NUELSON

"I ENVY your position as leader of the most remarkable and significant work ever undertaken by Protestantism in Italy."

In these words Bishop Nuelson of the Methodist Episcopal Church addressed Dr. B. M. Tipple on the occasion of "taking possession" of the ground on Monte Mario at Rome, where are to stand the new buildings of the Methodist "Collegio." For some years this collegio has been conducting its work in the Methodist building on Via Firenza, but on October 22, 1913, the Board of Foreign Missions authorized the purchase of the new site on Monte Mario; on January 24, 1914, the deed of purchase was signed and on March 17 Bishop Nuelson consecrated the land to its great mission.

The central building of the new collegio will be higher than the dome of St. Peter's. The Romans, strolling through the Pincian Gardens, their most popular out-of-door resort, will behold St. Peter's dome and the Methodist College as the two most prominent objects of the magnificent landscape.

Dr. Tipple, president of the collegio and pastor of the American Methodist Church at Rome, writing to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD enclosing an account of the dedication exercises, says: "I feel that this is perhaps the most important evangelical undertaking in the history of Protestantism in Italy." He adds: "Some day in the not distant future we will show you a Sunday school class of young men worth while on this new hilltop."

Bishop Nuelson, who reached Rome the evening before the dedication exercises, by way of Bulgaria, Constantinople, Jerusalem and Cairo, made the chief address. He has been a stanch supporter of the new enterprise from its inception. Speaking of the inspiration for study to be found in the wonderful view presented from the site of the new collegio, he said: "The eye looks upon buildings and places that are connected with great epoch-making events in the history of the world: history, law, religion, art, in fact all spheres of civilized life through the centuries, have felt the influence of this marvelous 'Eternal City' at the feet of the new collegio.

"We do not intend to build a school merely to gratify denominational pride. Our ardent desire is to render the greatest possible service by training the coming leaders of a great nation. We have very definite and very strong convictions as to what constitutes Christian education. At the root of all education lies information, knowledge. This collegio is to impart the latest information as to the facts of life; it is to be fully equipped and up to date in scholarship. Christianity has nothing to fear from learning. On the contrary, the Bible, the great charter of Christianity, has ever been the greatest intellectual stimulus. We welcome light wherever it may come from. We study the great books of God, his book of history, his book of nature, his book of self-communication.

"However, we do not stop with mere information. If knowledge were sufficient a Christian college would be superfluous. Italy has scholars, has inventors, has men of genius and of strong minds. But Christian education proceeds from information to interpretation. Knowledge is the answer to the question: 'What is it?' Wisdom gave the answer to the further question: 'What does it mean?' What do the facts of life mean? Is there any meaning in them? Are all the facts of life merely the result of the actions and interactions of blind natural forces, or is there a divine mind and power guiding, directing all? The Christian interpretation links all life to a living God, who made himself known in sundry ways, especially in Jesus Christ, his Son.

"From interpretation we proceed to application. Information leads to knowledge; interpretation to wisdom; application to character. The important question is: How do you use the power gained by knowledge and wisdom? For personal selfish ends or for the benefit of others? Egoism or altruism? Christian education insists upon application in terms of service, following the footsteps of him who came not to be ministered unto but to minister.

"It is a great time in which we are living, full of problems, but full of opportunities, a mighty challenge for men of strength. Men who are strong in body and mind, with high ideals, of wide visions, with lofty aim and consecrated purpose, are to go from this place to do a man's work for Christ and the country."

Turning to Dr. Tipple the bishop concluded his address by saying that just as this place can be seen from all parts of Rome, so the work that is to be done here will be watched by world-wide Methodism, nay by all Protestantism, and will be followed by the prayers and the best wishes of all who love the cause of the Master. "I envy you your position as leader of the most remarkable and significant work ever undertaken by Protestantism in Italy; I covet for you and your enterprise the highest measure of success and pray that the fulness of the blessing of the Master shall rest upon you and the new collegio for the New Italy."

Others on the program were: Professor Vittorio Bani, Dr. Walling Clark, Dr. Alfredo Taglialatela, Director Amedeo Antelli, Lawyer Mastrogiovanni, Professor Guglielmo Nesi, Dr. Ernest W. Bysshe, of France, and Dr. William Burgess, president of the Wesleyan Methodist Church in Italy. Dr. Tipple presided. The singing by the students of the collegio would have stirred even old General Garibaldi. Many American friends, who happened to be in Rome, were present. Bishop Burt cabled hearty congratulations and wrote: "This marks the beginning of our second epoch of aggressive work in Italy. God give glorious success."

A BUDGET OF INTERESTING NEWS

Golden Sunsets

GOOD friends who have been celebrating that beautiful anniversary, the golden wedding, send us greetings. THE CHRISTIAN HERALD may take just pride in the place it occupies in the home interests of so many families. To be regarded as among the friends who are included in one's golden wedding anniversary is an honor and a blessing.

Mr. and Mrs. Enoch Golder of Lagonier, Ind., completed the fiftieth year of their wedded life on March 6, and many friends visited them in their hospitable home; in the evening the church gave a reception in their honor. Five children are living, one died in infancy.

Mr. and Mrs. James Pollard of Tilsonburg, Ontario, Canada, who celebrated their golden wedding on March 1, write that they regard the event as "a very opportune occasion as old subscribers to send greetings of cheer and encouragement. THE CHRISTIAN HERALD has been a constant welcome visitor at our home for well nigh thirty-seven of our fifty years of wedded life. We like it for its broadmindedness, its Scriptural teachings, and the stand it takes on all the great moral issues of the day, as well as for its purpose to build up the kingdom of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, and to uphold the faith once delivered to the saints. May it long thus continue, for it seems to be sorely needed. We have been married for fifty years, and there have been no deaths in our family for all those years; our five children and eleven grandchildren all are living. Surely goodness and mercy have followed us all the days of our life, and God has given us a goodly heritage."

Oil City Roused by a Revival

AT a series of tabernacle meetings in Oil City, Pa., conducted by Evangelist Biederwolf and party many conversions were reported, among them that of the mayor of the town. The night after, he led forward the chief of the fire department to the altar. The personal influence of representative persons brought policemen, street-car men, a district attorney, an auditor, and many other business and professional men. In the four weeks, 5,177 persons professed conversion, 274 coming forward on the last night. The tabernacle was a bee-hive of personal workers during the meetings. In addition to the decisions, there were 1,636 "forward steps" taken during the campaign. These include daily prayer and Bible study, family worship, attendance upon the regular church services, definite financial support of the Gospel, personal work as soul-winners, and other activities.

Prayed for Battleship

BISHOP E. E. HOSS of Oklahoma offered a prayer at the launching of the great dreadnought Oklahoma by the New York Shipbuilding Company from its yard in Camden, N. J., on Monday, March 23. It was suggested to the secretary of the navy, Josephus Daniels, by the Society of Sponsors, that it would be appropriate to have a prayer at the launching of this battleship. Secretary Daniels, who attended the launching, spoke of this suggestion to the members of the firm of the New York Shipbuilding Company and they in turn referred it to Mrs. Cruce, the wife of Governor Cruce, and to Miss Cruce, who christened the battleship, and to other members of the distinguished Oklahoma party.

Mrs. Cruce stated that she wished it were possible to secure Bishop Hoss to offer prayer. The bishop was very glad to perform this service. He prayed to the God of those that go down to the sea in ships to "hasten the coming of that golden age in which all nations shall be bound together in a universal brotherhood." He invoked blessing on the battleship, prayed that it might never become an instrument of destruction, nor an instrument of strife, but "always and everywhere a minister of peace and a guardian of the rights and interests of mankind, protecting the magnanimity of Christian civilization. "Take into thy providential care," he prayed, "the officers and men who shall go down to the sea on its ample decks; shield them from storms and other disasters; may their lives be precious in thy sight; give to them a due sense of the dignity of their places among men; help them to remember that they have the honor of our native land and their fellow countrymen in their keeping. If supreme trial should ever come to them, endow them with adequate strength to meet it and put thy shield over them."

The Famine in Japan

MISSIONARY letters from Japan bring late news of famine conditions and the spread of epidemic diseases, notably typhoid. Three years of shortage have been followed by the failure of the rice crop. Many persons are trying to subsist on straw and tree bark. A milk substitute is made from rice-hulls beaten into powder and mixed with hot water. In Sapporo, a relief committee made a canvass for food collection on six consecutive nights. Rice, barley, clothing, bedding and money were asked. The canvass resulted in a collection valued at nearly one thousand yen ($500). The government is reported to have appropriated 6,000,000 yen ($3,000,000).

A WEEK IN THE WORLD'S NEWS

Coal Miners' Strike Becomes a War

THE coal region in the southernmost part of Colorado is the scene of serious conflict between striking miners and the Colorado National Guard. Unrest and disorder there are of long standing. The arrest in January of the eighty-two-year-old strike leader "Mother" Jones, her detention as a military prisoner, threats of rescue by armed miners, and her release on March 16 from the prison hospital, constituted a feature of the strike. The miners, most of them of foreign birth, have armed in great numbers and formed regular encampments. The militia have frequently clashed with these bands. Early in March the United Mine Workers of America protested to President Wilson that troops had torn down the tents of the miners at Forbes, leaving many families without shelter. On April 20 a battle raged in the Ludlow district for fourteen hours, forty-five being reported dead and many wounded and missing, some of them being women and children who were either struck by the rain of bullets, or entrapped and burned in pits which they had dug for their safety beneath the flimsy structures in which they lived, when the tent colony burned to the ground. Hundreds of those who escaped made their way to Trinidad, where they were cared for. The American Red Cross is on the ground. Following the battle the armed strikers gathered in the hills, preparatory to further hostilities.

Cape Cod Now Cut Through

IN AN interesting ceremony, April 21, the officials of the Cape Cod Canal Construction Company broke down the last remaining division in the seventy-mile canal cut through Cape Cod, Mass., from Cape Cod Bay to Buzzards Bay. It is expected that this important artificial waterway will be ready for operation by November. This canal, which has been constructed with very little publicity, is about as long as the distance from New York to Boston; it will be lighted throughout and navigation through it made extremely easy. The purpose is to save shipping the longer and hazardous trip around the cape. A four-mile approach was dredged in Buzzards Bay, and a great breakwater has been constructed on the eastern end of Barnstable Bay.

Indians Would Be Independent

SECRETARY LANE of the Interior Department, by a questionnaire addressed to representative Indians at all the hundred and more reservations and agencies, discovers that the Indians as a body believe themselves entitled to citizenship, independence of the Indian Bureau, and personal control of their immense property. Replying to the question: "What one thing should the government do for the Indians it is not now doing?" the almost unanimous reply was, in effect, "teach practical and scientific farming and stock raising." The Indian question is coming more to the front as of national interest, and it is possible that many wrongs which the red man has suffered may yet be corrected.

Flood Prevention Considered

THE Colorado River is reported as at dangerous height in southern Arizona, threatening the Imperial Valley region and its invaluable irrigation system. Congress may be asked to provide an emergency fund to enable the Reclamation Service to cope with the danger. The Board of Army Engineers has just submitted a report on flood control, dealing chiefly with the Ohio and Mississippi Valleys, but applicable wherever floods occur, with a view to governmental activities.

Incipient Revolution in Ecuador

THE desultory revolution which has troubled Ecuador since the death of President Estrada in December, 1911, has broken out anew, and according to press reports the rebels under General Concha inflicted a disastrous defeat upon government troops, April 19, afterwards besieging President Plaza, minister to the United States in 1905, in the town of Esmeraldas, capital of the northern province of that name, where the fighting is confined. A Colombian, Jorge Martinez, is a fellow leader of the revolutionary forces.

Cheerful News from Austria

THE Austro-Hungarian Government, it is announced, will appropriate $200,000 for participation in the Panama-Pacific Exposition. More than four hundred of the most important Austrian manufacturers are preparing to exhibit. The aged emperor, Francis Joseph, whose health has been the subject of alarming press reports, is now understood to be out of danger and rapidly improving.

To Increase Northfield's Usefulness

THE Northfield schools, founded by Dwight L. Moody, have begun a campaign to raise a million-dollar endowment fund, the first $100,000 having already been pledged by an anonymous giver. The schools, which include the Northfield Seminary and the Mount Hermon Boys' School, are maintained for young men and women of limited means who are earnestly seeking a Christian education. There are at present twelve hundred students enrolled. The institution has made a high record of usefulness.

New Effort To Prevent Vivisection

THE Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals, Philadelphia, has prosecuted a charge of cruelty to dogs in connection with surgical experiments against a surgeon of the University of Pennsylvania, and County Judge Bregy in charging the jury declared that "no one has a right to inflict pain or torture on a dog for the purpose of obtaining scientific information," which the society interprets as declaring vivisection illegal in Pennsylvania. The outcome is expected to be a renewed aggressive campaign against vivisection and a vigorous opposition on the part of physicians and surgeons. In the case mentioned, distinguished witnesses appeared for the defense, including Dr. W. W. Keen, whose election as president of the International Surgical Congress was mentioned on this page last week.

Army Advancing on Washington

"GENERAL" J. S. COXEY of Massillon, Ohio, gave the order to march to his second army of unemployed, on April 16, and the vast host of two hundred men started on their long tramp to Washington. It is claimed that some of the marchers were vagrants, released from the local jails in order that they might leave town. A negligible contingent of fifty high school boys was also included in the count, who, with a number of regulars, deserted at Canton. At Louisville, Ohio, the "army of the commonwealth" lost a few members to the police on the charge of intoxication, and an order was promptly issued from headquarters against drinking. As the awe-inspiring array proceeded, the numbers were rapidly increased by new recruits to the number of perhaps a score.

New Trial Granted Mrs. Wakefield

THE Connecticut woman, Mrs. Bessie J. Wakefield, confessed and convicted slayer, with a farmer, of her husband in July, 1913, and whose sentence of execution by hanging March 4 caused thousands throughout the country and abroad to importune the governor for a stay, has been granted a retrial on reasons presented by her lawyers. An appeal to the Supreme Court based on these reasons had acted as a stay of execution, and the court has now ordered a complete review of the case. The woman is twenty-four years of age and is the mother of three small children; her execution would have been the first of a woman in Connecticut in over 125 years. Her partner in the crime has paid his penalty on the gallows.

Navy Can Use Canal If Necessary

GOVERNOR GOETHALS of the Panama Canal Zone is reported as stating that the great waterway can be made navigable at once, if necessary, for 20,000-ton battleships; larger ships could make the passage by the middle of May. In case of war with Mexico there is nothing to fear for the safety of the canal, as the fortifications are being rapidly completed.

World-Meeting on Woman Suffrage

DR. ANNA HOWARD SHAW, president of the Woman Suffrage Association, has sailed for Rome, Italy, to speak on woman suffrage before the quintennial meeting of the International Council of Women, convening on May 4. Six and a half million women from twenty-one countries compose the membership of the organizations included in the council, whose object is to provide opportunities for conferences of women throughout the world. Mrs. Kate Waller Bennett, of Alexandria, Va., president of the United States Council of Women, will also attend. Lady Aberdeen, who has been president of the International Council for three five-year terms, is expected to be re-elected.

Reappearance of Witchcraft Alleged

AN EXTRAORDINARY story appears in the press attributing claims of witchcraft to six women of Sardinia, an island in the Mediterranean, who are now on trial on the charge of forming a witches' league, which has brought a malign spell over many other women and victimized hundreds of persons. It would appear that their claims to mysterious power in working miracles, performing cures, locating treasure, demonizing individuals and performing other feats, are attested by a large number of persons who have given evidence in the assize court at Sassari.

The Broader Ground

IT IS well to remember that beyond and above the incident at Tampico—which is interpreted as an insult to the flag—there lies the far broader ground of justification of the course our government is now pursuing in Mexico. In his address to the Senate at the historic early morning session on April 21, Mr. Lodge in a few notable sentences pointed out the causes which had led to intolerable conditions. In his judgment, as in that of many others, the greater wrong should not be overlooked in contemplating the lesser. "The grounds of our action here to-day," he said, "will be before the world and will come to the tribunal of history. I want to lift it up from the level of personal hostilities and place it on the higher plane of national action for the purpose of restoring peace and order to a distracted country, as well as for the protection of American lives there." Remembering the 150 Americans who have fallen victims in Mexico since the rebellion began, and the fate that has befallen other foreigners through the misdeeds of both the contending factions, the call of humanity and outraged civilization demanding a halt in these barbarities cannot but appeal most loudly to the popular judgment. It far transcends in importance the unatoned Tampico incident. Not Huerta alone, but the leaders on both sides are involved in producing conditions which should not be permitted to last longer.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is not an advocate of war but of peace. We hold to the principle that no dispute can arise between individuals or governments that is incapable of adjustment without resort to force or the shedding of blood. This is on the assumption that both are amenable to reason and willing to yield recognition to the principles of international law and justice. Compulsion is the last resort when all other efforts fail. War, no matter in what guise, or under whatever circumstances it may come, is an evil which should be averted by every honorable means within our power. When it becomes inevitable, then nothing remains but to face it with a brave front, a loyal heart and a good conscience.

While there may be reasonable grounds for an honest difference of opinion concerning the course our government has pursued toward Mexico, and while some may and do contend that war might have been avoided by wiser counsels, there is strong justification on the other side of the question also. Even the Senate, while critical of the President's personal attitude toward Huerta, found in the long-existing lawless conditions in Mexico—conditions from which this nation has been a heavy sufferer in life and property—logical ground for bringing matters to a focus and endeavoring to compel Mexico to fulfil her international obligations. Too long has Mexico been the disturber of the peace of this hemisphere and the wrecker of her own national happiness and prosperity. She owes it as a duty to her own people, to her neighbors and to the world to set her house in order and to make such a thorough readjustment as will place her in harmonious line with the sisterhood of progressive republics round about her.

President Wilson has repeatedly declared that we have no purpose of making war on the Mexican people, and no designs to acquire a foot of their territory, and we believe he accurately represents the view of this nation. We do not know what the future may hold for us in this unexpected and undesired adventure. We can only trust in God and do our duty as it arises.

The Colorado Strike

"I FEAR that Mexico will not be the only country that is torn by civil dissensions if we do not find a way to stop the terrible conditions now existing in this country involving the relations of capital and labor." These words concerning the Colorado strike, spoken in the Senate chamber at Washington by Senator Thomas on April 22, indicate how grave the situation had become on that date. Many messages from Colorado were received in Washington, and the depression over the Mexican situation was intensified by the distressing tidings from that State.

The public press was so full of the news concerning Mexico and the public mind so stirred by the opening events of the conflict there that the realization of the horror of the battle at Ludlow Camp was at first somewhat dull. Gradually, however, the ghastly fact was recognized that forty lives had been lost, including those of women and children.

It will be some time before the details of that tragedy will be known. Each side blames the other for the opening of hostilities, but there can be no possible justification for the criminally blundering militiamen who included the women and children among their victims. The New York Times said editorially on April 23: "No situation can justify the acts of a militia that compels women and babes to lie in ditches and cellars twenty-four hours without food or water, exposes them to cannon and rifle fire, and lets them die like trapped animals in the flames of their camp." The New York Tribune of the same date said: "Unless disproof comes quickly, the belief will grow stronger and stronger that here, as in the State of West Virginia, the authorities have far exceeded their constitutional duties to maintain order and are entering upon a campaign of war and destruction in behalf of the mine owners of their own State."

Isaiah prophesied of the time when "a man shall be more precious than gold." Representatives of labor have often been unwise; at times in their frenzy to bring better conditions for themselves and their loved ones they have been careless of the lives of others. But all these troubles are bringing closer the time when the human race will realize that the gain of gold is a paltry thing compared to the kingly right of every man to live, and to seek, under conditions of liberty and justice, the more abundant life. The church will miss an opportunity truly golden if in the strife now raging she does not make the toiling masses feel that she is their ally and their friend. It lies in her power to bid both capital and labor lay down their arms and in the name of a universal Saviour seek the way of justice and of peace.

The Sad Side of It

WHILE the whole nation is thrilled with the news of what is taking place in Mexico, where thousands of our brave young fellows—the "jewels of our country's manhood"—are facing danger and death for the honor of the old flag, there is another side of the picture which cannot be forgotten at this time. In the desolated homes of those who have already fallen at Vera Cruz, there is sadness to-day. These bereaved households may know little or nothing of diplomacy, or of the weighty questions underlying the Mexican situation. They only know that their loved ones, who were the life of their hearts, are dead, or lying in a military hospital wounded and helpless in a distant land. And this is merely the beginning. When once the tides of war are loosed none can foresee to what proportions the flood may attain. What we do know is that war always holds the presage of sorrow to come; that it brings in its train the inevitable sequel of desolated homes, of helpless widows and orphans thrown upon the charity of a world that never appreciates the true worth of such sacrifice and suffering. War brings unrelieved sorrow to thousands and inflicts losses that are beyond human power to repair. Let us hope and pray that the area of struggle may prove limited, and that the conflict may have an early ending. We feel deeply for those relatives of our brave boys at the front, whose hearts must be wrung with anxiety concerning them. May God in his mercy bring the war to a speedy close!

Hold Fast

"HOLD fast that which thou hast, that no man take thy crown."

The natural movement of the hands is to grasp, to seize, to clutch. Baby fingers reach out to take objects held near; when playmates gather each child wants the most attractive toys. And as life develops it is but an expansion of those ethics of the nursery. Hands reach out to clutch the grown man's possession, and he holds it fast.

But the voice of Jesus, during his incarnation, gave another code. Not to grasp, but to release; not to hold, but to give. "If any man will take away thy coat, let him have thy cloak also. Give to him that asketh thee, and from him that would borrow of thee turn not thou away." The open hand is the mark of Christianity. The hands of Christ were open always. "Come! Take! Receive!" these were the words of his lips, accompanying his gesture of the open hands.

Yet, through John, he sends another message. "Hold fast that which thou hast, that no man take!" Has he changed his plan? Are the open hands of his followers to be closed again greedily about their possessions?

No. But certain things must be clung to desperately if we are to continue helping and giving. Truth—we must cling to that. Greedy hands are reaching out all about us to take away the truth we have found. All sorts of seductive errors are abroad; all sorts of arguments are presented to make us surrender truth. We need to hold it fast. Deeper than argument is the profound conviction in the regenerated soul that Christ has found and saved and is keeping him. That is the truth. Hold it fast.

We must hold fast our character. Greedy as are the hands that would rob us of truth, still greedier are those that would rob us of our integrity. Subtle temptations to do wrong meet us every day. A thousand voices lure us to forget the way of Christ and stain ourselves with impurity and dishonor.

Though he invites our co-operation and longs for it, God is, after all, quite independent of us. His work will get done. If we, by letting slip the truth, or by forfeiting our integrity disqualify ourselves for doing the task he gave us, some one else will do it. The task will be done—but not by us. The crown will be won—but not by us.

History from the Ground

THAT science has become the handmaid of religion is now being demonstrated in a remarkable manner by the discoveries of archeologists in many parts of the globe. The old earth is itself the greatest and best revealer of history. Our written and printed volumes deal with recent times, when contrasted with the strange and wonderful discoveries that are now being made as science by excavation turns the leaves of the earth, bringing to light the facts concerning those civilizations and races that lived and loved and died more than 2,000 years before Christ was born in Bethlehem.

Our Bibleland tablets, dug up by American archeologists in ancient Babylonia, have close contact with that remote period. Professor Clay, the famous authority on early Babylonian and Assyrian civilization, who attests their absolute genuineness, agrees with us that these tablets—which were written in cuneiform in Abraham's time, and during the reigns of the monarchs of the Ur dynasty—are a wonderful connecting link with the earliest patriarchal days, and as such would be prized by Sunday school superintendents and teachers, adult Bible classes and Bible students generally. Of course, they are not for sale, but a note in another part of this issue tells how they may be procured. This opportunity will be open only for a short time.

Missionary Killed by a Lion

BY a message from Khartoum, Egyptian Sudan, dated April 21, it was learned that Ralph W. Tidrick, of the American United Presbyterian Mission in the Sudan, had died at that place from the effects of a mauling by a lion. He was attacked and wounded seven days before near Doleib Hill, Sobat River, where he was stationed. He started down the Nile for Khartoum to undergo treatment. The trip occupied six days, and the injured man was unable to rally. Mr. Tidrick entered the mission field in 1906, under the direction of the United Presbyterian Church of North America, with headquarters in Philadelphia. What a terrible ending to so beautiful and valuable a life! If we had not heard the story of Christ's cross; if we had not been taught by him the lesson of sacrifice for others, the sending out of men and women to foreign lands to be bitten by serpents, to be torn to pieces by wild beasts, to be cut down with the sword, or poisoned to death by diseases would be nothing short of a crime. But with the call of God to go, even in the face of extreme perils, to save precious immortal souls, the losing of the life is the greatest honor. Dr. N. D. Hillis of Plymouth Pulpit, Brooklyn, said, at an anniversary of the New York Methodist Conference recently, that his sister, who gave up her life in the mission field of India, would be so much higher up in heaven than he could hope to be, that he feared he might not even be able to see her again. The man killed by the lion, and the beautiful woman burned to death by the fever, are only members of that illustrious company of martyrs to which the apostle refers:

They were stoned, they were sawn asunder, were tempted, were slain with the sword: they wandered about in sheepskins and goatskins; being destitute, tormented (of whom the world was not worthy). (Heb. 11: 37, 38.)

Pair Commit Suicide

DESPONDENT because they believed they were a burden to their grandchildren, an old man aged 79 and his wife aged 78 hung themselves from the windows of an apartment house in New York the other day. They had been married for sixty years, and had had seven children, all of them now dead. Two grandchildren only were left, who took care of them. One of the grandchildren was an invalid, and both had a hard struggle to make a living, so they sent their grandparents to the poorhouse on Blackwell's Island, where they would have died with grief had they not been taken away in three days' time. As it was, the humiliation of their treatment broke their hearts and led them to take their own lives. It is pitiful that such a tragedy should have occurred in our time, in a city with hundreds of millions of dollars lying in the banks, and thousands of God's children all about them with an abundance of means to help the poor. What a pity these dear old people had not lived nearer to Christ, resting in the lap of his providence and nestling in the bosom of his love! He would have carried their troubles, and the fearful sin of suicide would have been impossible. One of the most pitiful pictures on earth is an irreligious old age.

Cast me not off in the time of old age: forsake me not when my strength faileth. (Ps. 71: 9.)

Cotton Supremacy Threatened

IT HAS not occurred to our people that the South should ever cease to be pre-eminently the great cotton-producing section of the world. Many have thought that God made the soil and climate of the Southern States on purpose for cotton, and that the millions of the world's population for all time would have to look to us largely for this fabric for clothing. These surprising facts have burst upon us: Last year the South raised two-thirds of the world's cotton crop; this year, 1913-14, it has raised less than one-half of the world's production, and this year's yield in this country is next to the largest ever known. For the first time since the invention of the cotton gin has the American crop fallen below one-half of the total world's product. There are flourishing cotton fields on the upper and lower Nile, in the east, west, middle and south coasts of Africa, in India, in Peru, Brazil and other countries. In the blessed providence of God, the prohibition of opium in China has thrown the poppy fields open to the cultivation of the cotton plant. Last year, the amazing crop of over 5,000,000 bales was raised in China, which is a little over one-third of our total Southern product for the year. China, which has been raising cotton for a thousand years, is going to be our immediate rival in the production of this staple. Our Southern farmers, who are very enterprising, will see the necessity of recognizing the sharp competition they have to meet and will take practical steps to lower the cost of production and to increase the yield. Cotton was raised in Bible lands thousands of years ago. The people spun the fabric into clothing. The Jews preferred the flax as a vegetable product, as being cleaner and more durable, and raised flax and manufactured linen in abundance. There is this symbolic reference to the fabric:

And to her was granted that she should be arrayed in fine linen, clean and white: for the fine linen is the righteousness of saints. (Rev. 19: 8.)

LAKE GALILEE, WHERE AMERICANS WERE ATTACKED BY BRIGANDS

AMERICAN teachers from the Beirut American College were attacked and robbed recently by brigands while they were on an excursion to the Sea of Galilee, now known as Lake Tiberias, and one of them—Mr. George H. Sherer—was wounded by a bullet. It is reported that the bullet wound is not dangerous. The American ambassador at Constantinople immediately called the attention of the Turkish Government to the outrage, and the promise was given that the property of the American teacher would be recovered and the brigands punished. The Sea of Galilee, on account of the purity of its water, the witchery of its natural scenery, and the fertility of its fields, was praised by the Romans, and was the pride of the Jews. But it stands out to the Christian above all the lakes of the world in beauty and importance, because Jesus lingered about it with his message and his ministry of healing; because he walked upon its waters, and by his command hushed its fierce storm into a calm. There are numberless Arab bands continually preying upon unarmed persons in that country, and there were bandits in the time of Christ, to which he refers in his parable: "A certain man went down from Jerusalem to Jericho, and fell among thieves, which stripped him of his raiment, and departed, leaving him half dead." (Luke 10: 30.)

Wolf Team Wins Race

JOHN JOHNSON took the lead in the all-Alaska sweepstakes dog race, the evening of April 14. He drove his team of eighteen Siberian wolves into Gold Run, twenty-four miles from Candle, the turning-point in the 412-mile race. He rested there a few hours, and then drove on to Candle. Johnson had averaged nine miles an hour from early Monday till late Tuesday. This speed was swift, in view of the fact that there was a fierce blizzard raging, with the temperature thirty degrees below zero. It was a wonderful thing to break these wild beasts to harness, and make them do their master's bidding, and with swift feet lead the race in the teeth of the storm. The savage impulses under self-control, the guidance of God's Spirit becomes an effective instrumentality and an inspiration to rapid progress in winning prizes in the race of life. There are few souls that become rugged or conquer, that have not encountered storms in life. The apostle Paul, whose savage nature was transformed by grace divine into the noblest ambitions and most glorious inspirations the world has ever known, has enjoined the mastery over sin as essential to success in the race of life:

Let us lay aside every weight, and the sin which doth so easily beset us, and let us run with patience the race that is set before us. (Heb. 12: 1.)

Glacier Reveals Lost Ax

SIR MARTIN CONWAY has recently told this story of finding a lost ax in the Alps: Zurbiggen, one of the celebrated mountain climbers of the world, in scaling a peak of Les Anglaises, near Chamounix, accidentally let his ice ax fall from near the summit of the peak. It fell some thousands of feet. In the normal course of things it was buried in snow and swallowed up in the glacier, being covered deeper and deeper each year, and at the same time being carried slowly downward as the ice flowed on. Seven or eight years afterward, Hon. C. G. Bruce and Harkbir, a Sepoy chief, in descending a peak in the Alps just as night was falling, and a great crevasse barred the way, being unable to find the bridge over it, cut a path down to the bottom, where Harkbir stepped on an ax which had M. Z. Zurbiggen's initials on the handle. There could be no mistake as to the identity of the ax, as Harkbir had seen it and used it before. So in the spiritual world, divine love will give us back what is worth preserving, though seemingly lost here. Every loved one we have seemed to lose shall be given back to us by the love of Him who gave himself for us. The finding of the most precious of spiritual things, of an immortal soul that was lost, is thus described by the Saviour:

For this my son was dead, and is alive again; he was lost, and is found. (Luke 15: 24.)

Treatment for Poor

MR. JAMES DEERING gave $1,000,000 the other day to the Wesley Hospital of Chicago. The gift is in the form of an endowment and is to be used in establishing clinics to furnish medical aid to the poor. Wesley Hospital was founded by William Deering, the father of James Deering. The name of the hospital will be changed to Wesley Memorial Hospital. The gift is singularly beautiful, because the whole million is to be devoted to the benefit of the poor. In many of the hospitals those who are able to pay for treatment are required to do so. This is as it should be. And yet that benevolence which seeks the cure of those utterly unable to pay the fees seems to be on a higher plane. A surgical operation that would cost the rich hundreds if not thousands of dollars will be performed on the poor man, or woman, or child, without a penny of charge. And the physician who would charge his patients in their palatial homes five dollars a visit will treat the friendless pauper without the cost of a cent. Christ put an exalted estimate on curing the diseases of the body, and on caring for his poor.

And Jesus went about all Galilee, teaching in their synagogues, and preaching the Gospel of the kingdom, and healing all manner of disease among the people. (Matt. 4: 23.)

A LITTLE ANGEL OF THE MOUNTAINS

BY CYRUS TOWNSEND BRADY

ILLUSTRATED BY GAYLE PORTER HOSKINS

SYNOPSIS OF WHAT HAS TAKEN PLACE

Olaf Tryggvesson, one of a party of orphans being sent west from New York years ago to new homes, climbs unnoticed from the train, as it comes to a stop, to gather an armful of flowers, and is left behind. He races along the track, then gives up, following the rails till late afternoon, when he turns off on a trail leading through the wilderness, where he meets an Indian, who takes him into his camp. Two miners ride up. The men play cards, the young Indian accuses one of the miners of cheating and is knocked down and cruelly kicked and beaten. The old Indian shoots the miner, whereupon the other miner shoots the father and also the mother, who rushes forward to protect him. The living miner binds the wounded Indian and the body of his companion upon ponies and rides to Cañon Creek, a rough mining town, which he reaches on Sunday morning. Olaf, following furtively, comes to the cabin of "Parson Bill," who is by no means a parson, at about the time Dead Shot Jackson reaches the Black Pup Saloon.

CHAPTER IV

Discloses Parson Bill as the Willing Attorney for the Defense of the Indian

"WHICH we all would jest nacherly like to know what this yere cavalcade means," drawled a grizzled old miner, originally from the Southern States, and whose name was John Sheffield, but who was invariably called "Old Four Eyes" on account of his being the only man in the camp who wore spectacles, habitually or otherwise.

On account of his age and a certain dignified bearing which the great steel-rimmed glasses gave him, Sheffield was by universal consent a sort of a leader or judge in all the nascent civic movements of the camp.

"An' you all has sure got a right to know," returned Dead Shot Jackson promptly and with a certain pomposity suited in his mind to his occupancy of the center of the stage, as it were. "This yere," he laid his hand on the body of the white man, "is all that's remainin' of my friend an' pardner, which you all knows perfectly well was Bud Wallace. I'll say this for him: Bud could take his likker like a man, he could lose his last dollar on the turn of a kyard with a smile, an' he was reasonable quick on the trigger—"

"Not quick enough in this instance, 'pears like," said Old Four Eyes shrewdly, interrupting the other.

"Well," said Jackson, "jest you wait until you all hears what I got to tell. First, though, we'll unlash him an' lay him out on the Pup porch yonder. Two of you fellers go in an' git a table for him."

"And how about this yere red party?" continued Old Four Eyes as two of the miners went into the Black Pup Saloon and brought forth a table from the willing proprietor, who saw much prospective business when he realized that his place was about to be the center of events. Besides which, Jackson was a favored and generous customer, and one with whose requests of whatever nature it was not exactly safe to trifle.

"This yere party is the man that done it."

"Done what?"

"Got Bud."

"What!" exclaimed one of the bystanders, "a low Injun, skurcely more'n a boy, got the drop on a man like Bud Wallace? I'll never believe it."

"I hope the gent is not disputin' my word," began the narrator, frowning menacingly and turning toward the speaker, "because if he is, I reckon we'll have to settle right now"—he reached for his gun as he spoke—"which one of us is tellin' the truth."

"Hold on. There ain't going to be no gun play in this yere camp until we gits this thing settled. After that, if you gents has got somethin' to argufy, the hull State of Colorado lies yonder an' you kin go out of the camp an' come to an agreement, but jest now we wants to know how it was," said Old Four Eyes decisively.

"Gents," said Dead Shot Jackson, having made his impression, "I accuses this yere low-down redskin of killin' Bud Wallace without no manner of cause or provercation an' of nearly killin' me, only I was too quick for him; an' I suggests to the company, it bein' Sunday an' no work a-goin' on, that we organizes ourselves into a court an' tries this party accordin' to due process of law, an' when we've convicted him that we hangs him forthwith. Also, this afternoon we kin close up the drink places for a spell an' all go out an' bury Bud Wallace proper."

"All them that's in favor of Dead Shot's proposal will raise their right hands," said Old Four Eyes, quietly taking charge of the situation. "No," he added quickly, as several hands went to their holsters, "hands without guns, if you please, gents. Cañon Creek has a bad reputation to the world, an' she's got to be showed up as a law-abidin' place," he continued, as the empty hands went up.

"Gents," said the proprietor of the Black Pup, "I offers you my place of business as a court house."

"I accepts," said Old Four Eyes, "it bein' understood that no drinks is to be sold durin' the trial, an' you are willin' to shet up durin' the funeral."

"Of course, provided the Red Dog does, too," returned the saloonkeeper, with easy shrewdness.

"We'll see it does," said Old Four Eyes.

"Gents," said the barkeeper with a keen eye to the main chance, "you all will have a chance to likker up for five minutes before the court convenes."

"Good," said Old Four Eyes, who seemed to think that liquor was a most proper prelude to justice. "I'll be jedge myself," he added, as usual no one objecting.

"An' I'll be persecutin' attorney," said Jackson confidently.

"We'd ought to have some one to defend the Injun to make it reg'lar—not that it makes much difference, of course, sence we're goin' to hang him anyway," said one of the miners, who was known as the "Doc" because he had once put a rough splint on another man's broken leg.

"HOLD ON," SAID OLD FOUR EYES, "THERE AIN'T GOING TO BE NO GUN PLAY"

"In course, the Doc's right, an' it jest strikes me that Dead Shot can't be no persecutin' lawyer. He's the complainin' witness. You kin be his lawyer yourself," said the court.

"Which I accepts with pleasure," returned the Doc, greatly flattered at this tribute to his legal abilities.

"Now we got to have some one defend the Injun."

"There ain't no one in this here camp that 'ud be willin' to defend an Injun," said one, after a long pause during which no one volunteered for the unwelcome duty.

"We got to 'p'int some gent, then," said the court, with a newly developing passion for regularity.

"Mebbe Parson Bill would do it," suggested another.

"Right," said Old Four Eyes, greatly relieved. "If any one would, it 'ud be him. One of you boys go right up to his shack an' fetch him down, an' tell him what he's app'inted to do on the way. Sort o' break it gentle like to him."

Hence the arrival in Parson Bill's cabin. The messenger stopped and stared in open-eyed amazement at the sight of a real live small boy.

"Whew! I believe I ain't seen a real live kid sence I looked into the glass way back home years ago," he exclaimed. "Howdy, kid? I'm mighty glad to see you."

Little Olaf Tryggvesson stood up and placed his hand in the big paw of the big miner.

"How do you do, sir?" he said politely.

"Where'd you git him, Bill?" asked the visitor curiously.

"He's a friend of mine, an' he's mighty tired an' sleepy. He's jest bin washed up an' I guess he'd better go to bed now."

"To bed at this hour of the mornin'! Why, it's jest gittin' up time!"

"He's bin up all night and needs rest. Off you go, kid. There's your bunk," said Bill, pointing to his bed.

"All right, sir," replied the boy, glad to obey so hospitable and welcome a command.

"Good. Me an' my friend'll go outside an' transack our business an' I'll call you up in time for your dinner. Now, what is it you want?" continued Parson Bill as the two stepped outside the shack.

The cabin was a flimsy affair built of logs and rough boards, with unchinked cracks in plenty, and little Olaf could hear everything that was said outside as clearly as if he had been out there himself.

"Well, that there Dead Shot Jackson—you knows him?" began the newcomer.

"Know him!" interposed Parson Bill contemptuously. "He is the blankedest, orneriest bully an' scoundrel an' blackguard that ever come to Cañon Creek. I'm sorry to say I do know him."

"You better not let him hear you say that."

"I'm a peaceable man, as everybody knows, but if you want to start some trouble, jest tell him so."

"I don't want to start no trouble. I'm a peaceable man myself, an' I jest wants to be let alone, you understand?"

"I'm not meanin' to interfere with you."

"I'll take no crowdin' from nobody."

"You didn't come way up here to tell me how peaceable we both are, did you?" asked Parson Bill, smiling pleasantly.

"Nope, I come yere because Old Four Eyes reckoned you'd be the only man that 'ud defend the Injun," answered the other, mollified by his companion's manner.

"The opinion of Old Four Eyes does me great honor," said Parson Bill, forgetting for a moment the careless speech he usually affected. "Who and where is the Indian and what has he done and what has Dead Shot Jackson got to do with him?" he asked.

THE BURDENS OF POVERTY*

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON BY DR. AND MRS. WILBUR F. CRAFTS

A BEGGAR in this life, a prince in eternity. Let us call up Dr. T. DeWitt Talmage, and in familiar tones, hear what has to say about this lesson: "A uster of old rags was the entire prop- ty of Lazarus. His bare legs ulcered ere an invitation to the brutes; his od the broken victuals that were tched out by the housekeeper—out the last creature out of which make a prince, yet for eighteen hun- ed years he has been one of the mil- onaires of heaven. No more waiting r crumbs. He sits at the same table ith the kings of eternity, himself one them. What were the forty years his poverty compared with the long es of his royalty? Let all the Chris- an poor be comforted. Your good ys will be after a while. Stand it a ttle longer, and you will be all right. o not be afraid of the dogs of dis- ess; they will not bite, they will help heal. Your poverty may sometimes ave led you to doubt whether you will ave a decent funeral. You shall have rander obsequies than many a man ho is carried out by a procession of overnors and senators. The pall- earers will be the angels that carried azarus into Abraham's bosom. The rveyors have been busy. Your eter- al possessions have already been laid ut by God's surveyors, and the stake hat bounds the property on this side driven into the top of your grave, nd all beyond is yours. You can af- ord to wear poor clothes now, when or you in the upper wardrobes is olded away the royal purple. You an afford to have coarse food here hen your bread is to be made from he finest wheat of the eternal har- ests. Cheer up! Weeping may en- ure for a night, but joy cometh in the orning.

"See also that a man may have every omfort and luxury here, and yet come o a wretched future. It is no sin to e rich. It is a sin not to be rich, if ve can be honestly. I wish I had five undred thousand dollars—I suppose might as well make it a million—I ee so much suffering and trial every lay that I say again and again, I wish had the money to relieve it. But alas or the man who has nothing but noney! Dives's home had a front door nd a back door, and they both opened nto eternity. Sixty seconds after Dives was gone, of what use his horses? He could not ride them. Of what use his rich viands? He could not open his clenched teeth to eat them. Of what use his fine linen shirts, when he could not wear them? This rich man of the text had everything once; now nothing. He had the best wine; now he cannot get water. He had, like all other affluent persons of the East, slaves to fan him when he was hot; now he is being consumed. He can afford no covering so good as the old patches that once fluttered about Lazarus as he walked in the wind. Who here will take Dives's fine house, and costly plate, and dazzling equi- page, and kennel of blooded dogs if his eternity must be thrown in with it?" (This quotation we have been keep- ing among hidden treasures since 1879.)

And Dr. Talmage only said it over after Jesus! He only tried to put it into our everyday language so that we might understand Jesus all the better. We seem to see six things which Jesus wished to teach his hearers that day and all people all the days:

1. That both rich and poor live in this world.
2. For the rich to neglect the poor is a heinous sin.
3. The rich may have the joy of giving and the poor should have the comfort of relief.
4. Both the rich and the poor are in God's sight.
5. Riches are at par only in this world, and they are one hundred per cent. below par in the next world.
6. There is an impassable gulf between hell and heaven.
7. The time for the right uses of wealth is now.
8. Prayers uttered in the world of the lost are not answered.

Lazarus is the hero of this lesson. His real name was probably Eleazar, rather a hard name to speak, so he was called "Lazarus." There was promise in his name, for it meant "helped of God." While he was living in this world it did not seem that God was helping him very much, for he was sore and hungry, and no friends were given to him; he suffered until he died; then he awoke to find himself in closest companionship with one of the choicest saints in heaven, for the angels had laid him in the bosom of Abraham, the man of all others whom he had revered in his lifetime, as the father of his people. But somebody is asking: "Why did God not help him in this world?" God did help him by giving him so much of his Spirit that he was able to see the invisible and take hold on heavenly things, so that other matters, even food and clothing, were of small moment to him. The bread of heaven was sweeter to him than the bread of this world. God sent friendly dogs to be his comforters. They were to be preferred to heartless men. Let no one who is poor consider himself forsaken of God; on the contrary, let him try to discover how God is helping him. Let him pray as Lazarus. Let him take it as a new name between him and God: "I am as Lazarus in thy sight."

"A jeweler gives us one of the surest tests for diamonds—the water test. He says an imitation diamond is never so brilliant as a genuine stone. If your eye is not experienced enough to detect the difference, a simple test is to place the stone under water. The imitation diamond is practically extinguished, while a genuine diamond sparkles even under water, and is distinctly visible. If you place a genuine stone beside an imitation under water, the contrast will be apparent to the least experienced eye. Many seem confident of their faith so long as they have no trials; but when the waters of sorrow overflow them, their faith loses all its brilliancy. It is then that true servants of God, like Job, shine forth as genuine jewels of the king."—Homiletic Review.

But because men and women have extracted good out of their need we are not therefore to look upon poverty as a state of blessedness, but instead we must do all we can to relieve the poor. Perhaps God does not feed the poor as he feeds the birds because he wants to bless the rich in being helpers of the poor. What could all of the rich do if there were no poor to help?

Here is a very good story for the children: The crown prince of Italy, Umberto, is a little boy nine years old. He has been taught by his sweet mother, Queen Helene, that he must always be kind to the children of the poor. Shortly before Christmas one of the newspapers in Rome opened a subscription list to raise money to buy Christmas presents for the very poor children of the city. In a few days an envelope bearing the royal sign was received at the newspaper office, and when it was opened it was found to contain two thousand lire (four hundred dollars). That was the contribution of the queen and her children. In the royal palace when they were getting the money together to put into the envelope, the little crown prince had asked: "How much money have I in my bank?" "I do not know," replied his father, the king; "if you would like, we will open the bank and count the money." That was done, and it was found to contain fifty lire (ten dollars). Then the prince said: "Take it all, and send it to that paper for the Christmas gifts for the poor children." And so he had his share in making up the four hundred dollars in the envelope sent by the queen.

Robert Hunter, a social expert, determined to count all of the poor people in the United States, and he found that "one-eighth of the nation's population are in a more or less constant state of poverty, and that forty per cent. of these are paupers, dependent upon some form of public relief." Now any boy or girl with a slate and pencil can take the present population of the United States and divide it according to Mr. Hunter's statement and find out just the number of poor people we have within our borders. Yet we are said to be the richest nation in the world. We are said to average twelve hundred dollars to every person. Mr. Hunter has written a very interesting book called Poverty, in which he tells us why there are so many poor people in the United States: "Low wages, lack of employment, deaths and maimings of breadwinners while at work, and sickness caused by insanitation and crowding in the slums."

Probably if Jesus were standing in Washington to-day he would say: "Move out the poor people, black and white, who live in the three hundred alleys of your city. Build them healthy and safe homes to live in and destroy the foul alleys." This is being commenced. The old Willow Tree Alley, famous for dirt and crime, is being made over into a beautiful playground for children. In almost every city there are habitations of the poor that we sometimes call "slums," that need either to be abolished or purified. Factories and workshops should be made more sanitary, and safety appliances should be installed. When all this is done, verily we shall not have four per cent. of poverty, and then if the churches and the Sunday schools will do their share in giving the Gospel light to everybody, we are not likely to have one per cent. of paupers. No wonder that Dr. Talmage wished that he had a million dollars to help the poor and suffering. Some people who have a million dollars, more or less, are doing their share of this sort of work. There are others who have loads of money who are keeping their money for their own comfort and pleasure. Their pocketbooks are not large enough to hold it all, so they put it in banks. It is a wonder that it does not burn its way out!

Depend upon it, the best and safest investments for money are to be found in God's work in this world. "When thou cuttest down thine harvest in thy field, and hast forgot a sheaf in the field, thou shalt not go again to fetch it: it shall be for the stranger, for the fatherless, and for the widow. When thou beatest thine olive tree, thou shalt not go over the boughs again; it shall be for the stranger, for the fatherless, and for the widow. When thou gatherest the grapes of thy vineyard, thou shalt not glean it afterward: it shall be for the stranger, for the fatherless, and for the widow." (Deut. 24: 19, 20, 21.)

So those are told who do not consider the poor: "Whoso stoppeth his ears at the cry of the poor, he shall also cry, but shall not be heard." Prov. 21: 13. These are the words of our Golden Text to-day. They will do to go with those words which Jesus spoke when he was teaching his disciples how to pray, "Forgive us our debts as we forgive our debtors." If we expect to get a blessing from God, we must be a blessing to others. We must be not only willing, but glad to share whatever we have of light, of love, of joy, of comfort, of riches, of any good thing.

* THE INTERNATIONAL SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON for Sunday, May 17, 1914. The Rich Man and Lazarus. Luke 16: 14, 15, 19-31. GOLDEN TEXT: "Whoso stoppeth his ears at the cry of the poor, he also shall cry, but shall not be heard." Prov. 21: 13, R. V.

The cream of cooking fats

Crisco is an entirely different cooking fat. You never have used anything like Crisco for frying, for shortening or for cake making because the Crisco Process of treating vegetable oil is different. And only this process can make Crisco.

Cream represents the richest, or best, of the milk. Crisco represents the richest yet most digestible form of food oil.

CRISCO
For Frying-For Shortening For Cake Making

Crisco is different also in this respect: it remains sweet and pure indefinitely. For the properties of the oil which cause it to turn rancid are eliminated by the Crisco Process.

Do not confuse Crisco, therefore, with other cooking fats. Crisco possesses advantages which no other has. None is of the high quality of Crisco; no more than milk is of the quality of cream. Try Crisco yourself, for frying, for hot biscuits and for cake. You will be delighted with it. You will see why it is so different.

New Cook Book Free

This new book by Marion Harris Neil, Cookery Editor, Ladies' Home Journal, gives 250 original recipes, is attractively illustrated, and tells many interesting and valuable facts about cooking and food products. It also tells the interesting story of Crisco's discovery and manufacture. It is free. There is also a quality edition of this book containing a total of 615 Neil Recipes and a Calendar of Dinners—365 menus of original and tasty meals. This book is bound in blue and gold cloth. The regular price of this book is twenty-five cents. To those answering this advertisement it will be sent for five 2-cent stamps. In writing for either book, address Department S-5, The Procter & Gamble Co., Cincinnati, Ohio.

Questions and Answers

Mrs. C. S., Berlin, Mich. A rural Sunday school teacher has two lively children (11 and 15), who attend church and Sunday school Sunday mornings, leaving the whole afternoon free. Naturally other children gather there. What is a right and proper way to use the time? She has no musical instrument.

The gravest danger that confronts Christian parents in regard to Sunday conduct is that by a too strict regulation they will make the day actually distasteful to the children. The day should be literally happy, and any plan that tends to make the children gloomy and dissatisfied does more harm than good. Story-telling is always a delight to children. They like to hear a good book read aloud. Get them to take turns in reading. Winter and summer alike, long walks are in order, and always delightful. Do not be afraid to let them run and laugh. Explain to them that it is best not to indulge in games because the habit of playing games on Sunday is coming to be a real national peril, and is taking people away from God and the church. Provide some refreshments for them; let them help in preparing them. There could be no harm in carrying the refreshments on their walk and eating them at the walk's end. Show them how they can find God in nature. Make them feel that Christ is the "God of the open air," and that he loves health and happiness. In such an atmosphere they will grow to love Bible talks and will come to realize that Christ is a delightful friend and Sunday a delightful day. Give them something to do. If they can take flowers or fruit to the sick or poor, or go to sing for shut-ins or at some afternoon service, they will find the day still fuller of blessing.

P. M. F., Valencia, Kan. The first bridge to really span the Mississippi was the great steel arched structure erected at St. Louis. It was engineered by Captain J. B. Eads, and was completed in 1874. There are three spans each formed of arches of cast steel. The center span is 520 feet above the river, and each of the side spans 502 feet above water. The rise of the center arch is 47½ feet and of the side arches 46 feet each. There is a double railway track across the bridge, and above it a roadway, 54 feet in width.

Mrs. L. E. S., Caldwell, Idaho. What is meant by the statement: "And God said, Let us make man in our image, after our likeness"? Gen. 1: 26.

Man's likeness to God lies particularly in "personality," in the fact of his being a "person." This is the great fact which distinguishes man from the rest of creation. He is a "person," with power to think, feel, and will, and with the capacity for moral life and growth. Still further, at the beginning, man had not only the capacity for moral life, but his moral life was like that of God. He loved God, loved the right, and hated the wrong. The tragedy of the fall reversed this. Man was still a person and still had the capacity for righteousness, but his spirit was so changed that he feared and distrusted God, and, to a greater or less extent, loved the evil and disliked the good. Jesus came to undo this calamity and to restore us to a moral likeness to God.

J. M. S., New York. 1. Scripture does not tell us how long Noah was occupied in building the ark nor what afterwards became of it. There are legends to the effect that it remained for long generations after the flood on a high plateau of Mount Ararat, but these are not regarded as authentic. 2. It is stated in Gen. 43: 34 that Benjamin's mess—the quantity of viands set before him—was larger than the rest. He was loaded with delicacies as a special mark of affection and respect and the reasonable presumption is that he enjoyed this hospitable distinction, which his brethren must have viewed with surprise if not with something like envy.

A Reader, Ohio. 1. How can any one prevent consumption if he inherits it from his mother and her people? 2. How can a tendency to nervousness be overcome? 3. How can one know the key word of every chapter in the Bible?

1. Medical science has proved that consumption can not be inherited. Consumption, or tuberculosis, is a germ disease, and all that can be inherited is a weakness or susceptibility which makes it easy for the germs to take possession and do their work. The way to avoid the disease is to build up the general health and strength in every way, particularly by plenty of outdoor air, night and day, plenty of wholesome food, exercise and sleep. If threatened with a chronic cold or cough consult a good physician. 2. The great producing cause of nervousness is worry. And the way to stop worrying is to stop. Here the Christian has a decided advantage over others, for we have every reason to trust our Saviour, whose apostle assures us that "all things work together for good to them that love God." Stop worrying, and begin to trust Christ. But nervousness can also be brought on by purely physical causes, such as overwork, sickness, or pain. Those with a tendency to nervousness should take plenty of sleep, but should not, on the other hand, worry if they do not sleep as much as they wish. Plenty of outdoor air, hard work, wholesome food, good company, wholesome fun, a hearty religious experience and faithfulness in worship and in religious work, a genuine interest in helping others, and forgetfulness of self, will bring you out. But here again, if really suffering a definite nervous disorder, consult a good physician, preferably an out-and-out Christian. 3. Dr. W. W. White, president of the New York Bible Teachers' Training School, has prepared a number of charts outlining various books of the Bible, and some of these give "key words" for the chapters. So far as we know no complete list has been made covering the entire Bible. Any Bible student could, of course, make a personal list, choosing an important word in each chapter.

A. E. R., Winfield, Pa. The "strange fire" mentioned in Lev. 10: 1, 2, is understood to mean that Nadab and Abihu, instead of taking fire into their censers from the brazen altar, took common fire which had not been consecrated, and thus were guilty of sacrilege. They had witnessed the descent of the miraculous fire from the cloud (see chap. 9: 24), and they were under solemn obligation to use that fire which was specially appropriated to the altar service. But instead of doing so, they became careless, showing want of faith and lamentable irreverence, and their example, had it been permitted to pass unpunished, would have established an evil precedent. The fire that slew them issued from the most holy place, which is the accepted interpretation of the words, "from the Lord." Besides, the two young priests had already been commanded (or warned) not to do the thing they did (verse 2). They had undertaken to perform acts which belonged to the high priest alone, and even to intrude into the innermost sanctuary. See the warnings in Ex. 19: 22 and Lev. 8: 35.

In the Mail-Bag, February 4, 1914, in answer to a question by G. W. O. regarding the length of the moon's path around the earth, it was stated that the moon's distance from the earth is 238,854 miles, and that this sum, multiplied by 3.1416, will give the length of its path. In some way the following sentence was omitted, namely: "Multiply 238,854, the number of miles the moon is from the earth, by two, and add 7,926, the diameter of the earth, and multiply this product by 3.1416, will express substantially the length of the moon's path around the earth." My attention has been called to this omission by a gentleman from Rochester. I am thankful for it.

Several Readers. For a summary of the whole subject of tithing, send to Thomas Kane, 143 North Wabash Avenue, Chicago, for free pamphlet on the subject.

M. M. B., New York City, writes, apropos of the recent celebration of Fanny Crosby's ninety-fourth birthday, calling attention to the fact that "her famous hymn, 'Rescue the Perishing,' was written long before 1870, as Mr. W. H. Doane, who wrote the music, copyrighted it in that year. I have a friend who knows positively that she sang it forty years ago." We believe M. M. B. is correct, and that the hymn is of a much earlier date than was supposed.

Mrs. W. H. P., Montague, Calif. The first church was founded as described in Acts 1: 13-26. Schaff in his Church History, vol. 1, p. 59, says that this is to be regarded as the occasion upon which "the exalted Saviour poured down from his heavenly throne the fulness of the Holy Ghost upon them and founded his church upon earth." The day of Pentecost therefore was the Christian Church's birthday—the beginning of the Apostolic Church.

THE YOUNG PEOPLE'S MEETINGS

NOTES ON THE CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR, EPWORTH LEAGUE AND BAPTIST YOUNG PEOPLE'S UNION TOPICS

Real Christianity*

WHAT is the Christian life? That is the question our lesson topic asks. Probably we all feel quite confident already that we know what a Christian is, but it will do us good to consider the question again, particularly in the light of the verses assigned for our study from the first chapter of James, 19-27. It has often been thought that James emphasized the practical elements of the religious life and did not lay much stress on the spiritual side of it. But some of the finest, deepest and highest things ever said about the soul's personal communion with God were said by the apostle James in his letter to the early church.

The first part of the special passage assigned for our study, chapter 1, verses 19-27, contains some definitely spiritual advice. Particularly verse 21. "Putting away all filthiness and overflowing of wickedness" (or, as it has been translated, "remainder of iniquity," that is, any evil that may still remain in the heart), "receive with meekness the implanted word, which is able to save your souls." Then the apostle goes on to insist that these deep soul-principles must be carried out in the hands and feet and tongues of those who profess them. It is ridiculous to be a "hearer" without being a "doer." Jesus himself followed up his teachings with earnest exhortation that they should be carried out. "If ye know these things, happy are ye if ye do them." (John 13: 17.) The man who heard these sayings of his and did them was a wise man building his house upon a rock; the one who heard but did not do was a foolish man building his house upon the sand. After all, the blessing comes upon the "doer of the work," James 1: 25, which is one of the finest phrases ever coined. And it is only the doer who shall in the end be "blessed." After stern words about the necessity of controlling the tongue, the chapter closes with James's wonderful summary of pure and undefiled religion to visit the fatherless and widows in their affliction, and to do this because one has kept oneself, through God's abounding grace, "unspotted from the world."

James is destined to be a more popular writer than ever during the years that lie just ahead. He almost seems to have written for the twentieth century rather than the first. We must have justice, man to man; the poor and the oppressed must have their rights; kindness and fairness and service must become the principles of our civilization. And these things will come to pass only as we "draw near to God," allowing him to purge our souls from the "remainder of iniquity" and to fill us with the same spirit of passionate zeal for inward holiness and outward service that thrilled the soul of the Saviour who came to cleanse the church and save the world.

The Silver Jubilee†

MANY different plans will be followed in conducting the Epworth League service for the silver jubilee, commemorating the founding of the League twenty-five years ago. Figures will be brought out to show the splendid growth of the organization, which has now reached a membership of 600,000, and to recount in detail some of its achievements.

But at a time of jubilee it is really more profitable to look forward than back. The question, "What has the Epworth League done in the last twenty-five years?" is important, and the answer to the question is thrilling. But the question what the Epworth League is going to do in the next twenty-five years is still more important, and the possible answers still more thrilling. It is evident that the committee who arranged the wording and the references for the subject had this point in view, for two of the three Scripture verses designated point particularly to the future. Jesus said to Nathanael, marveling at his first glimpse of his power: "Thou shalt see greater things than these." (John 1: 50.) In the other passage, Mark 9: 23, Jesus says: "If thou canst believe, all things are possible to him that believeth."

In facing the next twenty-five years it would be well to point out certain dangers that confront us. The first danger is that of coming to rely on some other strength than the strength of God. It is strange that every religious organization must meet this danger and that so many go down before it. Samuel said to Saul when the young king had proved himself unworthy of the trust God had put in him and the call he had given him: "When thou wast little in thy own sight, wast thou not made the head of the tribe of Israel?" But Saul, in his career as king, had outgrown God and so met his doom. If the Epworth League is to accomplish the work to which God has called it, it must remain so humble as to realize constantly its dependence upon him. The tasks that are to be done are spiritual tasks and there is no other possible power through which they can be done than the power of God's Spirit.

The second danger is closely linked to the first. And that is the danger of too much personal worldly prosperity. The writer of these notes has at times a strange feeling of regret in knowing that practically all of the young people who will read them, or who will come to the League meetings where they are being studied, are from at least fairly "prosperous" families. What does this mean? Why is it that the really poor people, the people in rags, the people who are out of work, the people from the homes where there is often not enough to eat, do not come to our churches and to our Epworth League services? I should like to write a message to these poverty-stricken folks. How can I get it to them? Is there nothing that you can do to get them to come to your League meetings and to your church so that they will hear the Gospel message?

There are other dangers which will occur to those who speak at this jubilee service. But we must consider some of the hopes for the years ahead. John Wesley said when he came to die: "The best of all is, God is with us." And that is the best of all to-day. Because God is with us we shall, if we obey him, go forward to new triumphs.

Again, the second hope is closely linked to the first. God's power is not only at our disposal, but God's power can precisely meet the needs of the people who are called upon to help. It is a distressing thing for a physician to find a patient suffering from some acute illness or severe accident which he cannot relieve at once because he has not the remedies or the instruments required. For the needs of the world to-day Jesus Christ has precisely the skill, the wisdom and the power needed. And he offers to put all these at our disposal for the work of helping the world. The Epworth League must face frankly the needs of the world to-day, must study them in its League courses and in private readings, and then must strengthen its faith that it has the message and the equipment to meet these needs. Our hope, then, is in Christ and in humanity. Humanity can be helped, and can be helped by our Saviour.

DR. PALMER PASSES AWAY

DR. M. W. PALMER, the last of the celebrated Palmer family, passed to his reward on Friday morning, April 10, in his ninety-third year. He was honorary president of the American Institute of Homeopathy, and was graduated from the College of Physicians of New York University in 1847. His wife, Miss Hannah A. Worrall, died twenty years ago. He is survived by his daughter, Miss Luella A. Palmer, assistant director of kindergartens in this city, and by a son, Dr. A. W. Palmer, editor of the Journal of Otology, Laryngology and Rhinology. Dr. Palmer was a native of New York City.

DR. M. W. PALMER

Since 1894 the Tuesday Palmer Holiness Meeting, known throughout the world, has been held without a single break in Dr. Palmer's home, No. 235 East Eighteenth Street, New York City. This Holiness Meeting was founded by Mrs. Sarah A. Lankford, in November, 1835, in the parlors of the Allen Street M. E. Church. It was soon after transferred to the residence of Dr. W. C. Palmer, No. 54 Rivington Street. When Phœbe Palmer, his wife, passed away, in 1872, Mrs. Lankford resumed the leadership of the meeting. In 1876 she became the wife of W. C. Palmer, who died at Ocean Grove in 1883. Mrs. Lankford Palmer continued the meeting in her home till 1894, when she passed to her heavenly home. Since her death, the leaders of the meeting have been Rev. A. C. Morehouse, J. C. Thomas, Dr. R. L. Wolcott, Judge Thomas O. Lowe, and Rev. Edwin Whittier Caswell.

It is considered that the great camp meeting of Ocean Grove and the National Holiness Camp Meeting Association were outgrowths of the Palmer Holiness Meeting. Millions of people all over the globe have visited or read about this wonderful Holiness gathering, which it is hoped will be continued in its usefulness and power. During the past twenty years Dr. Palmer has stood at the door every Tuesday afternoon, with very few exceptions, admitting people to the meeting. His genial smile, gentle presence and winning face, expressing sincerity, purity and noble devotion, was never forgotten by those in attendance. Dr. Palmer was not gifted in speech like his brother, W. C. Palmer, but in action he was ever ministering to others, ever giving loving kindness, ever manifesting a sympathetic tenderness of heart that won everybody he met. His whole life seemed wrapped up in the thought of perpetuating the influence of the Holiness Meeting, which had been handed down to him by those dearer to him than life. This spirit was also manifested in his wide medical practice. He visited the poor without expecting remuneration. To Bella Cooke, the gentle-souled "shut-in," known to CHRISTIAN HERALD readers, he was the beloved physician and ministering angel, not only giving unreservedly his medical skill, but his sympathy and devotion. Holiness meetings were held daily at her bedside, where multitudes came from churches, societies, the poor of the East Side, and distinguished people from other countries.

Dr. Palmer's funeral services were held in the parlors where the Holiness meeting had been conducted so many years on Easter Day, April 12, 1914. It seemed more like a coronation or ascension than a funeral service. The choir beautifully rendered "I shall see Him face to face and be with Him forevermore," and "Heaven is my home." Rev. Edwin Whittier Caswell offered prayer. Stephen Merritt, who had known Dr. Palmer for more than seventy years, and who himself is eighty-two years of age, delivered one of the addresses. He was followed by Judge Thomas O. Lowe. The interment was in Greenwood.

When I shall meet with those whom I have loved,
Clasp in my eager arms the long removed,
And find how faithful thou hast ever proved,
I shall be satisfied.

EDWIN WHITTIER CASWELL.

THE GROWING DIVORCE EVIL

IN a recent speech in the United States Senate, in support of divorce reform, Senator Ransdell of Louisiana gave some instructive statistics concerning the progress of the divorce evil in this and other countries. He said: "In the United States, the total number of divorces granted in 1867 was 9,937, or 27 for 100,000 population. Forty years later, in 1906, there were 72,062 divorces, or 86 per 100,000; thus, in actual numbers, there were more than seven times as many divorces granted in 1906 as in 1867, or, allowing for the increased population, divorce had increased 319 per cent. To put it in another way, in 1867 there was one divorce for every 3,666 people, while in 1906 there was one for every 1,162. Our closest competitors in Europe are Switzerland, with 41 divorces annually per 100,000 population; Hungary with [illegible], and France with 33, according to the statistics for 1910 and 1911, while Japan has 715 divorces to our 86.

"To make a most striking comparison, during 1901 the total number of divorces granted in the United States was more than twice as great as in all the rest of Christendom combined; yes, actually more than two times as many divorces among 75,000,000 Americans that year as among the 400,000,000 souls of Europe and other Christian countries. England stands in bold contrast with this country. In 1911 she granted a total of only 655 divorces, or 1½ per 100,000; while in 1906 the United States allowed 72,062 divorces, or 86 per 100,000.

"In Canada the important provinces of Quebec, Ontario, Newfoundland, and the Northwest Territories have no divorce laws, though divorce may be obtained in exceptional cases by special act of the Canadian Parliament. From 1867 to 1909—a period of forty-two years—these provinces had only 140 absolute divorces."

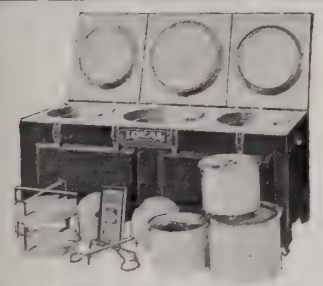
1914 Ideal Fireless Range



Until we invented the "Water-seal" top of the Ideal Fireless Range, a perfect fireless cook-stove did not exist. You have one question to consider in choosing a fireless cook-stove—which one best retains the cooking heat. Right out of the top—the hottest part—this heat streams away from the ordinary fireless cook-stove, and that precious heat is the one thing needful.

Imprisoned heat is what does the cooking. And when you examine the Ideal Fireless Range you will see that loss of cooking heat simply cannot take place through its Water-Seal Top. This is the crowning feature of the 1914 Fireless Range. This means that the Ideal cooks faster, cooks better and keeps the food hot longer. The Ideal roasts, bakes, steams, stews, broils—saves 80 per cent of the fuel and reduces work and worry to a minimum.

Insist Upon Having

thick, heavy, pure aluminum linings; seamless cooking compartments; inbuilt automatic steam valves; separate cover over each compartment; strata-laid insulation; Vulcanized solid-oak outer casing—all exclusive Ideal features.

We also manufacture Half-Round and Triplicate Pails, for fireless cook-stove equipment.

Every Ideal Fireless Range is sold under our positive guarantee. Write today for our handsomely illustrated catalog.

THE CHURCHES FOR PEACE

A HURRIED meeting of the Commission on Peace and Arbitration of the Federal Council of Churches of Christ in America was called in New York on Monday, April 21, to formulate a message to President Wilson upon the crisis of affairs between this government and Mexico. Secretary of State Bryan is himself a member of this commission. A committee of five was appointed to prepare the text of the message. They were Dr. Charles E. Jefferson, pastor Broadway Tabernacle, New York, chairman; Dr. Philip S. Moxom, Springfield, Mass.; Bishop Luther B. Wilson, New York; Daniel F. Smiley, head of the Lake Mohonk Conference, and William H. Short, New York.

The Federal Council represents seventeen million Christians, and its message to the President voiced the longing of the American church that war might be averted. It read as follows:

To the President of the United States:

We, representatives of the federated forces of 17,000,000 Christians in the United States, desire to put on record our steadfast friendship for the Mexican people and to express our sympathy with them in the disorders which now trouble their country. That a way out of their distresses may be found is our earnest and constant hope. We wish them prosperity and peace.

We wish further to express our conviction that the thought of war between Mexico and the United States is abhorrent to the vast majority of our people. The citizens of our republic want no war with our southern neighbor, nor do they desire to dominate it or to interfere with its internal affairs; but, on the other hand, they desire cordial relations and friendly intercourse.

We rejoice that in our President and our Secretary of State we have men who are lovers of peace and whose purpose it is to maintain peace, if at all possible, not only with Mexico, but with all the nations of the earth. That the purpose of our President and his counselors shall be carried out is not only our hope, but our confident expectation.

We wish to assure our Representatives and Senators at Washington that the voices clamoring for war do not represent the sentiment of the sane and substantial people of our republic, and we would remind them that the few newspapers which would hurry the government to extreme measures are voicing the wishes not of patriotic and disinterested citizens, but of mischief-makers and of certain vested interests whose aggrandizement is furthered by war.

"Blessed are the peacemakers." So we believe, and we are confident that the glory of the present administration will be enhanced and its fame augmented not by the slaughter of tens of thousands of the young men of the two republics, but by the peaceful solution of a difficult and vexing problem, by the forbearance and long-suffering and calm wisdom of a Christian statesmanship.

New York, April 21, 1914.

The commission was about to send out a letter to fifty thousand pastors, asking that Sunday, May 17, be made a peace Sunday, commemorating the anniversary of the first Hague Conference. To this letter the commission added a paragraph requesting prayer that the United States and Mexico be guided to a peaceful solution of the existing difficulties.

The letter read, in part:

Will you take Sunday, May 17, as an opportunity to speak upon the movement to substitute judicial methods in place of warfare, arbitration instead of battles, good-will and brotherly co-operation for national selfishness, hatred and disorder?

In this time of crisis we need to pray earnestly for the wisdom of God to direct us as a nation. Will you not, therefore, in connection with your services turn the hearts of your people to prayer, earnestly beseeching God to guide both the United States and Mexico to a peaceful solution of the difficulties existing between them?

ROME'S HAND IN FRENCH POLITICS

From the Protestant Observer, London, April 14.

IN FRANCE as in Italy, the full force of the ecclesiastical machinery will be put into motion in order to compel Catholics to vote for the nominees of the bishops. The hierarchy, which has now given its wholehearted support to the new movement, is preparing the Roman Catholic electorate and outlining the course of action which it expects and commands them to pursue. Cardinal Andrieu, of Bordeaux (we are informed by the Tablet, March 21), has reminded his flock that they should use their votes, and that in doing so they are bound in conscience to vote only for those candidates who shall have promised to respect "the rights of God and the Church. "Those," he declares, "who decline to make this promise are undeserving of your confidence, and if, from fear or from self-interest, you vote for them, you make yourselves responsible before God and men for the harm that may be done by their sectarianism to our religion and to our country."

Cardinal Dubillard, of Chambéry, in his pastoral, has written to the same effect. But the strongest declaration of all, and one which goes a long way to prove the contention of Protestants that the Papacy claims the right to rule and direct not only those matters which she calls "spiritual" but also civil affairs, is issued in a joint pastoral by the six Bishops of Bourges. They declare that, in view of the elections, it is their right and their duty to speak about them to the people, who are under an obligation not only to vote, but to vote right. The bishops add this significant point: "To vote is not an indifferent because it is a political act, for politics cannot escape from Christian morality or claim independence, seeing that conscience is binding in public as well as in private life." (The Tablet, March 21, 1914.)

Here we have, briefly stated, the argument which the Church of Rome uses in order to justify her unwarrantable intrusion into civil affairs, and it is an argument which would be effectually used by the ultramontane hierarchy in Ireland under Home Rule, in order to secure the return to a parliament in Dublin of only those who promise to carry out the instructions of the Church of Rome. And when they are elected they will not be free to act according to their own consciences, for the argument put forward by the Romanist Bishops of Bourges will be insisted upon: that they cannot "claim independence," because "politics cannot escape Christian morality."

The Pulpit on Church and State

THE Guardians of Liberty (Freedom Court No. 3) of Norfolk, Va., have sent out an appeal to "all evangelical ministers in the United States" to preach a patriotic sermon and hold patriotic services on Sunday, June 28 (the Sunday before Independence Day), and to explain at such service the meaning of separation of church and state, freedom of conscience, freedom of speech, etc., in order that the patriotism of the nation may receive a new impetus. The Guardians suggest that this be made an annual observance.

The Fundamentals

NEARLY five thousand CHRISTIAN HERALD readers have sent for sets of The Fundamentals, those wonderful books that deal with vital facts of the history, doctrine, and development of the Christian Church, presenting the belief of that church in clear and simple language. These ten little volumes are the equivalent of a whole library, a spiritual armament for the defense of the faith, and are priceless to Bible students. We will send The Fundamentals with any yearly subscription, new or renewal, for $2.20.

Or, for your own renewal and one new subscription at $1.50 each, we will send to you, or any address you may give, one set of The Fundamentals.

LITTLE PETER

THE following story the writer heard from the lips of the subject many years ago. About the middle of the nineteenth century a good pious Scotch woman was left a widow with seven boys and girls to bring up and educate. The dear mother found it hard work to feed and clothe her fatherless bairns. One of the boys, Peter, about nine years of age, to make her burden lighter, ran away from home. "Mother would have one less mouth to fill."

Tramping through Scotland, down through Cumberland, the boy arrived in the mining district in the north of England. A big warm-hearted miner took pity on the homeless boy and got him work in the coal mines. There he grew up to man's estate, rough, uncouth, illiterate. It was anything but a godly life he led, this son of a distant praying widowed mother.

One day he was attracted by the singing of hymns by a body of Primitive Methodists. He followed them into the chapel and that night was soundly converted. At once he began work for the Saviour, judging that if the Saviour could save him he could save any one else.

Then began a struggle to fit himself for saving men. His education, he used to say, "was still to come." So successful was he that the Wesleyan Methodists granted him a local preacher's license, and eventually accepted him into the ministry. The writer was a member of the church where our Scotch laddie was the pastor.

Twenty-one years after he left his mother's door he resolved to visit his homeland, and, if possible, find if his mother was still living. Arriving in Edinburgh, he changed trains for the old town, some few miles out of that city. Sitting in the car was a lady apparently in middle life, whose face seemed familiar to him. When he arrived at the station near his mother's home, this lady got out and started along the same road he was to take. To his surprise, as he drew near the old familiar cottage, still unchanged, she entered his mother's home.

As an excuse for seeming to follow her he asked for a drink of water. Seeing by his dress that he was a minister, the white-haired mother who had greeted his traveling companion invited him to be seated while the water was being brought. He inquired of her concerning her family, though prepared for her reply.

"I was left a widow twenty-one years ago, with seven children," said she. "It was very hard to fill seven hungry mouths and clothe seven growing bodies, but the 'Father of the fatherless and the Judge of the widow' took care of me and my bairns. They have all grown up, and, better than all, they are all Christians. I ought to have said all but one, my little Peter. He ran away from home. It has been a sorrow to my heart all these years. We have never heard from him."

It was getting very uncomfortable for the visitor.

"I am a minister," he said; "will you let me pray with you?"

Then into the Father's ears he told again the mother's story, until he came to her sobbing recollection of the long-absent boy Peter. "And now, Lord, about little Peter," he exclaimed. "We thank thee, O Lord, that little Peter is now here."

There was a moment's dramatic pause, a sudden cry, and Peter's mother had him in her tired arms.

The stranger who had traveled with the returning wanderer turned out to be his sister, whom, of course, he had not seen since she was a child. And who was Peter?

Well, he was no less a person than the Rev. Peter Mackensie, of the Wesleyan Methodist Conference, one of the most brilliant preachers and lecturers that Methodism ever produced.

He has passed away, or as our Scotch friends say, "He has sleppit awa'," to be forever with the Lord and his glorified mother in our Father's house.

LOZIER

"The Choice of Men Who Know"

A Real Lozier— This Light Four, $2100

THIS NEW LOZIER FOUR is made just as all Loziers always have been made—conscientiously and intelligently, and with no concessions to popular clamor or the direction others are going at the moment.

THIS IS A FOUR because our engineering knowledge said it must be a four—should be a four—if we were to make a car to fill the demands of thousands who asked for a Lozier, and yet set the limit they wanted to pay around $2000.

AND THIS LOZIER FOUR IS LIGHT—just as light as sound engineering practice will permit. But in making it light our engineers stopped before they reached the danger line—even the doubtful line.

WHEN YOU'VE INSPECTED THIS NEW LOZIER FOUR critically—ridden in it—and we defy you to tell after twelve miles per hour whether you are riding in a Six or a Four—when you've asked all the Lozier owners you know about Lozier cars generally, you'll decide you want a first-class Four—a Lozier Four that will STAY GOOD.

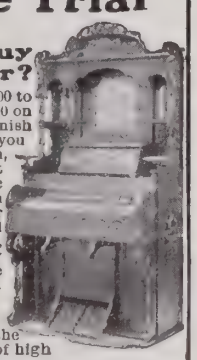
Why Shouldn't You Buy As Low As Any Dealer?

More than 250,000 people have saved from $100 to $150 on a high grade piano and from $25 to $50 on a first class organ in purchasing by the Cornish plan—and so can you. We offer to send you an instrument, freight paid if you wish, with the understanding that if it is not sweeter and richer in tone and better made than any you can find at one-third more than we ask, you may at any time within a year send it back at our expense, and we will return any sum that you may have paid on it, so that the trial will cost you absolutely nothing,—you and your friends to be the judge and we to find no fault with your decision.



You Choose Your Own Terms

Take Three Years to Pay If Needed. The Cornish Plan, in brief, makes the maker prove his instrument and saves you one-third what other manufacturers of high grade instruments must charge you to protect their dealers and agents.

Let Us Send to You Free the New Cornish Book

It is the most beautiful piano or organ catalog ever published. It shows our latest styles and explains everything you should know before buying any instrument. It shows why you cannot buy any other high grade organ or piano anywhere on earth as low as the Cornish. You should have this important information before making your selection. Write it today and please mention this paper

You Can Weigh Exactly What You Should

You can be Strong, Vigorous—full of Life and Energy.

You can be free from Chronic Ailments—every organ of your body strong as nature intended.

You can have a Clear Skin.

You can have a Good Figure—as good as any woman.

You can increase or reduce your weight.

I no longer need to say what "I can do" but what "I HAVE DONE." I have helped 65,000 of the most cultured, intelligent women of America to arise to their very best—why not you?

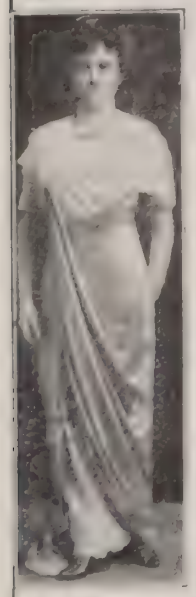
No Drugs—No Medicines

My pupils simply comply with Nature's Laws.



What My Pupils Say:

"Every one notices the change in my complexion. It has lost that yellow color."

"Just think what you have done for me! Last year I weighed 205 pounds, this year 145 and have not gained an ounce back. I am not wrinkled either. I feel so young and strong, no rheumatism, or sluggish liver. I can breathe now, too. It is surprising how easily I did it. I feel 15 years younger."

"Just think! I have not had a pill or a cathartic since I began and I used to take one every night."

"My weight has increased 30 pounds. I don't know what indigestion is any more, and my nerves are so rested! I sleep like a baby."

"Miss Cocroft, I have taken off my glasses and my catarrh is so much better. Isn't that good?"

"I feel as if I could look every man, woman and child in the face with the feeling that I am growing—spiritually, physically and mentally. Really I am a stronger, better woman. I don't know how to tell you or to thank you."

Reports like these come to me every day. Do you wonder I want to help every woman to vibrant health and happiness? Write me your faults of health or figure. Your correspondence is held in strict confidence. If I cannot help you I will tell you what will.

My free book tells how to stand and walk correctly and contains other information of vital interest to women. Every woman is welcome to it. Write for it. If you do not need me, you may be able to help a dear friend. I have had a wonderful experience and I'd like to tell you about it. I am at my desk daily from 8 until 5.

A LITTLE ANGEL OF THE MOUNTAINS

"Why, the unsightly Injun shot up—"

"Not Dead Shot Jackson, surely?"

"Nope, it was Bud Wallace, Jackson's pardner, and—"

"Too bad that he should have got the wrong man. Bud was a fairly decent sort of a chap."

"Yep, but he's the one the Injun got."

"The ways of Providence are mysterious," said Parson Bill. "Is Bud dead?"

"Deader'n a mackerel."

"An' of course everybody believes that those two desperadoes were quietly goin' about their business when the Indian shot one?"

"Well, that's what Jackson sez, an' no one seems to want to contradick him."

"Naturally!"

"They're goin' to try the Injun, which Jackson brought him in with Bud's body, both of 'em lashed to ponies, like that there story-book feller."

"Mazeppa?"

"That's him. Well, they've organized a court up at the Black Pup, an' we all thought it 'ud be more reg'lar to have some one to defend the Injun, an' we guessed as how you might do it. Leastways, nobody else was willin'. So I've come to fetch you."

"Good. The sentiments do credit to the camp. In every regular law-abiding community every man is entitled to a defender, an' if nobody else wil do it, I will certainly try it myself."

"Come along, then."

"How about the kid yonder?" asked Bill, relapsing into the vernacular. "Lemme take a look at him." . He stepped back to the open door and peered in. Olaf lay flat on his back, his eyes tightly closed. "Fast asleep, jest as I thought," said the Parson with much satisfaction. "I'm ready. Let's mosey."

But the boy was by no means asleep. He had heard every word that had been said. He knew the Indian was innocent. He was the only witness. He knew that without his testimony the poor red man would inevitably be hanged. He knew that he ought to declare the truth then and there. But he was desperately afraid of Dead Shot Jackson. He had seen what a terrible brute he was. The demon of fear beset the lad. He thought of what the desperado might do to him if he told. Something whispered in his ear that he had only to lie still and pretend to be asleep, and no one would know. He heeded that suggestion. He heard the two men walk away, and then he lay there and fought the familiar battle between fear and duty.

"It won't take long to git through the formalities an' hang the Injun," said the miner, as they walked off, leaving the little warrior fighting his hardest in the deserted cabin. "It's been kind o' tiresome this mornin' an' the boys wanted a little excitement anyways."

"Oh, you've settled it already, have you?"

"Of course. Ain't Injuns always guilty? They'd ought to be lynched on gener'l principles."

"An' what part are you goin' to play in the trial?" asked Parson Bill, smiling sardonically at the certitude of the man as to the guilt of the accused.

"I reckon I'll be one of the jurors, with the rest of the citizens."

"What's the use of having a trial if you've got it all settled beforehand?"

"Well, it make it seem more reg'lar. There's a sentiment a-growin' up in this town for law, an' we don't want no more killin' or murder than we kin help. There's most as many men lyin' in the graveyard yonder as there is livin' hereabouts now."

"But you're goin' to add an Injun to the lot!"

"Oh, they don't count; besides, we need an example. We got to begin some time, an' he jest comes in handy."

In this pleasant converse the two gentlemen soon arrived at the court house which had been made ready for the trial. Under the direction of Old Four Eyes, the citizens had cleared out the gambling and drink tables from the large open space in front of the bar of the Black Pup. One table had been left for the judge, a smaller one for the prisoner, and chairs had been placed for the jury. The spectators lounged about the room, sat on the bar, or disposed themselves in whatever place or way they found most comfortable. The Indian had been taken down from the horse and, with his hands still bound, placed in a chair in front of the jury. Although scarcely more than a lad, he displayed all the stoicism of his race. He could understand English well enough to know what he was facing. Indeed, he had no hope whatever of acquittal, and he knew that no plea that he could make would avail, no explanation that he could give would be believed. It would be the word of a white man against that of an Indian, and the word of a man with a reputation for brutal ferocity, absolute recklessness, and great skill with his weapon; which would make it difficult for any one to go against him in any court.

The court was organized and ready when Parson Bill and his guide appeared.

"Morn'n, gents," said the former.

"Morn'n, Parson," said Old Four Eyes, amidst murmurs of salutation. "I've deputed you to represent this yere prisoner at the bar."

"Whew! if I had to be a prisoner, I'd like to be one at a bar," said one of the wags among the bystanders, his remarks being greeted with a general laugh.

Old Four Eyes arose slowly, ostentatiously drew his six-shooter and placed it on the table before him.

"The cote will preserve order by shootin' the next man that opens his mouth without permission. Am I right, gents?" he asked.

"That goes," laconically answered the foreman of the jury, to whom the judge had appealed.

"You all hears? Will you undertake the defense of the prisoner?" continued Old Four Eyes to the newcomer.

"Since no one else seems to be willin', I'll try it," replied Parson Bill agreeably.

"Injun, this is your lawyer," said the judge.

"I demand time to speak with the prisoner before the trial and to consult with him in private," said Parson Bill, as the Indian looked at him indifferently.

"That seems reasonable to me," agreed Old Four Eyes. "An' hearin' no objections, I'll give you five minutes." He hauled out an old silver watch. "The cote is adjourned for that time. Mr. Barkeep, will you act as sheriff an' take the prisoner outside where he can consult with his lawyer? I app'inted you, so's no drinks could be sold during that time," continued the judge.

In accordance with this permission, the barkeeper, the prisoner, and Parson Bill went outside for a brief conference.

"Now, Injun," began Parson Bill, "how was it?"

"We camp down the trail—my father—my mother—me. These men come. We play cards, we drink, we lose everything, they cheat. I say so. Dead man"—he pointed toward the body of Bud Wallace lying on a table covered with saddle blankets—"strike me. He knock me down. He kick me. I lay on ground. My father he shoot that man. Other man shoot my father. Squaw come. He shoot her. He point gun at me and then he bring me here. That's all."

A LITTLE ANGEL OF THE MOUNTAINS

"You didn't shoot him?"

"No. I don't know what happen when he knock me down."

"It's a mighty serious thing to tell a gent he cheats at cards," said the barkeeper reflectively.

"But it is more serious to do it, isn't it?" remarked Parson Bill quickly. "Well, things look pretty black for you, I must admit," he continued to his client. "It's his word against yours, and there is no jury in Colorado that would take yours, I'm afraid. You have no witnesses?"

"No," said the Indian.

He had completely forgot the little boy who had visited the camp on that fatal night.

"Time's up," cried Old Four Eyes, appearing in the door of the saloon. "Trial's got to begin."

"All right," said Parson Bill, "we're ready."

The sheriff then brought the prisoner in and they all stood up while Old Four Eyes began:

"Gents," he said, "we're here for to try this yere man for murderin' Bud Wallace, whose dead body lies outside yonder. You all swears to do your duty in this case like men an' gents, so help you. Now set down an' keep quiet, an' let the trial percede."

Soul Winning in the South

For lo! the winter is past;
The rain is over and gone;
The flowers appear on the earth;
The time of the singing of birds is come.

MEDITATING thus, imagine the shock upon the report of a gun to see the mountaineer gathering up, not rabbits, but redbirds, and broiling and eating them afterward!

The mountain missionary in "Bloody Breathitt" is having blessed recompense for the shut-in, lonely days just gone. Such violets and wild beauties as I shall gather soon! Surely the clouds of sin have long enough prevented the dew of God from forming and falling upon the heart of this people. Oh, Christians, pray! Pray a great prayer for our help, for there is need. Some of my mission day-school children came barefoot in rags, walking in the snow from homes that beggar description.

How much longer shall Kentucky whisky and tobacco rob and ruin the inheritance of these little ones? How much longer shall they wait for county roads, for schools, for the pure Gospel of Jesus Christ? Christians, pray!

City folk, highly favored, who rant of questions concerning holiness: come here, and you will wish only to live it. For it is the one absorbing theme of the native preaching, but as a rule only practiced on the first day of the week.

We are "going on" three years of our toil with the "Soul-Winner Society" and would exchange only for work over the seas, would He permit. "Here a big life may be big in little circumstances!" So come down and help. M. ST. G. C.

Revival Closes Saloons

A STIRRING revival has just closed the saloons in Rushville, Neb. At a hotly contested election, the "drys" won. The pastors of the Protestant churches at the suggestion of Rev. W. S. Morrow (Presbyterian church) engaged Dr. Smiley, evangelist of Denver, Col. On election day the saloons boasted a large majority, but when the polls closed, the saloon men were dumbfounded to find themselves beaten. While the fight between the "wets" and "drys" was in progress, the evangelistic meetings, afternoon and night, were kept up vigorously. Many were converted, backsliders were reclaimed and church members renewed their consecration. The spiritual uplift has advanced the cause of righteousness through the entire community.

Makes Life Worth Living

Put this car beside every other Four—and compare it, point by point. Leave price for the last consideration. Into this comparison take even the most expensive Fours in the market. Go over each feature with the help of all the expert advice you can get. Study the catalogs. If you pick out your car with that kind of thoroughness—you are bound to give first consideration to the Detroiter.

Compare Its Beauty. Here you see the genuine streamline—no makeshift. The bullnose radiator is unique. It gives a touch you will find in no other car. And the "Venus curve" carries the flowing lines back in perfect harmony with the sweep of the fenders. Raven blue body and light blue "gunwale" stripe effect a wonderfully handsome color combination.

Compare Its Motor. This is long-stroke (Detroiter special design), beautifully finished, accurate in machining to the thousandth part of an inch. It develops a full 32-horsepower—more than equal to a 60 in the massive Fours.

Compare Its Rear Axle Construction. Not a single other car at the price can show the equal of it. The design is full-floating, able to withstand a ton of overload.

Compare Its Spring Suspension. The Detroiter is the only popular priced car to possess platform springs. The result is that the Detroiter is the easiest riding car of its class. Consequently more saving in tires and other items of upkeep.

Detroiter

Consider Its Maintenance. Over 20 miles to the gallon of fuel; over 100 to the quart of lubricant.

AMONG THE WORKERS

—EVANGELIST W. A. SUNDAY has been holding a series of wonderful meetings at Scranton. At three meetings held on April 12, he addressed audiences aggregating 30,000, the largest of any Sabbath of the campaign. On that day 550 professed conversion.

—THE PICTURES on CHRISTIAN HERALD covers are proving of much use in the Sunday school work of the Methodist Church Mission at Hinghwa, China (via Foochow), and W. B. Cole, missionary-in-charge, asks our readers to save the covers and send them in rolls to him, addressed as above.

—REV. RAGLAN PHILLIPS, Baptist missionary, Morant Bay, Jamaica, W. I., sends us the news of a bright native convert, Mary Mayne, who has been raised up from what seemed to be a deathbed to preach the Gospel among her own people. She is now leading evangelistic meetings and gives promise of being a most effective worker.

Mr. E. SHEPHERD, Pontiac, Mich., sends this practical suggestion: "The tracts of D. L. Moody, the great evangelist, can be procured from the American Tract Society, New York. Since thousands flocked eagerly to hear him speak, would it not be safe to believe that very many would read these little messages, if any of our churches would consent to distribute them after service?"

—THE LOCAL PAPER published at Penn Yan, N. Y., speaks of men about their work, children on their way to school, every one, in fact, singing or whistling the songs which Evangelist and Mrs. B. F. Butts have been singing in the successful union tabernacle meetings just closed in that place. Over 600 accepted Christ and nearly 400 united with the churches. The singing made an especially effective appeal. A marked impression has been made upon the whole community.

—CLEAN, INTELLIGENT, thoroughly domesticated Indians are to be found among the Iroquois of New York State in large numbers, and some of them are subscribers to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. Rev. J. Emory Fisher, Presbyterian missionary on the Cattaraugus Reservation, writes us that tuberculosis is not so prevalent there as among some tribes, and adds that most of the Indians under his observation "live in homes not distinguishable from the whites off the reservation."

—A MISSIONARY IN WEIHSIEN, China, writes: "We have just had a short visit from a member of the Canadian Presbyterian Mission, Honan. He has been greatly used by the Lord in revival work amongst the churches. He has just finished a nine days' series of meetings at Tsingchoufu, which resulted in a great awakening of the Christian church. There were confessions of sin, promises to lead a new life and several hundred conversions. He has now gone on to Kiaochow, a city southeast of us where the Swedish Baptist missionaries are working."

—MARINERS' CHURCH, of which Rev. Samuel Boult is pastor, has been giving at its West Side Branch, near the Chelsea Piers, a notable series of concerts for seamen. The programs for the concerts, which are arranged by Mrs. Charles R. Scarborough, chairman of the Woman's Auxiliary of the New York Port Society, would be a revelation to those who believe that sailors enjoy nothing but ragtime music. Mrs. Scarborough has enlisted the services of distinguished artists, who have declared that they have never had more appreciative audiences than these men of the sea. At the concert of April 2, Madame Louise Jansen-Wylie made a deep impression by the purity of her voice and the beauty of her art, and it was most interesting to watch the rapt attention of the men and their enthusiastic demand for repetitions. Very often the artists say: "Ask me to come again; I love to sing for these men!"

THE SLEEPING PRINCESS

BY MARGARET E. SANGSTER, JR.

WHEN I was a round-eyed, tight pig-tailed, but withal very romantic little girl, I loved to read fairy tales. I would sit by the hour on the floor or curled up in a big, soft chair, with a red spot glowing on each cheek and pulses that quickened as the prince slew his dragon or found his princess.

Now that I am a grown-up, no longer chubby, less round-eyed, with the tight pig-tails made loose and done up high, I still love fairy tales. Perhaps when I am caught reading them I feel a bit foolish and undignified; but the phrase "once upon a time" still brings a glad feeling to my heart.

The Sleeping Beauty story always fascinated me more than any other. My very young but sentimental soul used to be deeply stirred with pity and fear and delight as I read the adventures of the beautiful girl who slept for a hundred years, until the kiss of her prince came to wake her. Now, as I read over the very familiar plot, I wonder at the depth of poetic fancy and charming allegory displayed in it. For the story is, to me, an allegory.

There are a great many sleeping princesses in this world of ours. Some of them are beauties; others are decidedly plain. But they are all waiting for the thing that is going to wake them some day—that must wake them. Sometimes it is the kiss of a prince that uncloses the eyelids; very often something else answers the purpose.

I once knew a girl who was called talented in her small way. Some folks called her an artist and some praised her to the skies; but a few critics—men who knew things—said: "Her work is good, but soulless. She lacks something."

The girl was rich, happy, sheltered from every kind of hardship or pain. She had never worried over a more tragic thing than the hang of a skirt. She had never cried herself to sleep. And her work was good and pretty. Critics saw it and looked and turned away.

Then, one day, as quickly as a clap of thunder, one of her loved ones died. It was the first real sorrow she had ever known and it gripped at her heart-strings. Wherever she turned, a loving face looked at her and lonely hands stretched out wistfully. To forget—and to remember—she worked; and when the critics saw her work, they smiled, and then they said soberly: "She has found herself. Her soul is in her work."

So sorrow awakened one sleeping princess.

I know another girl—know her well. In fact, I think that I have known her ever since I can remember. Once upon a time she was a sleeping princess, too.

I remember how we used to go to parties together when we were just leaving grammar school. Boys would flock about the other girls, but they always ignored my little friend as she sat, bashful and speechless, in the darkest, loneliest corner. I felt sorry for her, yet I could do nothing to make her enjoy herself. She blushed when she was spoken to, and could think of nothing to answer; she fingered the edges of her sash and looked off into the distance when she was supposed to be interested; in fact, she was painfully shy and painfully self-conscious.

I lost track of the girl for a little while, and then, one day, I met her unexpectedly at the commencement exercises of a large college, surrounded by a merry group of boys and girls, laughing, talking, dimpling with pleasure. I tried to remember her as the disconsolate, lonely, shy little friend of my school days, but somehow I failed utterly. It wasn't the same girl—it was a different one. As I stood looking at her, a dignified little lady, the wife of a professor, came and stood beside me.

"Betty is the most popular girl I know," she told me. "Everybody likes her. It isn't because she's pretty, or entertaining; I don't know just what it is. But somehow, she seems to radiate laughter and happiness."

Later I saw Betty herself. Enthusiastically she hugged me and told me how wonderful it was to be together again, like old times.

"Not old times, dear," I corrected. "Do you remember how quiet and shy you used to be? What made the change?"

My friend was silent for a moment, forehead prettily puckered, head bowed in thought.

"I remember," she said at last. "I was a little stick, wasn't I? And I changed this way: One night I went to a supper party in another town and met a strange girl there—a girl from the city. She was a very unattractive-looking girl—her clothes weren't a bit prettier than mine, and yet people quarreled for a chance to be near her. I studied her carefully, and I learned her secret.

"When any one talked to her she looked as if that one were the only other person in the room. Her face expressed the interest she felt in the conversation. When her hostess asked her to do a thing she never had to tease. The girl was willing to do anything to amuse the company. When a girl far down on the other side of the room looked at her, she always sent a quick, flashing smile down the length of the table, and other people smiled with her. Somehow, I have forgotten the girl's name, but I owe her a debt of gratitude. I went home that evening a different person. I realized that I had been asleep before, and as I woke up I began to know that the secret of having a good time was interest."

So another princess unclosed her eyes.

Oh, girls, everywhere there are sleeping beauties. Some of them may never wake up; some may have their names cast in bronze. Some of them may die, still only half-awakened, with the words "It might have been" on their lips. Others may walk triumphantly through a hall of fame.

Sometimes it is joy that wakes the sleeping princess from her long nap. Sometimes it is sorrow, sometimes love. But, friends of mine, remember this: Sometimes it is a tiny thing that uncloses the tight-shut eyes. Perhaps your hand in friendship, or a kind word dropped at the right time, or a smile that is full of sunshine, may make a fairy tale come true.

WHY SHOULD I FEAR?

WHY should I fear to pass the gate
That opens into heaven?
The mansions where my friends await
My coming, morn or even,
Are bright with everlasting bloom
Of flowers, that glow in every room.

Why should I fear to have him say,
"Come, child of mine, and rest!
Come to the place of endless day,
The mansions of the blest.
There is no storm nor tempest here,
No pain nor sorrow, care nor fear."

Why should I falter in my faith,
When he who made me keeps
And guards his own and daily saith,
"The earth with sorrow weeps,
But heaven is glad with songs that bear
A harmony beyond compare."

Why should I shrink at thought of death
When none of his can die?
God breathes on them his loving breath,
And gives eternity;
He wipes away all tears from eyes
That open into paradise.

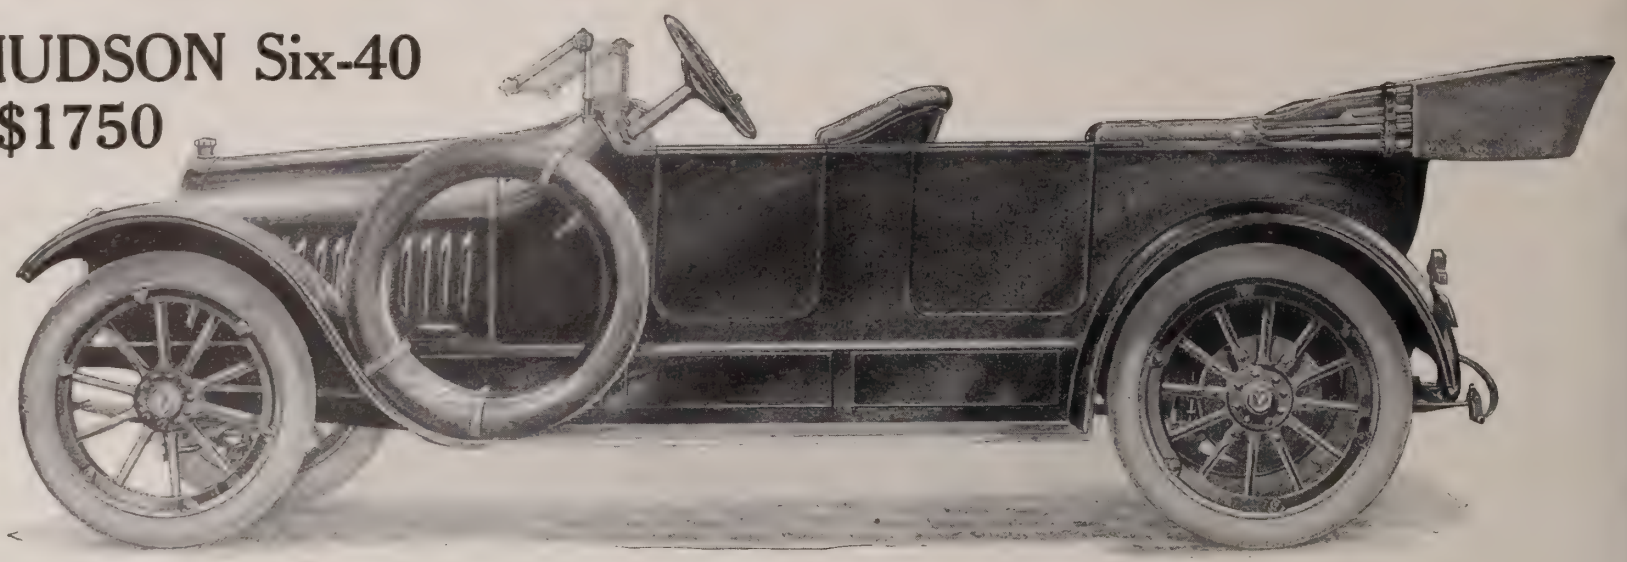
HUDSON Six-40
$1750



Now Supplied with a 5-Passenger as well as a 6-Passenger Body

The Car to Measure By

The verdict seems to be that this light HUDSON Six-40 meets the present-day ideals. It has won an amazing welcome. These are standards undreamed of a short time ago. But the evidence is that future cars are going to be measured by them.

Even years ago designers began to suggest that motor cars had almost reached perfection. The boast of some leaders, from season to season, was "No essential changes."

Yet all standard cars then were heavy. All Sixes cost $3,000 or over. Fuel consumption, for the power developed, was at its highest point. The body lines were broken at the dash. A hundred features in this new HUDSON Six-40 were entirely unthought-of then.

Hudson Engineers Kept at Work

It was then—when other engineering corps were being cut down—that the HUDSON corps was increased to 48. And then—when others began to be satisfied—Howard E. Coffin, our chief engineer, told us he had only begun.

About the same time, European engineers began to experiment with small-bore motors in Sixes. And they found a way to reduce operative cost from 30 to 40 per cent.

Now all men can see that some of the greatest advances in motor car history are among these men's recent achievements.

Now This New Hudson Weighs 2,980 Lbs.

Now comes a new HUDSON which completely upsets nearly all the standards of even two years ago.

By skillful engineering the weight has been cut to 2,980 pounds, with no sacrifice of strength. That for a car with 123-inch wheelbase and two tonneau seats.

Compare that with like cars whose makers failed to work along these lines. You will find here a saving of 450 to 1,200 pounds—or the weight of from three to eight extra adults.

Operative cost has been immensely reduced by this lightness and this new-type motor. Cars of this capacity, built along the old lines, consumed from 30 to 50 per cent more fuel.

And the price has been brought down to $1,750—a record price for a quality Six. A price below cars of any type, comparable in class and capacity.

Other New Standards

The awkward dash angle has been wiped out by this beautiful streamline body. All hinges have been concealed. The speedometer gear is concealed.

The "One-Man" top has been adopted, with quick-adjusting curtains. The left-side drive has come, the dimming search-lights, the disappearing tonneau seats.

To save the old overload on the rear tires, the gasoline tank has been put in the dash. Extra tires are carried ahead of the front door.

These, and scores of other changes, have fairly revolutionized last year's ideals in cars.

Measure Others by It

These are the coming standards. These seeming innovations will soon be essentials, like the new-born electric starter. Men are coming to Sixes. They are coming to lightness. They are coming to reasonable prices, to lower operative cost. And they are going to demand the beauty and equipment which you find in this HUDSON Six-40.

The wise thing to do, in buying this year, is to measure other cars by this. If we are right, then cars which cling to old-time standards are bound to depreciate fast.

And we are right. Motor car buyers have fairly flocked to this car. There has not been a day since this car came out when we weren't weeks behind on orders. We have built many popular models, but never a model which was half the sensation of the HUDSON Six-40 of this year.

Car like picture, with extra tonneau seats, $1,750 f.o.b. Detroit. Five-passenger body, same price. Standard Roadster, same price. Convertible Roadster, with lined leather top and windows that drop into doors—a luxurious enclosed car for rough weather, but an open roadster in fair weather—$1,950.

Our Larger Six-54

On the same lines we build the new HUDSON Six-54. The design and equipment are almost identical with the car pictured here. But the wheelbase is 135 inches, the engine more powerful, and the price is $2,250.

Questions and Answers

Mrs. E. H. W., Lansing, Minn. We have had sickness in the family, and now have just buried our only daughter. She left a husband and two sons. I notice that people tell in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD of answers to prayer. Is it best to ask God to heal unconditionally or to say: "Thy will be done"? Should one dare to say that God must answer the prayer?

We must always remember in praying that God knows everything and we know very little. We often deny the earnest requests of our children because we know that what they ask will do them harm rather than good. It has sometimes happened that when friends have prayed insistently for the recovery of loved ones, other casualties and sufferings, perhaps worse than death, have overwhelmed them. So our prayers should end like Christ's own prayer: "Nevertheless, not my will but thine be done." What is most important in prayer is to enter into such close fellowship with God, to have such intimate conversation with him, that we come to have something of an understanding of what he himself desires. No matter how strong our own wishes may be, there should always be the stronger and deeper wish that God's will be done. And we must remember that his will is our best welfare and that of all our friends. Sometimes when a Christian is praying for something not specifically promised in the written Word, he seems to receive an "assurance" that God wishes to do certain things for or through him. After such a deep, clear, unmistakable assurance he is justified in praying vehemently, battling against the forces of doubt and wrong, holding fast to the promise and remembering that God "cannot deny himself." Especially can we pray in this manner when the prayer is for the forgiveness of our sins, the cleansing of our hearts, or our enduement with the Holy Spirit, for these things are plainly, specifically promised in his Word. In cases of sickness, while there are many promises for health, we know that we and all our friends must some time die. While using all the human means and skill available we should pray, always in the name of Christ, that health may be restored. And while there is no doubt that many sicknesses would be healed if God's people had more faith, yet we must be willing to let God choose the time when he takes our loved ones to himself. And when they go we should not grieve but rejoice to know that they are safe with him, awaiting our coming in the new home.

Theophilus, Provost, Canada. The "power" spoken of in I Cor. 11: 10 is the head-covering or emblem which, according to the custom of that age, was the sign of her being under man and exercising delegated authority. "Because of the angels" is interpreted as referring to the cherubim in the temple, who were symbolically regarded as invisibly present at Christian assemblies, taking pleasure "in the orderly subordination of the several worshipers in their respective places." (See Eccles. 5: 6.) Chrysostom wrote: "Thou standest with angels: thou singest, thou hymnest with them," and Bengel has this passage: "God's face is uncovered, angels in his presence are veiled, man's face is uncovered, women in his presence are to be veiled."

L. R., Baton Rouge, La. Is there any authentic portrait of Christ in existence—one etc that can be said, above all others, to bear the stamp of genuineness? How are we to regard the various ideals of the great artists?

Perhaps the oldest and supposably the most authentic of these pictures is a cameo, said to have been cut in the reign of Tiberius, but it may not now be in existence. The Christ of the great artists are the highest ideal to which human art can attain. There is the divinely noble yet sad Christ of Ary Scheffer; the placid Christ of Raphael; the studious Christ of Da Vinci, the suffering Man-crowned Christs of Guido Reni, Quentin Matsys, Rembrandt, Titian, Correggio and Albert Dürer; the stern Christ of Munkacsy, and the later presentations of the Dutch, French, Spanish and English schools. Each artist has given to the world his highest conception according to the standards of his nation. But the sad face of the Saviour, pleasure with its fullness of power and majesty, yet manpower, may tender with love and sympathy, has eluded them all.

C. W. D., Clinton, Ind. Isa. 65: 17-25 is a prophecy, which, according to some commentators, while it is to be fulfilled in a degree on the millennial earth, will receive its full accomplishment only after the earth has passed through a regenerative process. Then the longevity of the first age will be restored; infants will not die in childhood but will live to great age, and no man will die prematurely; indeed, the period of human life will be so extended that if a man, being a sinner, were to die a centenarian it would be regarded as a life cut off in punishment for his sins. The whole passage goes to show that the millennial age on earth, though far superior to the present age, will still be imperfect, as sin and death will still have a place in it. (See Rev. 20: 7, 8.)

I. N. J., Sterling, Ill. We think that your wisest course is to stand by your church in which you were married, in which your children were baptized, and in which you are a teacher and active worker. Although every second Sunday you may miss some of the satisfaction that comes from hearing a good sermon, remember that by doing so you are giving up something for the sake of others. You have all the other services at your disposal to benefit by. Changing churches is usually an unsatisfactory matter. We have known people to change around until they hardly knew what they believed. You are in a church which is strong and orthodox and a denominator of practical Christianity. Keep close to it and to its people, and particularly keep up your Sunday school, and you cannot fail to derive spiritual benefit.

Inquirer, Des Moines, Iowa. Your view is correct in one essential point: the church which is most zealous and thorough in the religious training of its children will be the strong and spiritually vigorous church a few years hence, while the church, however great and prosperous it may be in a material sense, which neglects this duty, will inevitably decline. (See Rev. 2: 17.) It will find that by ignoring the tender shoots it has killed itself at the roots.

J. J. B., Binghamton, N. Y. Macarius was an ascetic of Upper Egypt, who lived in the fourth century A.D. Many wonderful tales are related concerning his piety. It is said that he was extremely charitable. On one occasion, when he was quite an old man, some one gave him a beautiful bunch of grapes. He was sorely tempted to eat them, but suddenly remembered an older friend, so he sent him the luscious fruit with his blessing as to one needier than himself. Struck with the self-denial of the giver, the older man, instead of eating the grapes, followed Macarius's example and sent them to some one who he believed would find greater benefit and pleasure than he. And so the bunch of fruit, undiminished, traveled from hand to hand, each time passing with a blessing until one day it came back to Macarius himself, who accepted it unhesitatingly as having accomplished that which he intended, in bringing cheer and blessing to many and in stimulating self-denial and generosity.

Mr. T. A. G., Mexia, Texas. In all the oceans there are daily two high and two low tides, the mean interval between two consecutive high tides or low tides being a little over twelve hours. Tidal waves in the ocean are governed by various conditions. The continents which cut the oceans into several large basins oppose the passage of the tidal wave and subject it to various modifications. Its regularity and velocity depend upon the size of the basin, the depth of the water and freedom from obstacles opposing its path. The tides rise much higher in the Atlantic than the Pacific.

R. L. C., Nogales, Ari. Please give the interpretation of the metaphors contained in the first seven verses of Ecclesiastes 12. I know that the passage is a description of an old man, but am unable to interpret all the figures of speech.

The portion referred to is one of peculiar interest from the fact that many of the metaphors employed are poetically descriptive of the advance of age and the decay of the mortal frame. It should be remembered that in Ecclesiastes the immortality of the soul is referred to only incidentally (see chapter 3: 17-21; also chapter 12: 7). In the portion to which you refer, the "evil days" are the time of calamity and old age, when the world's pleasures pall upon the senses, although the delight of the righteous in God never ceases. The "keepers of the house" are the once strong limbs, now trembling with the palsy of feebleness; the "grinders" that are few are the teeth in decay; the darkening "windows" are the eyes no longer with the oldtime power of vision; the rising up "at the voice of the bird" indicates the wakefulness of the aged who are roused by the cock crowing or the slightest noise; the "daughters of musie" are the ear and the voice, both of which deteriorate as age advances; being "afraid of that which is high" is the aversion of the old to climbing steep places; the "almond tree shall flourish" refers to the silvery hair of age, which is like the pink-white blossom of the almond; the "grasshopper shall be a burden" is a figure of the withered, shriveled frame of man in age, with joints that crackle with rheumatism; the "silver cord" is the white cord-like marrow of the spine, which is attached to the brain; the "golden bowl" answers to the skull, and the "fountain," it is suggested, may have meant the right ventricle of the heart. In this way the ablest Biblical scholars interpret this beautiful chapter, which is so rich in Oriental imagery.

C. D., Towanda, Pa. How can the planets be distinguished from the stars? How can Mars and Venus be located?

If you will look in the Christian Herald Almanac for 1914, page 18, you will find what planets are the morning and evening stars, and when they will take their places as guardians of the night. The students of the sky can recognize the planets as you can your acquaintances among men. The stars shine with a light all their own. The planets shine with a reflected light. When once you have located the planets, and have studied them, you will be able to recognize them at any time afterwards wherever they may be. Jupiter is the largest planet, but owing to his great distance from us his light is not as bright as the light of Venus. Venus is the most beautiful object in the sky. She rides through the empire of the night like an imperial goddess. S. P. LELAND.

A. L., Waconia, Minn. According to some evolutionists, a limb or organ which is much used becomes highly developed, while those seldom or never employed degenerate and finally disappear. This theory, however, has been shown to be inadequate as accounting for any considerable modification in the organic structure of animals, and does not hold good at all in the vegetable world.

WORKING FOR PEACE IN MEXICO

PROSPECTS of peace have brightened the darkening skies over the United States and Mexico. At the very moment when hostilities were expected to break out, offers of mediation from friendly nations allayed the growing war-wrath. Accepting these offers, but without halting preparations for armed conflict, both nations have applied their efforts to a peaceable adjustment of the situation. The factions at war with each other within Mexico have shown a tendency to draw together in the interests of peace, and Foreign Powers have applauded the patient policy of the United States. Despite the pessimistic prophecies of some, it was generally believed that with the close of April prospects for the avoidance of war were excellent.

Following upon the occupation of Vera Cruz by the United States marines and bluejackets, and the ordering there of infantry and artillery under Brigadier-General Funston, the government at Washington proceeded to perfect its plans for a defensive and offensive campaign. It was no longer denied that the situation had taken on an aspect of a grave national crisis, and that all the fighting resources of the country might become involved. Both the War and Navy Departments issued orders looking to the prompt movement of reinforcements when needed. The heads of the militia in all the States began active measures for mobilizing and preparing their forces to respond to the expected call to service. General Funston, with the Fifth Brigade of Infantry, sailed for Vera Cruz on April 24 and arrived April 27. It was the intention that these troops should relieve the sailors on land, and permit them to restore the complement of their ships. The program was halted, however, pending the outcome of proposals of mediation. The infantry forces were to be augmented by mountain batteries with three hundred mules to carry the guns, and possibly cavalry, in all about 6,500 men.

No further action of consequence was reported from Vera Cruz following the complete occupation of the city by our forces. Navy aviators carrying bombs created tremendous excitement in the city by sailing aloft and out over the land to reconnoiter. This picturesque contingent of the army arrived at Vera Cruz on April 25 on the battleship Mississippi, and immediately began operations, and thereafter made daily expeditions. The presence and movements of several bodies of Mexican Federals encamped at different points commanding the approaches to Vera Cruz were reported to Admiral Fletcher, who retained supreme command at Vera Cruz pending General Funston's landing and taking charge.

Warlike news developed at other points, however. Mexican Federal soldiers across the river from Laredo, Texas, were said to have attempted to destroy the international bridge between that town and Nuevo Laredo, Mexico, and an interchange of shots with American soldiers on guard occurred, several Mexicans being reported as killed and others wounded; much property damage was done. Elsewhere along the border hostile bands of Mexicans were observed, and troops and militia were ordered on guard.

The worst feature of the situation for a time was the desperate state in which many Americans in Mexico City and some other towns found themselves. Serious alarm was felt at Washington because of the reports of mistreatment of Americans by mobs.

individual Americans, and of open insults to the American flag and officials in various places. The foreign legations in the Mexican capital took precautions against demonstrations, and it was stated that a safety zone had been established about the legation district, with a British naval attaché and a German military attaché in charge, and that Americans remaining in Mexico City would take refuge there. About 1,000 Americans were understood to be at the capital, and many thousands more at inland points. Missionaries had been notified by their boards to leave at their own discretion. One report stated that Admiral Fletcher at Vera Cruz had arranged to exchange Mexicans wishing to leave that port for the interior, for Americans desiring to leave Mexico.

These and other circumstances seemed to justify the expectation of an out-and-out war with Mexico, and consequently the public experienced a feeling of great relief when on April 25 the governments of the three greatest South American nations tendered their services in mediation between the United States and the government of General Huerta. This tender of good offices by Argentina, Brazil and Chile (the "A B C" offer) was made in the following form:

LEGATION OF THE ARGENTINE REPUBLIC,
WASHINGTON, D. C., April 25, 1914.

Mr. Secretary of State:

With the purpose of subserving the interests of peace and civilization in our continent, and with the earnest desire to prevent further bloodshed, to the prejudice of the cordiality and union which have always surrounded the relations of the governments and peoples of America, we, the plenipotentiaries of Brazil, Argentina and Chile, duly authorized thereto, have the honor to tender to your excellency's government our good offices for the peaceful and friendly settlement of the conflict between the United States and Mexico.

This offer puts in due form the suggestion, which we had occasion to offer heretofore on the subject to the secretary, to whom we renew the assurances of our highest and most distinguished consideration.

Chargé O'Shaughnessy, who had received his passports from President Huerta, arrived at Vera Cruz April 24, accompanied by his wife and little son and members of the embassy staff. One of the staff stated that he had seen the Washington monument in Mexico City thrown down, and that many American women and children were refused permission to leave the city, and plans were made for the prompt advance of troops to the relief of any Americans in danger, but reassuring word was received at Washington to the effect that Huerta had finally removed all barriers to the departure of such foreigners as wished to leave Mexico. Thereafter, the trains into Vera Cruz and other seaports daily discharged numbers of American refugees, most of whom boarded outgoing vessels. Official verification has not yet been given out of the many rumors of extreme violence toward

West Virginia Coal Mine Disaster

TRANSFORMED into a small volcano by a series of gas explosions, mines Nos. 5 and 6 of the New River Collieries Company at Eccles, Raleigh County, W. Va., belched forth timbers, coal and rock from a depth of six hundred feet, and entombed nearly two hundred miners. The appalling accident occurred April 28. Mine No. 5 burned fiercely after the explosions, but rescue parties were able to descend the shaft of No. 6 to where the mines connected. Two other shafts were wrecked and filled with débris. The mines had at once filled with poisonous gas, and rescue work was almost impossible. Earl Henry, chief mine inspector of the State, took charge with a competent force; government rescue cars were promptly despatched to the scene. Of the total number of men caught in the mines, 171 are believed to be beyond hope of rescue; 67 escaped or were rescued from No. 6, some of them injured, and eight dead bodies were recovered: exact numbers are not yet obtainable.

Col. Roosevelt Makes New Friends

IT IS reported in the press that Colonel Theodore Roosevelt has discovered, in the depths of Brazil, a tribe of unclothed savages hitherto unknown and bearing the name Pauhates—by whom given, not stated. The report is credited to Captain Amilcar Magalhaes, of the Brazilian mission, accompanying the colonel; this emissary has reached Rio Janeiro and relates thrilling adventures experienced by the expedition.

Two-Wheel Automobile Appears

LONDON is said to have been vastly entertained on April 28 by the first public trip through its streets of a two-wheeled gyroscopic motor car, the invention of M. Scheidowsky. The car, with three passengers and equipment, weighed three tons, and was driven at about four miles an hour on short trips. The motion was reported as the same as that of an ordinary automobile; and, when at rest, the car was not perceptibly rocked by the controlling mechanism.

New Home for Y. W. H. A. in New York

AN IMMENSE throng on April 26 witnessed the laying of the cornerstone of the new home of the Young Women's Hebrew Association, New York, at 31 West One Hundred and Tenth Street. Mrs. Felix M. Warburg handled the trowel; Jacob H. Schiff made the address. Other notable persons took part in the exercises, Miss Grace H. Dodge, president of the National Board of the Y. W. C. A., making an address of congratulation. The institution bears important relation to the work of the Hebrew Young Women's and Young Men's Associations throughout the country.

Preparing to Evangelize New York

THERE is prospect of an evangelistic campaign in New York such as the city perhaps has never witnessed, under the auspices of "Billy" Sunday, according to reports of a meeting of ministers held in the Marble Collegiate Church on April 13, when Dr. Maitland Alexander, pastor of the First Presbyterian Church of Pittsburg, and others described the evangelist's work and its results. Dr. Alexander drew a remarkable picture of a chastened and reformed city, not the least noteworthy feature being a wealthy men's Bible class which formerly had been a poker club. The heavy reduction in the amount that miners spend for drink was another strong item. Another was the organization of a religious department with an ordained minister in charge, by the Cambria Steel Company, one of the largest in Pittsburg. It was stated that Sunday is engaged for the next two years, but that energetic steps may be taken to prepare for a New York campaign by him at the end of that time.

Peace! Peace! When There is No Peace

THE American Peace Centenary Committee, which has in charge the celebration in America of the one hundredth anniversary of peace between the United States and Great Britain, will not allow the Mexican situation to affect its plans, according to its chairman, Mr. John A. Stewart. This celebration is already under way and progressing toward a very impressive consummation on the centennial of the signing of the treaty of Ghent.

Honored for Work in Canal Zone

SURROUNDED by a gathering of prominent men and women, Surgeon-General William C. Gorgas, U.S.A., received from the American Museum of Safety the Seaman medal, in recognition of his work in sanatizing the Panama Canal Zone. Dr. Gorgas refused to monopolize the honors for the work accomplished by the four or five hundred young Americans who made the zone habitable and demonstrated that white men can live in the tropics with their families in as good health as in a temperate zone; a discovery which may yet open the tropics to a much larger population.

Five Points Mission to Move

THE famous Five Points Mission House at Worth, Baxter and Park Streets, New York, is to be torn down with other buildings to make way for a new municipal structure. The New York Methodist Conference has appointed a committee to select a new site for the work. This building, known the world over, was erected in 1894. It displaced the first home of the mission, which was erected in 1853 with funds secured largely by the efforts of Henry Ward Beecher and John B. Gough, on the site of what was considered the worst building in New York (bought and torn down to make way for the mission) known as the Old Brewery, a haunt of criminals, pointed out to Charles Dickens in 1842 as the "den of thieves" on "Murderers' Alley."

Presbytery Overruled by Court

BY DECISION of the New York State Court of Appeals, presbyteries of the Presbyterian Church may not assume ownership of property of individual church corporations upon dissolving such churches and severing the ecclesiastical connection with the presbytery; the property will still be owned by the church which preserves its corporate entity and worships as an individual congregation. This is the result of the long controversy with the Westminster Presbyterian Church of New York, begun in 1905 with the suspension of six members of the session, followed by their appeal to the presbytery, their restoration to membership, the breaking up of the congregation and merging of the Westminster Church with another, the dissolution of the Westminster Church by the presbytery, and the contest between the consolidated congregation and the presbytery for the possession of the property of the former Westminster Church. The controversy has been heard before all the courts of the church and several civil courts, and it is now settled in favor of the body of worshipers who continued the corporate form of the Westminster Church. The effect of this decision will be felt throughout the denomination, and affects church property of nearly three-quarters of a billion dollars in value. This weakening of the power of the presbytery over individual congregations may have widespread results.

England's Crisis Passing

WITH the most serious crisis which has as yet arisen in the Irish Home Rule question close at hand, a sudden turn of events has given the leaders on both sides hope that the settlement of the question may be realized by amicable compromise. As the progress of the bill through Parliament neared its final stage, public apprehension intensified. The Unionists of Ulster had continued to prepare for active resistance, and on April 25 unloaded a vessel whose cargo was said to consist of 70,000 rifles and 5,000,000 rounds of ammunition and distributed them by automobiles throughout the province. Two days later the opposing Nationalist volunteers also smuggled in a heavy consignment of war material, if reports be true. It was stated that the government had assembled a small naval fleet near Belfast, that officers of three Dublin regiments ordered to Ulster had refused to serve, that the arrest of Sir Edward Carson and other leaders was contemplated, and that the government would employ the severest measures if necessary to enforce Home Rule. On April 30 ex-Premier Balfour, a life-long opponent of Home Rule, proposed as a compromise to avert the horrors of civil war that northeastern Ulster be excluded from the operation of the bill without limit of time. Sir Edward Carson responded in conciliatory strain, and at once the belief was general that a peaceful settlement of the question was in sight. Probably the Home Rule Bill as it stands will be passed by the House of Commons, and an amendment in line with the above proposal passed by the House of Lords and accepted by the government.

The Tolls Repeal Fight

THE Senate Committee on Interoceanic Canals has reported out the Sims Bill repealing the Panama Canal tolls exemption, by a vote of eight to six, having previously approved an independent amendment which expressly reserved all American rights over the canal. It is stated that the committee was opposed to the repeal, but yielded to the President. Passage of the bill by the Senate is expected soon, though not without a close fight on the floor of that chamber.

THE CALL OF YOUTH

*A SERMON BY REV. RICHARD BRAUNSTEIN

TEXT: "Who is sufficient for these things?" II Cor. 2: 16

IT WAS Disraeli who said: "It is a glorious thing to see a state saved by its youth." We add to this remark: "Not alone the State, but the nation." In doing so we are thinking about the latent energy, the hidden power and possibilities and undeveloped forces wrapped up in the youth of our land. In the years that are to come, the leaders of this present age will be no more, having gone to their reward. Great soldiers of the Cross and heroes of a hundred battles will be resting from their labors. They will have received the victor's palm and the Master's "Well done." But the Son of God will still go forth to war. Who will follow in his train? Who will be sufficient for the great work that will have to be done?

Gigantic tasks will need accomplishment. Perplexing questions agitating the public mind will need answering. Sweeping reforms will be necessary and mighty wrongs need righting. The faith of the fathers, for which they died, will require strong men and women for its living. The old faith will need its defenders. The questions of social purity, business honor, Sabbath observance and the sanctity of the home and its ideals will need their champions. New interests will hold men's attention; new causes will convulse the passions of nations. There will be many solemn calls of religious duty and destiny to summon future Chrysostoms and Whitefields and Wesleys and Bourdaloues and Moodys to sound in the ears of an apostate generation the solemn commandments of Almighty God. It will be a splendid opportunity for the youths of our land to distinguish themselves in every department of thought and action. "Who will be sufficient for these things?" Where shall we look for the future saviors of our sacred institutions, and conservers of our ideals?

Pioneers Wanted

We are told that the great discovery of the fifteenth century was the art of printing; that of the eighteenth century, the application of steam; that of the nineteenth century the great uses of electricity. A recent writer has expressed the wish that in this age might be discovered childhood and the home. The greatest need of America is Christian fathers and mothers, establishing homes wherein the law governing the household is made sweet and strong and tempered by God's law. Homes wherein the Bible and great books are read and taught by example and precept; homes wherein prayers are said; homes wherein parents are the companions and advisers and confidants of the children, and wherein the evening lamp and fireside, and the companionship of music, and pictures and literature, and thoughts and conversation take the place of the club and the street, for the social instincts of the boy and the social desires of the girl. Homes wherein He who graced the table and the rooms of Mary and Martha will be the welcome guest, among such guests who only will contribute to the mental stimulus and moral characters of the occupants. Homes in which are tightly closed the doors to all influences that have a tendency to lower the standards of right thinking and living, and in which the doors are open wide for those forces and influences that have a tendency to build and foster ideals that make for godly manhood and womanhood.

That was a wise saying of Socrates when he said, "We spend so much time in gathering property and so little time on those to whom we shall leave it." We need more mothers like Susanna Wesley, who, though the parent of nineteen children, found time from the domestic duties and trials of a large household to devote to the secular and moral education of her boys and girls. "Beautiful, amiable, thoughtful, devout, and intelligent," says her biographer, "both linguist and lover, she was no more interested in the parsing of Greek and Latin than in the prattle of her children." Never has the world, since the days of Abraham and Sarah, and Mary and Joseph, had such a home as that home which gave to the world two illustrious men, a poet and a bishop.

The influence of such a mother and such personalities does not cease. Their work continues from generation to generation. We cannot compute what the world owes to this woman who lived and wrought, prayed and toiled so faithfully in that obscure village of Epworth, in that humble parsonage of the eighteenth century.

Here we find the key that will unlock the doors for high honor and attainment, and Christian culture for the fathers and their sons of this age. We can easily forget the things that we have learned yesterday, but it is difficult to efface from the memory the holy wisdom and admonitions of a godly father or the prayers and sweet counsel of a pious mother. They are the larger part of that inheritance with which young men and women start out on the great adventure of life. In the hour of soul-sickness and sorrow; at the moment of some great temptation; when clouds are hanging on the horizon, and we waver between decisions; when the sun has ceased to shine, and no friendly voices call, no friendly hands beckon—it is then that we remember the old prayers and the old teachings, and thank God for Christian parents. A hundred interests may occupy us; a hundred lures may tempt, and the subtle magic of the evil of the world may draw, yet we shall not altogether leave the true and the straight path. We shall remember the better prayer, the better things, the words in season, which at last may enable us to join our voices of praise in the chorus of the world's great, and say, "All that I am and all that I have attained, I owe to my Christian father and mother."

Working side by side with the home is the Sunday school, the only institution that deals with the child, that follows him through the life of his youth to fashion him after the God-man in character and purpose. "It is the God-established supply station for Christian workers and future missionaries." We use this word "missionary" at this time in its broad sense. To be a missionary means not alone that we go to Korea, Japan, China or some other foreign field, or to some far-off frontier at home. To be a missionary means that we have a mission in life. It is imperative that the child be taught the mission, the purpose, the meaning of its own life. It is to be guided in its gropings for the truth. It should be given a sense of direction. It should know the direction which is east in its travels toward the spiritual. In the Sunday school we are not alone engaged in teaching the history of a great nation, or its literature, or the biography of its great men. These avail but little unless they teach the movements of God in the events and ordering of the world's progress. They must learn the Christ-life, the will of God in so far as revelation permits them to understand it. In years to come they are going to be the disciples of Jesus Christ: they are to learn the art of right living. How necessary, then, that the teacher be thoroughly consecrated! How important that not alone preparation, but prayer be part of his equipment! God-given indeed the opportunity, awe-inspiring the task!

Looking Ahead

The young men and women in our day may have all the arts at their finger-tips, but unless they have learned the art of living righteously, their accomplishments will help the world very little. Unless the Christ-tincture is manifested in the things they do, future generations cannot study their work with profit. They may be endowed with the ability of leadership; but unless the moral man or woman leads, the world will not follow—at least not very far. The world may not be very good in itself, but it demands goodness in its leaders. Unless a man has beheld God and spoken to God like the beholding and speaking of Moses he cannot lead the world from its bondage to that Canaan which God desires it should possess. If a man is going to stand in the sacred desk, and proclaim a message, the success of that message will not depend upon the brilliance of his style, or the sparkle of his wit, or the profundity of his thought, but on his baptism from on high. "He must be sure that God has spoken to him before he can speak to his fellow men." The world may not always be ready to do his bidding, but it will respect and admire and applaud, when it knows that he is speaking fearlessly and with t courage of his convictions, born of a vision and unction from above.

The purpose of life is not power. We have h enough of our Cæsars and Napoleons. The purpo of life is not to accumulate money. It may be a ve fine thing to have a large bank account, but so ma have not anything! The poor are with us. Som thing must be said concerning them. The comme cial spirit is destroying men's souls. We cann live by bread alone. We must realize the differen between a hundred acres of land at so much p acre, and the beauty of a landscape. We need lift up our eyes to the hills. We need to have look at the stars. "Every day should close with look at the stars." Our possessions are holding down, and our vision is on the ground. Even who does not possess the ability to look around much that is his, can look up. The blue sky is the The floating clouds are there. The sun is the Looking at these, we realize the power and t majesty of God.

The purpose of life is not a great name, w large across the horizon of men's vision, unless th name is a good name and has the respect and co fidence of one's neighbors. We need to train o young men and women so that they can distingui the difference between a man, made in the image God, and a machine, and that weakness is a cri and good health an asset. The laws of health a the laws of God. They should be enabled to di tinguish the difference between that holy day call Sunday and a mere holiday. Life should be joyou The joy of achieving and helping the world to li better, because we are better. Joyous because are building, thought by thought, word by word a deed by deed for eternity and the soul's great afte while. The joy of service, the joy of salvation, t joy of faith in the knowledge that we are doi God's will and realizing God's purpose.

The Bugle Call

We cannot begin too early in planting the see of future greatness in the fertile soil of our yout We are told that before the age of twenty-five, li habits have been formed. A moral code has be formulated, a creed established, a political platfor erected. A life companion has been chosen and business or profession selected. Mental habits ha been directed toward the good or bad, which sh determine whether the thinking shall be the ki that retards progress of character or be instr mental in building character. Youth is the impre sionistic age, the age of vision and endurance; t age of planning and shaping of opinions. Timot was nineteen when converted, and at twent one was assistant to pastor Paul. He whom Pa and Timothy followed put the learned docto in the temple to rout when he was in his yout Adoniram Judson at twenty-two was preaching t glad tidings in India. Robert Morrison was doi work heroic in China in his twenty-second yea Thoburn began preaching at eighteen. Rusk wrote Modern Painters when he was twenty-fou and Bryant wrote in his eighteenth year his immo tal Thanatopsis.

In the triumph of the religion of Jesus Christ the world, one of the greatest forces is the power the young people. We are told that in the Unit States there are some twelve million young men the ages between fourteen and twenty-eight. W are told if they were to clasp hands they wou form two unbroken lines reaching from the Atlant to the Pacific. "They represent enough labor to into the forests and hew the timbers, to go into t mines and dig the iron, and manufacture it into ste rails and spikes, and construct a railroad reachi from New York to San Francisco between the risi and the setting of the sun." Young people like b things, the daring ventures, and are ready to sta on a thousand battlefields with heart-stirring fea lessness. The call of to-day is like a bugle call. A the red blood, all the strength of mind and bo and heart; all the freshness of youth; all the zeal young years is ready for the response. Best of a is the call of Jesus Christ. DAILY MEDITATION

BY PROFESSOR W. H. T. DAU

SUNDAY, May 17. Matthew 5: 17: "Think not that I am come to destroy the law, or the prophets: I am not come to destroy, but to fulfil."

"The law was given by Moses, but grace and truth came by Jesus Christ," says John. The peculiar office of Christ was, not to proclaim the law, but to lead men into the knowledge of the Gospel. The work of Christ presupposes that the law has done its work on men. But just for this reason, he had to assert the true nature and explain the full content of the law. Besides, it was necessary, over against the caviling of the law-worshiping Pharisees, that Christ should publicly declare his attitude toward the law. He does this in detail in the Sermon on the Mount. He declares this very law, which can save nobody, a holy and good law. He will not raise a finger to destroy it. As long as the earth endureth the law shall raise its voice in behalf of justice, mercy, truth, and denounce injustice, malice, insincerity. Men shall be told to the end of time that they are under obligation to fulfil the law, and if they cannot—as he proceeds to show—they must turn to Him who has fulfilled the law for them.

MONDAY, May 18. Matthew 5: 19: "Whosoever therefore shall break one of these least commandments, and shall teach men so, shall be called the least in the kingdom of heaven: but whosoever shall do and teach them, the same shall be called great in the kingdom of heaven."

These words are the preamble to the series of indictments which our Lord, throughout the greater part of the Sermon on the Mount, prefers against the professional expounders of God's law in his time. These people had done a great deal of mechanical work upon the Torah—the law of Jehovah: they had counted every word and letter of it; they had arranged the contents of the law, according to their notions of their importance; they had cast up innumerable questions of casuistry regarding the legality of this action or that. But they had shown such little respect for the true majesty of the law that they had not only, without scruple, broken the law by their personal acts, but had also in principle destroyed, by their interpretations, its binding force in its true meaning. Their boast as teachers and champions of the law was vain. The Lord tells them that they will not occupy that distinguished place in the kingdom of heaven which they claim for themselves, and which their undiscerning followers are according to them. That place belongs to the person who shall both " do and preach," who gives a loving obedience to the law in his daily life.

TUESDAY, May 19. Matthew 5: 20: "Except your righteousness shall exceed the righteousness of the Scribes and Pharisees, ye shall in no case enter into the kingdom of heaven."

Legalism is the term by which men have called that system of teaching which purports to bring men into heaven on the strength of their compliance with the duties prescribed by the law of God; hence, on their own merit. As a means of salvation, this legalistic highway to glory is utterly worthless, because it is a Christless teaching, and outside of Christ there is no salvation. The righteousness which the mere teaching of the law produces is inadequate, as regards both the motive from which it is enacted and the execution which is ever wofully limited. This righteousness avails not before the Searcher of the heart and reins. But, though this is the worst charge that we must bring against this teaching, the Lord in this place denounces the insufficiency of the Scribes and Pharisees for another reason: Even as a code of morals, even as a guide to truly virtuous living, legalism is worthless. It is not only its unevangelical character, its opposition to the righteousness which is by faith in the Lord Jesus Christ, but its contradiction of the true sense of God's law, that the Lord abominates. Legalists, as a rule, understand not even the law which they pretend to inculcate and enforce.

WEDNESDAY, May 20. Matthew 5: 21-22: "Ye have heard that it was said by them of old time, Thou shalt not kill; and whosoever shall kill shall be in danger of the judgment. But I say unto you, That whosoever is angry with his brother without a cause shall be in danger of the judgment."

The substance of the law of murder, in the accepted view of the Jewish interpreters in the days of our Lord, was this: A person who destroys a human life by an act of violence must be brought to trial. Why, the criminal code of any civilized nation says as much, and more. Even savages will apply the law of retaliation in this wise. That the law of murder lays its restraining hand on the murderous heart and denounces angry thoughts as a species of murder in the sight of God (who read murder in the heart of Cain); that the law of murder could be applied against terms of deadly hate and opprobrium which one person in a passion hurls against another—this view of the law was foreign to those doctors. They could not realize that deep spiritual truth that one "who hateth his brother is a murderer" before God, and "hath not eternal life abiding with him." If such indeed be the true meaning of this law, who is there that will claim to be without guilt? We have reason to pray with David: "If thou, Lord, shouldest mark iniquities, O Lord, who shall stand? But there is forgiveness with thee, that thou mayest be feared."

THURSDAY, May 21. Matthew 5: 23-25: "Therefore if thou bring thy gift to the altar, and there rememberest that thy brother hath aught against thee; leave there thy gift before the altar, and go thy way; first be reconciled to thy brother, and then come and offer thy gift. Agree with thine adversary quickly, whiles thou art in the way with him."

"Therefore," that is, because God will judge also the person who speaks any insulting word to a fellow man, and because he does not even wink at ill-will which we may harbor in our hearts, we should not allow any difference that we may have had with another to remain. We must seek reconciliation, else we cannot seek God. We must not wait, either, for our adversary to come to us with overtures of peace; we must go to him. No act of worship, no sacrifice that we are willing to offer to God, is acceptable to him when it is brought by a person who will not be reconciled. Stubbornness, headstrongness, hatred, all unfit men for his service, even as they render it impossible for a man to impartially and gladly serve his fellow men. "Whiles thou art in the way with him," the Lord's instruction reads. Soon both the parties to the strife may stand before their common Judge; one of them may be called hence before the sun goes down, and then all chance to seek reconciliation will be cut off. If you have offended any one, tarry not; go and make your peace with him. If he is gone from you, if you stand weeping at his coffin or grave, confess your sin to the Lord and seek forgiveness.

FRIDAY, May 22. Matthew 5: 27-28: "Ye have heard that it was said by them of old time, Thou shalt not commit adultery: but I say unto you, That whosoever looketh on a woman to lust after her hath committed adultery with her already in his heart."

The law of adultery, as interpreted by the Scribes and Pharisees, forbade only the very act. Even Gentiles knew as much and more, as Paul tells the Corinthians. That such a view could be entertained in a nation that had an inspired account of David's sin, and that had read the Fifty-first Psalm, and Proverbs, shows how daring these expounders of the holy law were. The Lord drops the plummet of this commandment into the human heart and sounds the depths of lewdness in it. Let Josephus say: "The purposing to do a thing, without actually doing it, is not worthy of punishment." Jesus declares that the party who dares to look, with wickedness in his heart, upon a woman, and, of course, the woman, too, who cherishes similar evil thoughts, are both at heart adulterers. If that is the law, who is clean? "If thou, Lord, shouldest mark iniquities, O Lord, who shall stand? But there is forgiveness with thee, that thou mayest be feared."

SATURDAY, May 23. Matthew 5: 29-30: "And if thy right eye offend thee, pluck it out, and cast it from thee. And if thy right hand offend thee, cut it off, and cast it from thee: for it is profitable for thee that one of thy members should perish, and not that thy whole body should be cast into hell."

The startling imagery of this text exhibits to us the majesty of the law of personal purity. Not self-mutilation, but self-abnegation is here prescribed—the relentless quelling of evil desires in the heart. This text teaches that no sacrifice is too painful—even apparently necessary things must be promptly abandoned if it will place us beyond the reach of the offense. The saint who has received many a wound and bruise unseen by human eyes in the battle of the flesh against the Spirit is a nobler spectacle in the sight of God than the unharmed sinner who has never made an attempt to bridle, subdue, and mortify his flesh.

These Daily Meditations by Professor Dau will appear in each issue during 1914.

THE CALL OF YOUTH

'he risen Christ! The conquering Christ! Hav- ıg conquered death, he goes forth in the rising eneration on his new campaign to conquer life. Vho follows in his train? Who is sufficient?

Men have been so closely drawn together, and so ompletely interlocked through social, business and olitical influences that the welfare and happiness f one man is dependent upon the behavior of anther as never before. The great force to-day sumoning men's courage and devotion is the force of ighteousness. The great battle is against sin. Sin the fundamental problem. It always was. It will ontinue so to be. What the future outcome of it all 'ill be does not depend upon what attitude we take oward the forces of evil, but upon what attitude we take toward God. If the powers that make human life unblest are to be routed, and their energy be transformed into peace, happiness and prosperity and godliness, it must be done through consecrated men and women who are willing to lay their hearts, their lives, their all, on the altar of Christian service.

What the world needs and will need to-morrow is more men and women stamped with the fundamental qualities of the Christ character; more men and women of his invincible good-will "full of grace"; men and women who do not measure the success of a life by its financial standing or social prestige, but by its power with God for men. We want leaders of our nation who will not permit a question of revenue to be considered alongside of the morals and happiness of the people and their homes. More Christian integrity before God and man, practiced in every legitimate business and vocation of life, is the thing needed and the thing that will give the victory so much desired. The men and women of the future may tinker with legislation and add very little to the sum of human happiness. But the men and women who will prepare themselves to be used of God in leading the forces of righteousness to victory, will have opened channels and floodgates for a triumph for Christ and humanity that will prove inestimable.

LABOR WAR IN COLORADO

THE fires of class antagonism smoldering in the coal regions of Colorado have burst forth into devastating flame. Men and women estimated in number as high as 200 have been slain, much property destroyed, and a peaceful commonwealth invaded by civil war. Nor is it possible as yet to say where the blame lies, or by what methods this holocaust of hate should have been prevented.

The miners' war in Colorado had its counterpart in the copper strike in Michigan, which lasted from July, 1913, until the middle of April this year. The copper miners, numbering upwards of 18,000, were principally non-union men. The Western Federation of Miners, said to have less than five thousand members there, entered upon an active campaign of extension, and succeeded in bringing about a general strike. The operators were determined never to recognize the Federation. The strike was attended with much violence, and frequent clashes with the militia. At the time it was said of the conditions in Michigan, that if they existed in a more populous section they would constitute civil war. All the demands of the miners, excepting the recognition of their union, were granted.

It is not possible for the public at present to obtain unbiased information concerning the coal miners' strike in Colorado, which brought the State under martial law and necessitated the sending of Federal troops to restore order and preserve the peace. It is claimed that the coal miners of Colorado, ever since mining has been conducted on a large scale there, have employed union and non-union men indiscriminately. There have been two serious strikes, one in 1894 and one in 1903. After the latter, the mines of the northern section entered into contracts with the United Mine Workers of America, and operated under those contracts for six years, when they were discontinued. The union soon brought about a new strike, which has been more or less in force ever since.

On September 23 last, a State-wide strike was called by the United Mine Workers to support the strikers of the northern mines. Self-ejected from the mine properties, the miners set up tent colonies for their families, the largest being at Ludlow, where are situated some of the biggest Colorado mines. The strikers utilized the heavy growth of brush on the ridges of the cañons in which the mines are located, as covers for guerrilla warfare upon non-union men at work. Instances of violence became so numerous that on October 23 Governor Ammons called out the State militia under Adjutant-General Chase. For a time the presence of the troops prevented serious disturbances. Most of the strikers are said to be Italians, Greeks and Bulgarians, some being veterans of the Balkan War.

Intense feeling was generated by the uncompromising attitude of the mine owners against the union, and by the show of armed force. As in Michigan, so in the coal region about Trinidad, Colo., frequent clashes occurred between the troops and the strikers, resulting in charges of illegal conduct preferred by each against the other. It is not yet known what one thing transformed the stubborn strike into civil war, but on Monday, April 20, a group of about seventeen militiamen came into conflict with strikers at Ludlow. Firing began, a fierce battle was fought, a considerable number of strikers were shot down, their tent colony was burned to the ground, and a number of women and children who had taken refuge in pits dug beneath the tents perished from suffocation.

FLEEING FROM MILITIA AND SEEKING SHELTER

From that moment the strike assumed the aspects of civil war. The miners armed in increasing numbers, selected strategic points near the mines, and threw up intrenchments. Additional State troops were hurried to the scenes of disorder, though at no time in great numbers. In fact, small detachments of the militia with mine officials were in some cases surrounded and besieged in the mines.

Press news of what was taking place filled the public with apprehension. The governor of Colorado was urged to apply for Federal troops. The desperate mood of the strikers brooked no proposal of mediation until vengeance had been obtained for the slaughter of their wives and children.

Strong bands made attacks upon mine guards at Aguilar, Lynn, Walsenburg and other southern points, and suddenly the war spirit had spread throughout the entire coal mine region of Colorado.

On April 25, the governor applied to President Wilson for Federal troops, and summoned the State legislature to convene in special session May 4. On the following day, Sunday, 5,000 people assembled in front of the State House in Denver and denounced Governor Ammons and John D. Rockefeller, Jr., as "traitors and accessories to murder," the latter because of his statement that he and his associates were prepared to lose all their investment in Colorado mines in resisting the dominance of the union. President Wilson sent a representative to Mr. Rockefeller, April 24, to induce him to give way to arbitration, but was refused, and on April 28 the President ordered Secretary of War Garrison to send troops to the scene of violence, and issued a proclamation calling upon all persons "engaged in or connected with said domestic violence" to lay down their arms and retire to their homes on or before April 30." On the same day Governor Ammons practically placed the State under martial law. The press of April 30 reported hopeful efforts begun by President Wilson to bring about a mediation between the operators and miners.

SYNOPSIS OF WHAT HAS TAKEN PLACE

Olaf Tryggvesson, one of a party of orphans being sent west from New York years ago to new homes, climbs unnoticed from the train, as it comes to a stop, to gather an armful of flowers, and is left behind. He races along the track, then gives up, following the rails till late afternoon, when he turns off on a trail leading through the wilderness, where he meets an Indian, who takes him into his camp. Two miners ride up. The men play cards, the young Indian accuses one of the miners of cheating and is knocked down and cruelly kicked and beaten. The old Indian shoots the miner, whereupon the other miner shoots the father and also the mother, who rushes forward to protect him. The living miner binds the wounded Indian and the body of his companion upon ponies and rides to Canon Creek, a rough mining town, which he reaches on Sunday morning. Olaf, following furtively, comes to the cabin of "Parson Bill," who is by no means a parson, at about the time Dead Shot Jackson reaches the Black Pup Saloon. Jackson accuses the Indian of killing his friend, a court is organized, with Old Four Eyes as judge, and the Doc as prosecuting attorney. Parson Bill is sent for to act as counsel for the Indian.

CHAPTER V

Wherein May be Observed the Course of Justice on the Old Frontier

"MAY it please this yere court," began the Doc, at which there was a general snicker from the audience which was very promptly and properly reproved by the judge, "we proposes by the testimony of a gent which nobody never accused of lyin' an' lived to repeat it, that Bud Wallace was shot dead by this low-down Injun, without no provocation whatsoever, an' that restrainin' hisself, which was most unusual, him bein' a hot-headed gent, an' meanin' no disrespeck thereby, Mr. Dead Shot Jackson instead of shootin' up said low-down Injun' an—"

"Your honor," interrupted Parson Bill, who now spoke with all the force and clarity at his command, completely discarding the dialect of his ordinary usage, in view of the great importance and solemnity of the occasion, "the prosecuting attorney has twice referred to my client in terms which I am forced to characterize as unquestionably opprobrious."

"Jumping Jiminy!" exclaimed the amazed Doc, who had never heard such a word, "I never done sech a thing, not meanin' to contradick nobody."

"You called him a 'low-down Injun.'"

"Well, ain't he?"

"He is an Indian, but—"

"Ain't they all low-down, Bill? Why, you knows that!"

"That is not the question," returned Parson Bill equably. "My client may even be proved worse than that, but the law is that he is innocent until he is proved guilty, and I submit that name-calling and abuse is not in order in this honorable court at this stage of the game—trial, I mean."

"Which the cote rules," said Old Four Eyes, nodding his approval, "that the p'int is well taken an' the persecutin' lawyer will confine hisself to statin' facts an' quit abusin' the prisoner."

"Well, I axes the court, then, ain't all Injuns jest nacherly low-down?" asked the amazed Doc boldly, filled with innocent resentment and surprise that anybody should think such a description in the least degree improper or untrue.

"I'll allow that they may be, an' they prob'ly are, but when they're on trial for life, it might be jest as well not to say so until we finds 'em guilty," answered the court with dignity.

"Which we will in short order," returned the irrepressible Doc. "Without further o-raytory then, I calls my chief witness, Mr. Dead Shot Jackson, who will now state what he knows about this yere low—er—about our red friend."

"The prisoner at the bar," interposed Parson Bill sternly.

"Creation!" exclaimed one of the men in the crowd. "If he's at the bar, why don't somebody give him a drink to brace him up?"

This ill-timed sally, at which most of the audience laughed, again brought forth a stern rebuke from the presiding justice.

"Your honor," said Parson Bill, rising to his feet at this juncture, "with your permission, I wish to call to the attention of the audience that a man is here being tried for his life. I presume that it will be allowed that even to an Indian life is dear and the taking of it is a serious thing. This merriment arises, I am sure, from thoughtlessness. I do not wish to be severe upon the audience or to put a damper upon the innocent pleasures of Cañon Creek, but I shall call upon your honor to clear the court room of all except the interested parties if any other untoward incident occurs."

"Mr. Parson Bill is quite right," said Old Four Eyes severely. "Hangin' a man ain't no joke, especially to the man, an' it hadn't ought to be no laughin' matter. If I hears any more onseemly laughin' from the audience the cote'll be cleared an' you won't have the pleasure of listenin' to the trial. An' I further rules that them that's put out of the cote can't take no part in the hangin' subsequent. Does any gent disapprove?" he continued.

None did. Order having been thus established and the principle of correct conduct duly emphasized, the court turned to the prosecuting attorney.

"Perceed with your case," said he.

"Go ahead, Mr. Jackson," said the Doc.

"I was precedin' calmly up the trail—" the killer began.

"May it please the court, I suggest that the witness be first sworn," interrupted Parson Bill suavely.

"The cote has overlooked that most necessary process, but it ain't too late," said Old Four Eyes with portentous gravity. "Mr. Dead Shot Jackson, you raises your right hand an' swears to tell the whole truth, so help you?"

CHILD-WELFARE CONGRESS

IT MET in Washington, the national capital, on April 22-27. Invitations to send delegates were addressed by the State Department of the United States to forty-five nations. Secretary f State William Jennings Bryan said in the open-ng address: "No other capital could receive this ongress more cordially than this one, and this is not oasting. We would be ashamed to say less, because ve have received so much from the peoples of all ther lands. The world has done so much for us." nd he added: "I doubt if any of all the number of ongresses and conventions that come to the United tates goes deeper into the problem of human wel-are than the convention which gathers here to-ight."

Following Mr. Bryan several foreign ambassa-ors made addresses, and a number of foreign dele-ates were presented, among them Mrs. Pingsa Ha Chee of China ("Pingsa" signifies "cultured voman"), and Mrs. Zoritza D. Furnajieff of Bul-aria, both of whom again and again spoke from the latform in good English with a foreign accent. Irs. Furnajieff, on one occasion, spoke at length on The Aftermath of the Balkan War for Mothers nd Children of Bulgaria," and referred most grate-ully in her address to the relief fund sent by THE CHRISTIAN HERALD.

Several departments of the United States Govern-nent were grouped at one session. The Depart-nent of Agriculture was represented by the assist-nt secretary, Mr. Beverly T. Galloway, who told bout how they were endeavoring to reach mothers n every home in the land, and through bulletins ive them instruction about how they can rationally nd economically feed their families. He stated hat exhibits of labor-saving devices and experts to xplain them would be furnished to all States apply-ng for them.

The Department of the Interior was represented by the United States commissioner of education, the Hon. P. P. Claxton. He might well be called the big brother of the convention, not only because of his frequent appearance and addresses, but because of his estimate of the home, thus expressed: "That education is a matter solely for the schools has long been a fallacy obtaining in civilized countries. Evolution, however, has shown that the school merely takes the place of the old apprenticeship system, and never can hope to equal the home as a training center, for the home always has been and always will be the real school for the child."

Under Dr. Claxton the Bureau of Education has for the first time taken cognizance of the home by creating a Home Education Division, which actively co-operates with the Mothers' Congress in the organization of parent-teachers' associations. Dr. Claxton said that efforts had been made through county superintendents to get the names of individual mothers so that circulars of information might be sent to them in regard to what they can do with their children, before they are of school age, to prepare them for the school; what they can do through reading courses after school age (17 years) and how they can direct their vocational education. Dr. Claxton announced that he would call a conference next October to consider "Moral Education in our Public Schools."

The findings of the congress may be epitomized somewhat as follows:

1. Only way to check crime is by the wise treatment of children. There should be a State Probation Committee in each State in connection with the Educational Bureau.

2. There should be a universal adoption of the Mothers' Pension Law.

3. Care of wayward children should be a part of the educational system of each State.

4. We believe in the abolition of war and the removal of armaments. Children should be taught intelligent brotherhood for all people in the world.

5. We commend the Home Education Division and the Parent-Teacher Division in the Bureau of Education, and urge adequate financial support of the Bureau of Education by the government.

6. We heartily endorse and advise the reconstruction of school methods to correspond with various periods of development in children, also to harmonize with social life.

7. Earnestly recommend free kindergartens and training of kindergartners.

8. We recognize all aids to community life.

9. We commend intelligent training of children in hygienic conditions by giving them charge under direction of the heating and ventilating of the schoolroom.

10. There should be supervision of children in school to discover their defects in order to give wise direction to their education.

11. Asylums and training schools should be established to so educate weak-minded girls that they will not go astray.

12. There should be a single standard for rich and poor mothers in obstetrical care, the poor mothers and children being given as good a chance as those more favored.

13. Public school houses outside of school hours should be used as polling-places, training places in civics, open as public libraries, picture galleries and educative, wholesome motion pictures.

14. Clinics should be held to prevent infant mortality.

15. There should be a constitutional amendment against polygamy.

16. There should be a simple and inexpensive style of dress for schoolgirls, and mothers themselves should adopt a simple and modest form of dress.

17. A commission should be appointed by Congress to censor all songs, and at least one mother should be appointed on this commission.

18. We would encourage the unity of the family to hold family influence.

19. We urge the more careful inspection of school buildings.

20. We urge the necessity of expert physical investigation in public schools as a basis for moral training.

WORKING FOR PEACE IN MEXICO

he proffer, in the expectation that negotiations vould include the several elements of the Mexican eople now at war amongst themselves. It is un-lerstood that the principles for which the United tates will demand recognition include the concur-ence of all the warring factions in Mexico, the stablishment of a constitutional government in hat country—which in the view of President Wilson mplies the elimination of Huerta—the adjustment f the Tampico incident, and an armistice binding n all parties pending the conclusion of the media-ion. The agreement of Huerta to accept the ten-lered services from these three countries—all of vhich have declined to recognize him as president f Mexico—was made known, being due, it was elieved, to the influence of European ambassadors. t was also learned that Carranza as first chief of he Constitutionalists, and probably Zapata, head f a rival force, would enter into the conference.

A rumor that Huerta has long been planning to lee from Mexico, and to that end has from time to ime remitted large funds to Paris, was renewed in the press of April 30, and it was said that the details of his plans had already been reported to President Wilson by John Lind. Many unconfirmed rumors have appeared in the press, among them the arrest and imprisonment of Carranza, a definite break between Villa and Carranza and the union of the rebel forces with the Mexican Federals for aggressive measures.

One of the most striking incidents of the week was the sailing of our new super-dreadnought, New York, the flagship of Rear-Admiral Winslow, commander of the special service squadron organized for duty in Mexican waters. As soon as the trouble with Mexico developed, work on this great ship was rushed to completion, and without waiting for the customary "shake down" and testing of engines under sea-going conditions, the great ship got under way Sunday afternoon, headed for Vera Cruz.

The Stars and Stripes were raised at Vera Cruz with impressive ceremony April 27. The troops under General Funston went ashore April 30, and the transfer of authority from the navy to the army was made in the presence of a crowd of wondering Mexicans and many foreigners, including Americans. In turning over the duty of holding Vera Cruz for the United States, Admiral Fletcher praised the sailors for their courage and excellent behavior. It is stated that the city is beginning to enjoy the rule of the Americans.

Renewal of hostilities between the rebels and Federals at Tampico was reported on April 30, coupled with advices that led to some apprehension lest Villa, fearing to lose the advantages he has gained, may refuse to observe an armistice. His forces are now gathering before Saltillo, where the Federals are prepared to dispute his advance. The latest word from Huerta is that he will engage to observe an armistice with the United States, and it is hoped that negotiations will proceed rapidly to a definite settlement. There is no let up, however, in preparations by the United States to engage in a war with Mexico should there be no alternative.

OUR EDITORIAL FORUM

A Call to Prayer

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD has always stood stanchly for the principle that prayer is powerful. We believe in prayer. We believe in it because we believe in God. And God has ordained that his power shall come down to men through the channel of prayer when it is offered in faith and in the name of Christ. Not for many years have events in our national life called so loudly for prayer as they are calling now. We urge upon all our readers that in their private devotions, in family and in public worship, they make the matters of our national differences with Mexico and the industrial conflict in Colorado subjects of special, definite, emphatic, heartfelt, determined prayer.

Especially are the members of the Prayer League counseled to remember these grave issues in their daily noon hour petition. The call has already gone forth to 40,000 churches from the Federal Council of Churches of Christ in America setting apart May 17 as Peace Sunday, and urging all Christians to pray that the United States and Mexico be guided to a peaceful solution of their troubles. When news came that three South American republics had tendered their good offices in an effort for mediation the Church Peace Union sent out a call that the Sunday immediately following, May 3, be made a day of prayer that this particular effort for peace be made successful.

God is still the ruler of our nation, and if our people will but submit their wills to him, the way of righteousness, justice and peace shall be found. Do not fail to bear your part in this great current of prayer, which will unite our nation to the wisdom, the power, the love, the peace and the glory of God.

Mediation With Mexico

LOYALTY to the flag is a sentiment deeply rooted in the American heart. The whole nation came quickly to the support of the President in the trouble with Mexico, with a splendid unanimity that disposed of all doubts and questionings. And now that there has come unexpectedly the promise of a peaceful solution through the mediation of the southern republics, our national enthusiasm is voluntarily halted. If by the means proposed the long reign of anarchy and bloodshed in Mexico can be brought to a close, we shall welcome the change with all our hearts.

It is not an easy task that the representatives of Brazil, Chile and the Argentine have undertaken. There are many obstacles in the way. Clearly, the first step to be taken is to put a stop to the internecine quarrel in Mexico by which so many lives have been needlessly sacrificed. Our own demand for satisfaction to the flag is but an incident in the program. In the larger matter at issue, the United States seeks only the good of the Mexican people, the establishment of representative government, the efficient protection of internationals and their property, and the respect that is due to ourselves. President Wilson, in his acceptance of the mediation proposition, has admirably expressed our attitude in these words:

> Our own chief interest is in the peace of America, the cordial intercourse of her republics and their people and the happiness and prosperity which can spring only out of frank, mutual understanding and the friendship which is created by common purpose.

Should an armistice be decided on, there would be no withdrawal of forces, nor any halt in the preparations for possible emergencies, such an attitude being in accordance with international law and usage. An armistice would simply be in the nature of a truce, awaiting the outcome of mediation. But the truce should prevail throughout all Mexico and should include the forces of Carranza and Zapata. This would pave the way to the selection of a provisional government, eliminating Huerta altogether; to be followed by the arrangements for a constitutional election, with free access to the polls to all the voting population. Fortunately there are indications that the best element among the people will come to the assistance of the mediators.

Ten years ago such an offer of mediation would have been practically an impossibility. Before 1905 it would have been regarded as unprecedented for any outside Power to offer its friendly services in a quarrel between two nations, where steps looking to war had already been taken. Friends of peace everywhere have reason to welcome this new development as a hopeful sign of the progress of the peace movement. The world is marching forward. Let us trust that the day may soon come when arbitration and friendly mediation, whether through the Hague courts or other channels, and having the great end in view of averting war and maintaining peaceful relations, may be recognized everywhere.

The Colorado Horror

CAN any page of our nation's history cause shame so keen and deep as the present strife in Colorado, with its unbelievable toll of the lives of women and children added to the list of strikers, guards and soldiers wounded and dead? What battle of any nation's history can show such items as these which are included in the list of the victims of the battle of Ludlow Camp: Mrs. Ellalino Costa, 27; Lucy Costa, 4; Onofrio Costa, 6; Mrs. Chavez; two daughters of Mrs. Chavez, 4 and 6; Baby Chavez, 6 months old; Clardilla Pedrigon, 4; Rogerio Pedrigon, 6; Lucy Petrucci, 3; Joe Petrucci, 4; Frank Petrucci, 6!

Glance up from the reading of this paragraph to the children gathered near your knee or outside your window and try to measure the anguish of that simple list of names and figures. In the inquest held over the victims, Dr. Asa Harvey, a physician of Aguilar, testified that after the fire in the tent colony of Ludlow had virtually subsided and while the women and children lay in the safety pits, the militiamen applied torches to the tents after pouring kerosene on them. Dr. Harvey exhibited a bullet which had gone through a window casing of a ranch house in which many women and children refugees from the colony had sought shelter. The bullet had landed, spent, upon the floor of a room where women and children huddled.

John D. Rockefeller, Jr., in an elaborate statement issued on April 28, insisted that the company with which he and his father are affiliated had granted every request of the strikers except the single one closing the mines to all non-union men. But there must be something deep and tremendous back of the furious struggle which the miners have been waging and the unbelievable and fiendish brutality of the guards who were sent to attack them.

While in the matter of importance the Colorado trouble may be justly called a war, yet what went on up to the arrival of the Federal troops on April 30 was not war, but murder. And the blot will not be removed from America's shield until these murders have been traced to their source and atoned for, and until such changes have been made in the industrial situation of the miners as shall put an end forever to such crimes as these.

The Value of Straight Talk

EVERYBODY respects the man who talks without circumlocution and who means what he says whose tongue is not twisted and who goes right to the mark, never seeking to mislead or to misrepresent. Straight talk is a virtue that is practiced all too little. Imagine what a different world this would be if there was no other kind in business, in domestic affairs, in society, in diplomacy—between employers and workers, politicians and people, government and governed, and in the professional and the business world! How large a part of many men's occupations would be gone, if there was never anything but perfectly straight talk between man and man.

Even the ministry cannot be excepted. Of all the wandering, misty, unassured, indirect talking of the day, the very worst is often heard from the pulpit. So many religious teachers seem not to know what they believe, or whether they believe anything. Senator Beveridge is authority for the story that not so long ago a certain man during one summer put three questions to every young minister he met: "Do you believe in the personality of God? Do you believe in the divinity of Christ? Do you believe in the immortality of the soul?" Every man wished to temporize and to explain. Very different from the Senator's experience was that of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, which, at a juncture when the Christian faith had been keenly assailed, invited a straight talk from a number of the foremost minds in the nation. The result was a magnificent avowal of faith and belief, which rose almost to the dignity of a national testimony, showing that the men who directed the country's best interests were thorough Christians. We believe conditions are similar today, and that a straight talk on religion would show that the ministry as a whole is made up of true men, who believe and therefore speak—although unhappily there are exceptions. As the strongest characters are the gentlest, so the best religion is the kindest. And when love is in the heart and wisdow on the lips, we no longer live in an atmosphere of make-believe, and our "yea" and "nay" become verities indeed.

Living by Giving

NATURE in all her forms lives by giving. If you never observed this, then the great object lesson of nature, presented to you year after year, has been lost to you utterly. Did you ever know a tree or plant or creature—except it be a human one—which takes all to itself and gives out nothing? No; you never did, and you never will.

Look at the heroic oak, with its huge trunk and ponderous limbs and mighty mass of foliage straining toward heaven. Has that tree grown and does it live by sucking its immense mass of material substance from the earth that supports its roots, think you? Well, it does nothing of the sort. You may chop down that tree at its roots, saw it up, build a house of it and warm yourself through the winter at the fire of its limbs; yet, when its roots shall have rotted clean away, there will be more earth and more fertility where that tree grew than there were on that long past day when the acorn first sprouted there. You, with your intellectual endowments, with your spiritual nature touched by divinity—may as much be said of you when you are gone: that you provided shelter and warmth for some one's winter and left no scar where you grew?

In its life the plant teaches us, if we will learn, a splendid lesson for spiritual growth. In the great cycles of nature extremes meet and the highest comes in touch with the lowest. Man, too, if he will learn of the plant, may create life forces—not of a material sort, but infinitely higher. We, no more than the plants, can grow from our own rootage. No. The soul must feed upon toil, poverty, suffering, sickness, hardship and bitterness. Besides, we must take to our own hearts also the adversities of our fellows, if we would have real character-building, and release to the world the life-giving oxygen of sympathy.

Are the wells of your sympathy shallow? It is because you are not absorbing and distilling your share of the infinite bitterness and woe of the human brotherhood. Yes; man in his real life, like the plant, grows only as he gives and gives as he grows. That "no man liveth to himself" is the essence of practical Christianity. Unless we literally "spend ourselves" for others, we cannot know the full joy and meaning of the Christian life.

Population Nearly Hundred Million

THE population of the continental United States on July 1, 1914, will be 98,781,324, according to estimates prepared by the geographer of the Census Office, which will be published by the director of the census. This will be an increase from 91,972,266 on April 15, 1910. The population of the United States and its possessions on July 1 will be 109,021,992. This will be an increase of 7,000,000 people in a little over four years. According to the official estimate the cities of 400,000 or over on July 1, 1914, will number as follows: New York, 5,383,537; Chicago, 2,393,325; Philadelphia, 1,657,810; St. Louis, 734,667; Boston, 738,802; Cleveland, 639,431; Baltimore, 579,590; San Francisco, 448,502; Detroit, 537,650; Buffalo, 454,112; Los Angeles, 438,914; Cincinnati, 402,175; Milwaukee, 417,054. Taking a national census in olden times was not an unusual thing. There is this mention of one taken among the Jews:

For the king said to Joab, the captain of the host, which was with him, Go now through all the tribes of Israel, from Dan even to Beersheba, and number ye the people, that I may know the number of the people. (II Sam. 24: 2.)

Dog Dying of Grief

CENTRAL PARK'S $2,000 sheep-dog, Jack, is dying of grief, the keepers say, because he has lost his old master, Shepherd James Conway, who retired on a pension on March 1 after being in the park service for fifty-five years. Some years ago, the late J. P. Morgan, in riding through the park, was attracted by the flock of sheep and the tall shepherd, and he presented a prize collie to the city to act as a faithful help. The shepherd and Jack and the sheep were inseparable. The day Conway left the service, Jack began to pine apparently with loneliness; his appetite failed him and now it looks as though he would die in grief for his master. Jack may be getting old, or some other cause may account for his failing spirits; yet any one who has ever owned a pure-bred collie will be prepared to believe almost any story of the sagacity or affection of so loyal an animal. Jack's devotion to his master suggests the love and loyalty we owe to that Shepherd to whose question: "Lovest thou me?" Simon responded:

Yea, Lord; thou knowest that I love thee. (John 21: 16.)

Largest Bridge in the World

A BILL has been introduced into Congress which is pretty certain to pass, authorizing the construction of a suspension bridge across San Francisco Bay. The proposed bridge will be nine and three quarters miles in length; it will be carried on ten huge cables and will comprise nine tremendous spans, each 2,230 feet long. The bridge is designed to carry traffic in three tiers, the transcontinental steam railways having the lower floor of the structure. The cables are to be anchored in Telegraph Hill and Goat Island. The cost of the building, with its approaches, is estimated at $48,000,000. Many of the ancient nations spanned their streams with bridges. The Jews, who knew nothing of bridge-building, crossed their streams in boats and at fords. Fords are referred to in the Scriptures:

And they went down after him, and took the fords of Jordan toward Moab, and suffered not a man to pass over. (Judges 3: 28.)

Mexican Woman's Tender Care

"WE WILL fight for our country, but we will do anything we can for suffering humanity," was the message a Mexican wife and mother gave to Dr. Goodman, chief sanitary officer of Vera Cruz under Rear-Admiral Fletcher, when he took to her an American child suffering with smallpox. The child is the son of Robert Phillips, an American of Mexico City, who was brought on the refugee train to Vera Cruz. The little fellow was dangerously ill when it was necessary for his parents to flee for their lives. The child was taken to the health officer and to the kindhearted woman who cared for him. The Mexican mother took him in her arms as tenderly as his own mother could have done. She lifted the cloth from the little sufferer's face and the boy looked up and smiled. Tears were in the woman's eyes. "You may leave him with me," she said to Dr. Goodman, "I will cure him and give him back to his mother." This picture of the mercy and love of the Mexican woman who in her love for the sick child of her country's enemy, resembled the Master's affection for children when

He took them up in his arms, put his hands upon them, and blessed them. (Mark 10: 16.)

TITANIC'S WIRELESS HERO HONORED

A MEMORIAL cloister has just been erected near Godalming Parish Church, occupying eighty square feet, to the memory of Jack Phillips, the wireless hero of the Titanic, who died at his post while sending out the S. O. S. call. The cloister has three sides and an arcaded wall, the ground being laid out as a garden with a lily pond in the middle. A tablet provided by the Postal Telegraph Clerks' Association bears this inscription: "Deinde libera fidelis. S. O. S. This cloister is built in memory of John George Phillips, a native of this town, chief wireless telegraphist of the ill-fated S. S. Titanic. He died at his post when the vessel foundered in mid-Atlantic on the fifteenth day of April, 1912." Was there any ocean tragedy in modern times more appalling than that of the Titanic; was there ever heroism more exalted or general than that displayed on that fearful night? Phillips knew better than any one else how many lives hung on his service and sacrifice. Many hundreds were saved because he stayed at his task, calling for help till the cold, black waves hushed him into silence and made him immortal. Of him it can be said, as it was of our dear Lord: "He saved others; himself he cannot save." (Matt. 27: 42.)

Boy Saved from Quagmire

THOMAS GERARD, a Jamaica Bay (N. Y.) boatman, who lives in a boathouse at the mouth of Old Mill Creek, heard a child's voice screaming in distress the other afternoon and traced it to a brown curly head just visible above the quagmire fifty feet out from the solid footing. He plunged into the mire and was soon up to his waist, but not near the boy. After a struggle, the child was dragged back to safety. The child was able to say that his name was Philly Miller, aged four, but did not know where he lived. It seems that his brother Ralph, aged seven, and Evelyn Glassburg, aged five, with Philly, had started for Mexico. Philly stole a ride on the back of a wagon from East New York down to Old Mill Creek, which empties into Jamaica Bay, and either fell off the bridge, or ventured out into the mire. The boys have parents living and a comfortable home. If parents do not know where their children are, they may be pretty sure they are in mischief of some kind. The rescue from the quagmire recalls this:

He brought me up also out of a horrible pit, out of the miry clay, and set my feet upon a rock, and established my goings. (Ps. 40: 2.)

Prayer Offered to Man

A BRILLIANT writer in a leading daily paper in an essay on brotherhood containing many excellent truths, the other day began his article in this astounding manner:

My heart goes out to you, O man, because I cannot conceive of any being greater, nobler, more heroic, more tenderly loving, loyal, unselfish and enduring than are you. All the love I know is man's love. All the forgiveness I know is man's forgiveness. All the sympathy I know is man's sympathy. And hence I address myself to man—to you, and you would I serve.

God is left entirely out of the question. Man's relation to his fellows must be imperfect and disappointing without infinite love and sympathy and sacrifice as the source and inspiration. Love to our fellows is a part of the commandment whose first part is love to God. The truest love of man for man is a part of his love for God. Brotherly love is evidence that a man is a Christian.

We know that we have passed from death unto life, because we love the brethren. (I John 3: 14.)

School Children's Fire Drill

A FIRE suddenly broke out in a large public school building in one of our cities, filling the halls with smoke and threatening the greatest danger; but the 3,000 scholars marched out of the building in as cool-headed a manner as if they had been on their way to a May party in the park. The reason they did so is that they had been put regularly through the fire-drill and knew just what to do. Without that drill, the doors might have been choked and some might have been trampled to death. The cool-headedness of the school children and its benefits suggest the necessity of such an element in meeting and escaping the dangers, physical and moral, that are on every hand in life. There is this reference to it:

Keep sound wisdom, and discretion; then shalt thou walk in thy way safely, and thy foot shall not stumble. (Prov. 3: 21-23.)

Brains Put Above Brawn

ELECTIONS to the Brown Chapter of Phi Beta Kappa were announced the morning of April 27 by President W. H. P. Faunce, and the successful candidates were decorated with the blue ribbon of the ancient society in the presence of the whole student body, at the end of the daily chapel services. On the following day, the elections to the scientific honorary society Sigma Xi were similarly announced. This formal and public recognition of the chief intellectual distinction attainable by students is another step in the general movement to stimulate interest in the pursuit of intellectual honors, which at most American colleges have been largely overshadowed by the more easily obtainable fame of success in athletics and other so-called student activities. For more than twenty years without a break, the college athlete has held the center of the stage and has excited the admiration of the student body. To be a good student, scholar, writer or speaker meant nothing. The star on the football or baseball team was the hero who got the applause in the hall or on the campus. College sport is valuable when it ministers to mental and moral development; but it is a great disappointment when it becomes a rival or substitute for them. The prizes of life belong to those who are intellectually and morally masterful. There is this reference to the rewards of wisdom:

Exalt her, and she shall promote thee: she shall bring thee to honor, when thou dost embrace her. (Prov. 4: 8.)

PARABLES OF KINDNESS*

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON BY DR. AND MRS. WILBUR F. CRAFTS

IN OUR lesson text temptations are called "occasions of stumbling" (R.V.). The certainty of every one of us having them was stated by Jesus in an address which he made to his disciples. Read Luke 17: 1.

Temptations

Coins and chains have sometimes been taken as illustrations of temptations. A girl was on a coral reef in the Fiji Islands catching crabs. She slipped her hand into a hole in the rock and was caught by an unseen monster who held her as a prisoner. Her friends were powerless to help her, and she had to stay in that position, with the tide rising higher and higher till it closed over her head, and she was drowned. Many a young girl in our own land has gone out to seek pleasure, and the forces of evil have laid hold of her, and friends have been unable to save her.

It should be a cause of rejoicing on our part that temptations came to the Lord Jesus himself. And because he withstood all temptations and was without sin (Heb. 4: 15), he should become our example. And we are assured in God's Book that a way of escape shall be made for us. (1 Cor. 10: 13.) Let us not fail to call upon God in the hour when temptations of any sort beset us.

Stumbling-Stones

Who has not seen stumbling-stones lying along the roadway? It is not a difficult matter to walk around them or even kick them out of the way, which is easier, so that others may not be impeded by them. We had a strange experience in Iceland traveling for more than fifty miles in a pony cart with a boy for a driver who could not understand a word of English. There were many stones in the road, or chunks of lava, and the boy was not always careful to avoid them. We took it upon ourselves to point out the stones to him. What was our dismay when we became aware that he took our directions as shouting him where we wished him to go, and so he drove over the stones, and after a few terrible joltings he decided to let him go where he would. Let us beware of people who think and do evil things, for they will prove stumbling-blocks in our way. And let us watch against making stumbling-blocks out of ourselves for others.

We saw one time big stepping-stones in Pompeii that were more than eighteen hundred years old. We tried them, and found them good in getting across a muddy road. They suggested to us that there are some people in the world with whom we may walk (occasion) whose example will always help us across the dangers of temptation. Would you not yourself rather be a stepping-stone than a stumbling-block? We observed that the stepping-stones in Pompeii were worn by chariot wheels passing between them. If the chariots had instead been driven over the stones, they would have been broken in pieces.

It is not safe for any one to say about his conduct: "I do not care what other folks do, I will do as I please." Boys and girls take good care not to [illegible] by your patterns above all take the Lord Jesus for your pattern, and try to be more like him every day. There is danger we would warn you against. We did not have stepping-stones in Pompeii that had become hollowed, and were worn out of shape, so that they had really become stumbling-stones. Sometimes even good men and women do things like these, so that after all the only safe stepping-stone is the Lord Jesus himself.

You have probably never seen the kind of a millstone which Jesus referred to as he was talking to his disciples. The people in Palestine were accustomed to use hand mills, and they use them still. Each mill was composed of an upper and nether millstone, about two feet in diameter, and each one about six inches thick. The grain was placed between these stones. Two women sat beside the mill, one to feed it with grain, while the other by means of a strong stick inserted in a hole in the upper stone turned one stone against the other, producing the meal, which fell into a cloth, and was afterwards gathered up. Each stone weighed about as much as one person could lift. From what Jesus said about a millstone being fastened about a person's neck, it may have been that it was sometimes done as a mode of punishment. And terrible as it was, Jesus said: "Whosoever shall offend one of these little ones that believe in me, it is better for him that a millstone were hanged about his neck, and he were cast into the sea." Jesus was speaking, we believe, both about little children and his followers who were young in the faith. This severest doom was pronounced against those who would offend them.

Growing Grudges

Growing grudges is a most acute and deadly form of heart disease. It keeps people awake at nights thinking how they are going "to get even" with those who are, they think, their enemies. It fills up the days with spiteful acts. The heart becomes so inflamed that there is no room left for love and kindness. Jesus has given us the cure: "If thy brother sin, rebuke him; and if he repent, forgive him."

Say! Let's forgive it; let's wipe off the slate!
Find something better to cherish than hate.
There's so much good in the world that we've had.
Let's strike a balance, and cross off the bad.
Say! Let's forgive it, whatever it be;
Let's not be slaves when we ought to be free.
We find in reckoning in unkind ways
One of these days.

Say! Let's not take it so sorely to heart!
Haven't men in friendship just drifted apart;
I suppose in getting not quite understood:
We mean all true folks so much if we would.
Say! Let's get closer to somebody's side,
Not wait to dream it, and how he has tried,
Learn if our greetings won't give way to praise,
One of these days.

J. W. FOLEY.

"I forgave you once, and I won't forgive you again." This is what we heard one brother say to another who had unwittingly broken his chisel for the second time. He would not listen to any explanation. "You shall not use another of my tools," he continued. The next day he wanted to borrow a book from that brother. But before he asked for it he remembered he had said he would not lend his tools any more. He said to himself, "Well, I don't care if I did; he owes me something for breaking the tool, so I will just ask for the book." And he did. "Certainly you can have it, and keep it as long as you want it," replied the brother, without one bit of grudge in his heart. The effect was great for the very next day he asked his brother to go with him into the orchard, and there he said: "You may use any of them you wish, only please be careful not to break them." The grudge had disappeared.

Jesus taught that both faith and faithfulness were necessary on the part of his followers, and if they lacked these they would be unprofitable servants. Phillips Brooks said: "Faith is the power by which one being's vitality is reached by love and obedience becomes the vitality of another being. So faith in Christ is that power by which the vitality of Christ, through our love and obedience to him, becomes our vitality. The man (or woman) in whom Christ dwells by faith is the one in whom the divine ideal of human life is perfect, or is steadily becoming perfect, by the entrance into him (or her) of the perfect life of the man Christ Jesus through obedience and love." Therefore we must recognize that faith and faithfulness are inseparable and that by exercise of them human beings are raised to their highest power—a Christ man, a Christ woman, or simply a Christian in the highest, deepest and broadest sense.

Jesus said to his followers: "If ye have faith as a grain of mustard-seed, ye would say unto this sycamine (mulberry) tree, Be thou rooted up, and be thou planted in the sea; and it would obey you." We are told by commentators that this was "a figure of speech" for "accomplish a great difficulty." At other times Jesus talked about mountains being removed by the word of faith. (Matt. 21: 21.) An illustration of triumphant faith is the following story of an old colored man who said that faith is being willing to do what God tells you to do without asking any questions. "If God tells me to butt my head against a stone wall, I butt: that is my part; going through the wall is the Lord's part." Secretary William Jennings Bryan in commenting upon this saying said: "I know of no better illustration, and the people that have accomplished great things are the people that have the faith to butt their heads against what seemed a stone wall, and trusted to God to open the way." Undoubtedly we shall have to meet obstacles that will seem to be as great as a mountain to be removed, or a tree to be uprooted and planted in the sea.

The Reward of Faith

Johnny Hall was a poor boy. His mother worked hard for their daily bread. "Please give me something to eat, for I am very hungry," he said to her one evening. The mother let her sewing fall, and drew her boy to her side. As she kissed him, her tears fell fast on his face, while she said: "Johnny, my dear, I have not a penny in the world. There is not a morsel of bread in the house, and I can not give you any supper to-night." Johnny did not cry when he heard that. He was only a little fellow, but he had learned the lesson of trust in God's promises. Then he knelt down by his mother's side to say his prayers, which he repeated after her. They said "Our Father" until they came to the petition "Give us this day our daily bread." The way in which his mother said those words made Johnny's heart ache. He stopped, and looked at her, and repeated them with his eyes full of tears: "Give us this day our daily bread." When they got through, he looked at his mother, and said: "Now, mother, don't be afraid. We shall never be hungry any more. God is our Father. He has promised to hear us, and I am sure he will." Then he went to bed. Before midnight he woke up, while his mother was still at work, and asked if the bread had come yet. She answered, "No, but I am sure it will come."

In the morning before Johnny awoke a gentleman called who wanted Johnny's mother to come to his house and take charge of his two motherless children. She agreed to go. He left some money with her to use in getting ready. She went out at once to buy some things for breakfast, and when Johnny awoke the bread was there, and all that he needed. Johnny is a man now, but he has never lacked bread from that day. And whenever he was afraid since then, he has remembered God's promises and trusted in them.

CREX for Every Floor of the Home — 1014 Color Catalog Awaits You

CREX Is So Good It's Imitated

CREX has become so famous that some people think every grass floor covering is CREX.

It's a big mistake and the cause of endless disappointments, particularly where inferior substitutes have been unloaded on unsuspicious purchasers.

CREX is the trade-mark name given to floor coverings made of twisted "Carex" or jointless wire-grass—not straight-laid straw or prairie grass.

CREX solves the floor-cleaning problem. It is dirt, dust and water proof and is so inexpensive every household may enjoy CREX luxury.

Salesmen may offer you imitations resembling CREX, but without CREX proven wearing qualities. A larger profit (especially in Japanese and other imitations) is usually the incentive.

There's no occasion to even CONSIDER a substitute, as every dealer can obtain just what you want in a few hours from his jobber.

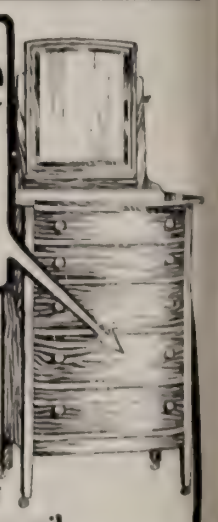
3-in-One Oil Did it



When furniture shows the marks of use, don't sigh and say—"too bad." Hustle out to the nearest hardware, drug, or house-furnishing store and ask for a bottle of

3-in-One oil

Then, hurry back and brighten up.

Nothing beats this wonderful oil for cleaning, polishing and preserving furniture. This is the way: Wring out a cloth in cold water; add a few drops of 3-in-One and wipe the article to be polished, going over but a small surface at a time. Dry and polish with a woolen cloth or cheese cloth. Rub only with the grain of the wood.

3-in-One is sold by grocery, drug, hardware, housefurnishing and general stores. Three sizes: 1 oz. bottle, 10c; 3 oz., 25c; 8 oz., (½ pt.) 50c. Also in Handy Oil Cans, 3½ oz., 25c. If these cans are not with your dealer, we will send one full of good 3-in One by parcel post for 30c.

A Library Slip with every bottle.

A BY-PRODUCT OF MISSIONS

A TINY girl was deserted by her mother after the father's death. The child made pitiful inquiry for her, without avail. No one took the slightest interest in her, and she would have starved but that a sister-in-law decided to make some use of her as a gatherer-up of ch'ai-hus (fuel). Set at this task day after day and allowed scant nourishment and comfort, the child was soon a most pitiable object; "better dead than alive." In this condition she was observed by some one who knew about the Christian orphanage, and she was sent to the mission.

Now from all appearances here was a life empty of promise. We look upon the heathen as a difficult field at best, and such a beaten-down little life as this, with absolutely no start whatever, might pass unnoticed even in the midst of a Christian community of America. Yet to-day that ignorant, friendless child has become a young woman of great promise as a Bible student: one of a number of such girls who have been rescued, some of them from even worse conditions, and now taking an active part in bearing the message of salvation to their own people.

We cite this instance from a very recent letter received from Miss Lena Gerber, dated at Tsaohsien, Shantung Province, North China, which reads in part as follows:

Dear Readers of The Christian Herald:

I have recently been privileged to spend a few weeks at the home of our orphan girls. I could not but notice a very marked difference between these who are brought up in the fear and admonition of the Lord, and those whom we meet in the villages, destitute of all the privileges of the Gospel.

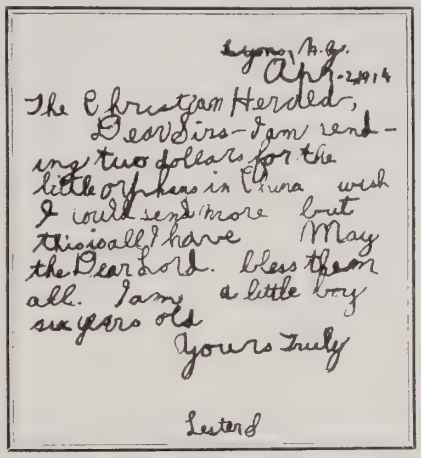
Daily these children gather for the early morning devotional hour. Here the older girls alternately take the lead. Following devotions they all go about their various duties, such as cooking, cleaning, sewing, spinning, etc. At the appointed time they gather in the schoolroom for reading. The Chinese are accustomed to reading aloud. Imagine, if you can, the confused sound as about seventy girls read together, each one trying to outdo the other.

Many of the older girls are taking a real active part in bearing the message of salvation to their own people. The neighboring villages are being visited by them once or twice a week, accompanied by a missionary. I have been privileged to go with them on one occasion. My heart was deeply touched by the earnest testimonies of these precious young lives. Many of these who have grown up into noble Christian characters, came here in a most pitiful condition, sick, hungry, naked, and cold.

Though orphanage work is difficult and has its discouragements, yet we are greatly encouraged when we see what the Gospel has done in the lives of our boys and girls.

We further solicit your earnest prayers and interest in this most needy work.

Our orphanage work in China is worthy of your fullest support. We have a thousand and five children, boys and girls, for whom we have become responsible, and the CHRISTIAN HERALD Family, by providing for the care and education of these otherwise destitute lives, may assuredly expect to rear native Christian workers who will have a ringing message of the power of Christianity to tell all the years of their lives. The interest felt in these little ones is reflected from such letters as the following:



Lyons, N. Y. Apl-2-1914

The Christian Herald,
Dear Sirs- I am sending two dollars for the little orphans in China wish I could send more but this is all I have May the Dear Lord bless them all. I am a little boy six years old

MAY THIS LITTLE CHILD LEAD YOU

I want to help in some way, so send a pin and some rings, hoping they will be of use for the kingdom of God. The China Fund will be a good use. One of them my mother gave me. Another was a grandmother's. The stickpin I received when I graduated from school.

We frequently receive gifts of this character, and as it is impossible to obtain adequate value for the articles, but especially as they are keepsakes which have a value that money cannot replace, we always return them. We feel grateful to such friends for their kindness. If the writer of the above letter from Kenton, Ohio, will forward her address, we shall be glad to return the articles.

The enclosed $11 to help the Chinese orphans in the most effective kind of missionary work is from the whole family. A. N. R.
Drayton, N. D.

I enclose $5 for the China Orphan Fund, and my little adopted boy of eight years, who gave his heart to Christ at the age of seven, sends sixty-four cents; all he had in his little bank. He earns the money by helping me on Saturdays. When he saw the picture of the boys like him in last week's issue, he decided to give all he can. MRS. B. B.
Chicago, Ill.

As I had a son who desired to give his lifetime to the service of his Lord, and circumstances were such as to prevent, I will try to prepare one in his place among the Chinese orphans, and I purpose to send $5 per quarter to that end. W. F. H.
Mount Holly, N. C.

Enclosed please find check for $5 for the China Orphan Fund. It is indeed a most worthy cause, for which you are using your influence by endeavoring to enlist the readers of your valuable paper to extend a helping hand to these poor orphans. JOHN O.
Glasford, Ill.

We wish to express warm appreciation of the response we are receiving from readers. Let all who can have a part in this splendid work. Send us your contribution, be it little or much; interest your friends in this work. Write to us for the thrilling story of the little Chinese maid, Hai Ieh Tsi—"Abused Leaf." Make some sacrifice, if need be, in order to have a share in equipping this army of the Lord. And do not overlook the fact that in helping to provide for these children you are saving human lives from dreadful degradation. These are orphan children abandoned, helpless, to their fate. We have taken them in in the name of the Lord, for you to care for for him. Address, China Orphan Fund, CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, New York.

TURN AGAIN

(Joel 2: 12)

TURN again, turn again!
To the home from which thou'rt roaming,
To the substance from the shadow,
To the deeps from out the shallow,
Into being out of seeming,
Out of error to the right,
Out of darkness to the light,
From the world, away from strife,
From death's death unto the life.
Take what God would truly give,
Take, O soul, to-day and live.

ANSWERED PRAYERS

NOTICE the request on the editorial page, urging all readers to special prayer during these days of national crisis both in Mexico and Colorado. Members of the Prayer League will be glad to make these matters subjects of special petitions in the daily noon-hour prayer and at all other times of private, family, or public prayer.

Best of all is the news that those who were praying for spiritual light and peace have been granted their heart's desire. Mrs. D. G. writes from Baldwin City, Kan.: "It is with a heart full of praise and gratitude that I add my testimony that God does answer prayer. He has led me into his marvelous light." Mrs. G. H. F. writes from Chicago that in answer to prayer her husband, for whom the doctors said there was no hope, is recovering from a serious operation. A Reader from New York City writes: "One very dear to me sadly needed financial aid. I asked the heavenly Father's help and he answered almost at once and gave more than we dared hope for." A thankful mother writes: "God has answered prayer and saved a dear daughter's life when she was near death's door."

An Old Man at Fifty —A Young Man at Seventy

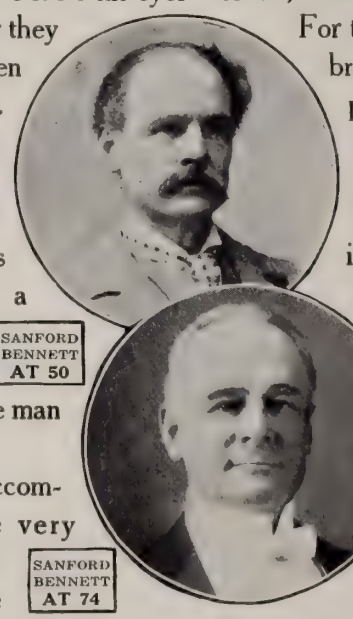
The Remarkable Story of Sanford Bennett, a San Francisco Business Man Who Has Solved The Problem of Perpetual Youth

By C. E. PAGE, M.D.

Author of "Natural Cure for Consumption," "How to Feed the Baby," etc.

THERE is no longer any occasion to go hunting for the Spring of Eternal Youth. What Ponce de Leon failed to discover in his world famous mission, ages ago, has been brought to light right here in staid, prosaic America, by Sanford Bennett, a San Francisco business man. He can prove it, too, right in his own person.

At 50 he was partially bald. Today he has a thick head of hair, although it is white. At 50 his eyes were weak. Today they are as strong as when he was a child. At 50 he was a worn-out, broken-down, decrepit old man. Today he is in perfect health, a good deal of an athlete and as young as the average man of 35.



All this he has accomplished by some very simple and gentle exercises which he practises for about ten minutes before arising in the morning. Yes, the exercises are taken in bed, peculiar as this may seem.

As Mr. Bennett explains, his case was not one of preserving good health, but one of rejuvenating a weak, middle-aged body into a robust old one, and he says what he has accomplished anyone can accomplish by the application of the same methods, and so it would seem. All of which puts the Dr. Osler theory to shame.

I haven't room in this article to go into a lengthy description of Mr. Bennett's methods for the restoration of youth and the prevention of old age. All of this he tells himself in a book which he has written, entitled "Old Age—Its Cause and Prevention." This book is a complete history of himself and his experiences, and contains complete instructions for those who wish to put his health and youth-building methods to their own use. It is a wonderful book. It is a book that every man and woman who is desirous of remaining young after passing the fiftieth, sixtieth, seventieth, and, as Mr. Bennett firmly believes, the one hundredth milestone of life, should read.

For the purpose of spreading broadcast the methods of promoting health and longevity developed by Mr. Bennett, an interesting 8-page booklet, which is in effect a summary of his system, has been prepared by the publishers of Mr. Bennett's interesting book — the Physical Culture Publishing Company, 3905 Flatiron Bldg., New York City. This booklet they will send free to anyone sufficiently interested to write for it.

The grandest thing in the world is Youth, and it is one of the really great hardships of life that "its beauteous morn" should pass so swiftly and give place to old age.

For having solved the problem of perpetual youth during life the world owes Sanford Bennett a vote of thanks. Of course there are those who will scoff at the idea, but the real wise men and women among those who hear of Sanford Bennett and his return to youth, will most certainly investigate further, and at least acquire a knowledge of his methods.

THE YOUNG PEOPLE'S MEETINGS

NOTES ON THE CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR, EPWORTH LEAGUE AND BAPTIST YOUNG PEOPLE'S UNION TOPICS

Recent Events*

LITTLE did the committees who assigned this subject for our study dream what desperate events would take place in our ation's history before the date set for s consideration. "The Christian leaning of Recent Events." What an be the Christian meaning of the vo gravest series of events that have een occurring in our nation's history uring these recent weeks, the strife n Mexico with a foreign despot and he strife in Colorado between two asses of our own populace?

It is too early as this issue of THE HRISTIAN HERALD goes to press to rophesy what will have happened be- ore May 24. Prospects seemed more opeful for a peaceful settlement of he Mexican problem, but the clouds of onflict loomed dark in our own West. Most promising was the new alliance f four republics of the Western Hemisphere, Brazil, Argentina and hile, of the South American conti- ent, and the great republic of North merica, to bring peace in troubled Mexico. This is a big step forward n Western History. It indicates how he countries of Latin America are eveloping, and promises a more com- act union of the nations of the Western world.

It is to be hoped that before the day or considering this lesson will come he danger of war with Mexico will be verted; that that unhappy country ill have begun to find a way to in- ernal peace, and that in our own land ome decided step forward has been aken toward a juster situation in the ndustrial world.

But no amount of progress can ather up the blood that has already een spilt. Our young people must not ield to the frenzy of the war spirit. War, even when it appears necessary, s a bitter thing. And over all the attlefields of the world the Prince of eace looks sadly, grieving that men ave not yet found a way to settle their roblems without the agony of wounds nd the horrors of death.

Whatever the strifes may win, all ill be lost if Christ is not kept before ur vision as Saviour and King. here has been no sorrier spectacle in istory than that of the Balkan States, hrowing away their gains because hey could not keep their sanity and heir righteousness. Recent events re of interest to the Christian as they asten or delay the time when all the eople of the world shall crown Christ ord of all and shall realize that hrough him they are all brothers, "of ne blood," in God's vast family.

Our Greatest Rival†

THERE is pasted in my pocket Testament a miniature missionary nap of the world which shows, by dif- erent colors, the religious complexion f the various countries in the two emispheres. At the bottom is a small ircle divided into different colored egments, showing the numerical trength of heathenism and of the arious creeds. The color represent- ng heathenism covers more than half his circle. Do you really think seri- usly, earnestly, prayerfully about hat—more than one-half the people of he world still followers of the strange, vild gods of paganism? The next argest segment is Roman Catholi- ism; the next Mohammedanism; the ext Protestantism, the last the Greek Catholic. Conditions have changed omewhat since this map was printed, ut probably not materially. How true it is that "there remaineth yet much land to be possessed!"

The three Christian groups taken together, Protestants, Greek Catholics and Roman Catholics, number about five hundred million. The estimates run from 477,588,000 to 571,400,000. Our lesson title names the greatest rival to these forces of Christ—the followers of Mohammed, who number from 200,000,000 to 246,700,000. How true the statement is that Mohammedanism is Christianity's greatest rival may be imagined from the appalling announcement made by Bishop Hartzell at the Rochester Student Volunteer Convention in 1910 that "more converts have been won during the last fifty years from among the native blacks of Africa to the Mohammedan faith by the devotees of Islam than have been won to Christianity by the missionaries of the Cross of Christ." "There is the problem," he added, "that is facing the church in relation to Mohammedanism in Africa: the question as to whether a continent shall be won for Mohammed and lost for our Christ."

It must be remembered with grief and humiliation that once before Mohammedanism overwhelmed Christianity in Africa, and also that once it practically stamped out the Christian faith in Arabia. It is not that Christ is less strong than Mohammed. It is that his followers have been less zealous. Could any reproach be greater than this, considering the difference between Mohammed and Jesus?

Samuel M. Zwemer, the great expert on Islam, said at the same convention: "Western Asia no less than Eastern Asia should rivet our attention because of the impending struggle between the Cross and the Crescent for supremacy, a struggle that is inseparable from the awakening of those great lands." He reported as one of the hopeful signs in the present contest between the two faiths that "at a conference in Mecca forty Moslems met together in secret conclave to point out the causes of decay in their religion and listed them—fifty and more defects in this religion of their prophet—and published the list as a document to scatter over the Moslem world." When the falsehoods and evils of the system begin to be recognized from the inside the forces of the true faith will have greater victories in winning away its devotees to the true Saviour and preventing others from falling into the Islamic delusions.

Dr. Zwemer, in referring to the activities of the few Christian missionaries now in Mohammedan territories, said: "In all five of these Moslem lands, Turkey, Palestine, Syria, Persia, Arabia, our missionaries are engaged in educational, medical and evangelistic work. The Bible has been translated into all the languages of Western Asia and a large literature prepared for its polyglot people. At the Beirut Press alone sixty million pages of Christian books were printed in a single year, and in one month orders were on file for a hundred thousand copies of Arabic Scriptures, including eighteen cases of Bibles sent to Shanghai for the Moslems of China."

There has been great disappointment over the results of the recent struggle in the Balkans. What looked like decisive victories for Christian peoples were later undone, and Mohammedan Turkey regained much of her lost ground.

There is need for new consecration, new determination, new prayer, new work to push the spiritual conquests of the Messiah in these Moslem lands. Christian young women should be especially zealous in this crusade, for Mohammedanism with its other wrongs and errors means the grievous degradation of women. Only women can raise the sad women of Mohammedanism to lives of light and hope.

First, good coffee— Then beautiful premiums

More people drink Arbuckles' Coffee than all other packaged coffees put together.

Thousands of families have used Arbuckles' for ten, fifteen, even twenty-five years. They find that no other coffee pleases them so well, or gives them so much value for their money.

To see why Arbuckles' is so popular, you need only try it in your own home.

Notice its rich, appetizing aroma; its delicious, satisfying flavor.

In addition, just by saving the Arbuckle signatures on the packages, you can get many useful premiums. Notice how few signatures it takes to get these spoons or lace curtains.

No-Rim-Cut Tires
Dropped 28%

During 1913 No-Rim-Cut tire prices dropped 28 per cent. As a result, 16 makes of tires now cost more than Goodyears—some almost one-half more.

Yet the facts are these:

No-Rim-Cut tires have become—by sheer merit—the most popular tires in the world.

They were once the high-priced tires. They used to cost one-fifth more than other standard tires.

They embody four costly, important features found in no other tire.

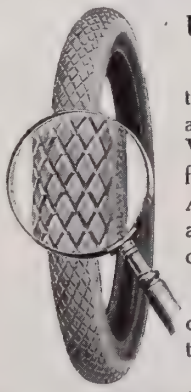
First, the No-Rim-Cut feature, which we control.

Second, the "On-Air" cure, which adds to our tire cost $1,500 daily, but saves tire users millions of dollars in blow-outs.

Third, the rubber rivets which we form in the tire to combat tread separation.

Fourth, the double-thick All-Weather tread—the smooth-face anti-skid.

No other tires at any price offer you these features.



Up to 10,000 a Day

Goodyear prices are due to the fact that we make as high as 10,000 motor tires a day. We make them in a new factory, perfectly equipped. And we sold them last year at an average profit of 6½ per cent.

They offer you all that a tire can give, so far as men know today. They offer four great features found in no other tire. And they offer all this at a price below 16 other makes. That is why so many men go to Goodyear dealers.

Last week that foot had corns. But the owner read of Blue-jay.

She applied it one night and the pain instantly stopped. In 48 hours all the corns came out. And those corns will never come back.

That's the story folks have told about sixty million corns. And tens of thousands tell it every day.

Some of them used to pare corns, merely to relieve. Some of them tried the old-time treatments until they gave up in disgust.

Now never again will they suffer from corns. When one appears, Blue-jay goes on it.

There is no more pain. The corn is forgotten. In two days they lift it out. No soreness, no pain, no trouble.

That sounds too good to be true. But remember, please, that a million corns a month are ended in this Blue-jay way.

Why don't you let it put an end to yours?

IN MEMORY OF "MOTHER BIRD"

SELDOM indeed have words of praise and gratitude been sounded from people from so many different classes as were spoken about "Mother Bird" at the memorial service held in her honor at the Bowery Mission, on Thursday evening, April 23. Dr. Lyman Abbott said in his address: "I wonder if there are any of you who have loved her and who more desire to honor her than I. I have not come here to praise her. She would put her hand on my mouth if she could if I tried to praise her. I have come here because I want to tell you, as others will tell you, what her life has meant to me, what service she has rendered to me, what inspiration as a teacher she has been to me. How often in my preaching have I referred to 'Mother Bird,' and I have told the congregations, young men and young women, of this woman who left her home and her friends and all the beautiful surroundings in which she was, and came to live here on the East Side, because more than home and more than friends and more than culture and more than everything, she rejoiced in love and service and sacrifice."

Messages of affection and grief were read from General Horatio C. King, Newell Dwight Hillis, Fanny Crosby, and others.

Mr. John Wyburn, superintendent of the McAuley Mission on Water Street, and formerly superintendent of the Bowery Mission, spoke affectionately of the help "Mother Bird" had been to him during the years of his service there. "It is impossible for me to tell you," he said, "the help that she was to me in the work right from the very commencement." Mr. Wyburn referred to the special services conducted under the auspices of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD in the Academy of Music some years ago, at which Dr. Talmage was the preacher. He said: "During the services at the Academy of Music Mrs. Bird and myself headed a crowd of men who would march up the Bowery singing songs of Zion. It is impossible for me to tell you how much delight she took in this."

Addresses were made by other Christian workers, among whom were: Senator Gledhill, Dr. G. A. Gayer, Rev. George R. Lockwood, Dr. William James, Alexander Glass and J. T. Hunt, assistant superintendent of the Bowery Mission, who also sang, by special request and with great feeling, a hymn that was a favorite with "Mother Bird," "The Home-Land." Converts of the mission also bore their testimony to the inspiration of "Mother Bird's" life and work. Edward H. Chambers told how she had led him to the Saviour. He said: "In my life 'Mother Bird' was the guardian angel. I was one of the down-and-outs, one of the homeless men, one of the friendless men, one of the men with no character or reputation. It didn't make any difference to Mrs. Bird. She shook hands with me that Sunday morning. My clothes were dirty, and perhaps my face was dirty. But just as I was, homeless wreck upon the Bowery in old 55, she placed one hand on the old brass railing, and partly kneeling, she shook hands with me. I want to thank God to-night for 'Mother Bird,' for fifteen years ago she came into my life and took the place of the mother whom I never knew, because she died before I was old enough to know." Mr. Hunt, in his address, stated that "of the nearly 14,000 men who had gone out to positions of usefulness through the Labor Bureau of the Bowery Mission, every one, in writing back, made some reference to 'Mother Bird,' who had been so great a power in their lives."

Dr. Hazlewood, who was present at the mission for the first time in the closing weeks of his severe illness, and who conducted the memorial services, said: "I dare not trust myself to speak of her as a personal friend. I never felt so keenly as I do now."

How to Be Well and Strong Without Diet, Drugs or Appliances

We have known for years what it is that has control of every function of the body, but undue consideration of individual weaknesses and diseases has so blinded us that we have totally neglected that which is greater than all else—that upon which the health of every organ and consequently our health depends.

BY HOMER DAVIES

HAVE you ever stopped to consider just what it is that keeps that most wonderfully delicate and intricate piece of mechanism—your body—working in harmony? If you have not you should become acquainted without delay with the fact that it is your nerves.

Your nerves regulate and govern absolutely every process that goes on within you. Sever the nerves leading to the eye and not only would you be unable to move the eye but your sight would be gone forever. Your nerves regulate the beating of your heart, one set making it beat and another keeping it from racing too fast. You breathe unconsciously, your digestion proceeds without your having to think of it at all. The glands create and distribute their secretions, all at the bidding of your nerves.

It has been definitely established that more than 99 per cent. of all humanity, past their majority, are deficient from a standpoint of nerve strength and, therefore, are deficient in nervous energy.

Nearly all functional weaknesses and disorders can be directly traced to weak nerves and depleted vitality.

You have never seen a man of achievements in athletics, in business or any profession who did not have a highly developed and powerful nervous system. Did he not possess this he could not be healthy, nor would he have the vitality to push his work through to success.

Macfadden, who is probably the foremost general physical culture authority in the world, says of Energy: "The longer and more thoroughly we study the structure and functions of the human body, the more clear and absolute becomes the conviction that the secret of human strength and energy lies in the nervous system."

Napoleon said: "No man can win in the battle of life who has not Courage and Persistency. These are impossible where Energy is lacking, hence Energy is the indispensable quality of great Success."

No greater truth than this was ever uttered. Were it possible to chronicle all the failures, not due to a lack of brains, but to a lack of physical vitality, which is now recognized as an illness in itself, there would be a list so long as to appal the world.

Every great man of history—every highly successful man of the day—is possessed of more than an average amount of energy. Some have been gifted with this wonderful quality as were Lincoln, Napoleon, Rockefeller, Morgan and others; and some developed it as did Gladstone and Roosevelt.

Not one of these men, as they admit themselves, could ever have attained the position they occupy were it not for this factor.

Big muscles unless accompanied by powerful nerves are as useless as a trolley car without electricity. If your nerves are weak your every organ will be weak in exact proportion. If you are troubled with indigestion, constipation, a weak heart, weak kidneys, a torpid liver, or any of the functional ills that flesh is heir to you should look immediately to your nerves. For unless your vital organs are receiving their due share of nervous energy they cannot possibly do their work. Advanced thinkers in the medical world as well as those who do not use drugs have sought in vain for some direct method for the strengthening of the nerves.

Exercise, Osteopathy, Deep Breathing, Chiropractice, Hydrotherapy, Electricity and other methods without end have been advanced at one time or another, as offering an ideal means for the building of vitality, or rather nervous energy, which is what vitality really means.

Many of these have much to commend them, but not one can benefit the nerves except in a most roundabout and uncertain way.

It has remained for one Robert Duncan to discover a method for direct nerve stimulation. By his methods he can build and create a degree of energy that you can actually feel course through your body within a few minutes unless you are horribly run down, and even then, it can be developed within a very short time.

By this method he is enabling people to absolutely overcome functional weaknesses and disorders without resorting to tortuous exercise, drugs, repulsive diets, and in addition build for themselves a degree of energy that will be the determining factor in their success in life.

He tells all about this discovery in his book "Building Energy." He has agreed to send a copy to any reader of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD who will write Robert Duncan, Suite 901H, Metropolitan Building, New York City, enclosing 25 cents for the book in stamps or coin.

Every man and woman in America should read this work and every man, woman and child should follow its precepts.

This country is coming to be known as a country of neurasthenics. You should not be one of those who is a slave to his nerves. Develop them so that you may enjoy the health and the worldly success that is your birthright —Adv.

A LITTLE ANGEL OF THE MOUNTAINS

"In course," said Jackson, raising is right hand as suggested and nodding with equal solemnity.

"Well, then, go ahead."

"As I sez, I was a-precedin' up the rail with Bud Wallace last night ound for Cañon Creek, which we'd een down to the railroad station at Cavine City, when we comes on an njun camp. As 'twas supper time, 'e stopped with 'em an' shared their rub; they furnished things to eat an' 're chipped in with things to drink, nost hospitable an' friendly like. After upper we had a little game of seven-p, me an' Bud agin' the two Injun ucks. Strangely enough," he grinned, luck seemed to run our way an' we von most everything our friends had. Ve was gittin' ready to take them way with us, when I seed that they vas gittin' riled. We had some vords, an' this yere Injun out with his un all of a suddent an' shot Bud dead. ain't reckoned slow with a we'pon. had mine out at the same time, but he old man he got between me an' my nark, an' he got my bullet. He fell gin' the boy, who was aimin' to fetch ne, too, but I grabbed him afore he ould recover hisself. Him bein' maller than me, as you can all see, I ad no difficulty in masterin' him. I og-tied him, flung him onto one of his wn ponies, done up the body of my ardner, roped it on his own cayuse, ook our honest gains, an' the rest you ll knows."

"That's all, your honor," said the Doc, as the witness ended in a fine burst of defiance and venom.

It was quite evident from the murnurs of approbation that the sympahies of the crowd were entirely with he white man, who was visibly pleased vith the approval of his fellows.

"Have you got anything to say, Mr. Parson Bill?" asked the judge.

"I should like to ask the witness a ew questions, if it pleases the court," vas the answer.

"It does please the cote," said Old Four Eyes, "an' I hopes you can make omethin' interestin' out of your questions, 'cause it's been very tame so ar."

"You say that my client here was he aggressor and began the assault?" began Parson Bill, turning to the witness.

"I didn't use them there words," neered Dead Shot Jackson uneasily—ie had hardly expected to be questioned and evidently did not relish the ordeal. "I ain't ekal to slingin' any ine of fancy lingo like yourn, but if I atches your meanin', he was."

"You did nothing at all to provoke im?" continued Parson Bill.

"Not a single thing. We was jest -settin' around the camp fire ca'm an' peaceful as the evenin' itself. Havin' von from these redskins, we hadn't o cause for to be a-feelin' bad."

"You had been drinking together, I nderstand."

"Well, playin' cards without no drink is kinder dry work. We had passed the bottle around a few times."

"Just how often?"

"Jest as often as any one wanted to ake it."

"Was there more than one bottle?"

"Well, now, Mr. Parson Bill, you night know that two gents, to say nothin' of two Injuns, couldn't go very ong on jest one bottle."

"How many bottles were there?"

"I disremembers ezackly. What difference does that make?"

"Will the court please instruct the witness that he is to answer questions, not to ask them?" said Parson Bill, turning to Old Four Eyes.

"The cote most certainly will. Mr. Dead Shot Jackson, you hears me?" asked the imperturbable judge.

"Yes, I hears you. An' when this yere fool trial's over, me and you will have an account to settle, Parson Bill, to say nothin' of Ol' Four Eyes," muttered Mr. Jackson, with growing heat and irritation.

"It may be," said Parson Bill equably, "that you may not be free to settle anything after this trial."

"What do you mean?" roared the witness, now thoroughly aroused.

"Your honor, will you caution the witness again that he is to answer my questions, nothing else?" continued the big miner, apparently not at all abashed by the growing anger of the unruly witness.

"The witness is duly cautioned, an' I wants to say here an' now I'll fill him full of lead if he don't pay more attention to the orders of the cote. Mr. Marshal."

"Here," said the saloonkeeper.

"Remove the man's we'pons for fear he gits gay with 'em."

The saloonkeeper was a man who meant business. Dead Shot Jackson demurred, but there was nothing for him but compliance. His pistol and bowie knife were taken from him and laid on a table in front of his counsel, being unfortunately left quite within his own reach, by the way.

"Now this business having been settled," resumed Parson Bill, "will you kindly tell me just about how drunk you and the others were last night?"

"What's that got to do with it?" snarled the witness.

"Answer my question."

"Well, we was feelin' pretty comfortable."

"Were you sober enough to know what really happened?"

"In course I was."

"And how many bottles did you say you four had got away with?"

"Six—I mean I didn't say," corrected the man hastily.

Parson Bill laughed heartily. Jackson's fingers went to his empty holster itchingly, as he stared at his gun on the table.

"Wasn't it a fact that you were so drunk you don't really know what did happen?" the miner asked quietly.

"No, an' I tells—"

"How many Indians were there?" he questioned, without giving time for the sentence to be completed.

"The dead one an' this one, that's all. An' I wants to say right now that if you're reflectin' on my ability to carry my liquor as a gent—"

"That's all I want from you," said Parson Bill peremptorily, not in the least dismayed by the passionate temper he had awakened by his questioning. "Call the defendant."

The wretched Indian youth, at a nod from his only friend, now stood up and took the place of Dead Shot Jackson, who sat down, muttering curses and threats under his breath.

"Now tell the jury your side of the story," began Parson Bill briefly, "just as you told it to me."

"Hold on," said the Doc, "my man had to be sworn; how about yourn?"

"That's only fair," said the court. "Injun, what's your name?"

"Name, Blue Wing."

"Blue Wing, you understands that you're to tell the truth an' nothin' but the truth, so help you?"

"I know."

"Proceed with your story," said Old Four Eyes.

"We camp down cañon. White men come. Play cards. Give Indians drink, win everything Indians have. White men cheat. Me say so. Dead man he knock me down. My father he shoot. That man he shoot big chief. My mother she come running. He shoot her. He kick me. He beat me. That's all."

"It's a blank lie," roared Dead Shot Jackson. "He's tryin' to save his dirty red skin, the low-down coward."

"Silence in the cote!" shouted the judge, pounding on the table with the butt of his pistol, as a buzz of voices arose.

"Your honor," said Parson Bill, when quiet had been at last restored, "the prisoner is ready for cross-examination by the learned counsel for the prosecution."

THE MOVING FINGER WRITES

BY MARGARET E. SANGSTER, JR.

YEARS ago, an old Persian sat in a rose-garden, sweet-scented with blossoms, and bright with the sun of the Orient. As he sat there, he talked philosophy and taught young scholars who spoke of him reverently as "master," and wrote poetry to delight the ear and the mind and the soul.

The old Persian died not far from his rose-garden and asked with his last quavering breath to be buried where the south wind would blow petals over his resting-place. But he was not forgotten—he had left the work of his pen and of his heart behind him.

Years after his death another poet, Edward Fitzgerald, found his work and translated it. Of the many beautiful stanzas I am going to quote this one:

The moving finger writes; and having writ,
Moves on; nor all your piety and wit
Shall lure it back to cancel half a line,
Nor all your tears wash out a word of it.

Girls dear, we are going to use this little verse for our text this morning.

It's May-time now—the beautiful time of year. The flowers and birds and skies are fragrant, singing, radiant. The little brooks run laughingly over the stones, and the forest creatures scamper happily through green thickets. If the world is ever going to be good, if people are ever going to be good, it seems to me that they should be good in May. Perhaps in this summery time of the year, the moving finger will be able to write things about us that we will be proud of.

The moving finger writes; and having writ,
Moves on—

Whose finger? The finger of fate, perhaps, or of time—or the finger of God. For whatever we do, it is sure to be written down somewhere—the most harmless-seeming white lie alongside of the greatest good that is in our power to do.

When I was a little child in the primary department of Sunday school, I saw a picture—the picture of a small girl serenely crossing a deep ravine on a tiny inch-wide plank. Deep below her lay rocks and tree stumps and the dark water, but beside her, floating softly along with dim, shadowy form, an angel kept guard. And in my childish heart I thought: "How very nice it must be to have such a kind angel helping you!"

When we have done something to be proud of, we are glad to know that the eye of God is on us—that the moving finger is writing our story. But when the way has been stormy and hard to follow, when things have gone wrong, it is a most uncomfortable thing to know that the eye is still following, that the moving finger is writing on just as steadily as it has ever written.

The next part of the theme is a sad part—a hard part to remember. It warns:

Nor all your piety and wit
Shall lure it back to cancel half a line

Some of us may be clever—very clever. Some of us think we are clever. Some may be clever, though we do not realize it; but none of us are clever enough to send back that moving finger—to erase one single bit of the vivid writing. And perhaps it is fortunate that we cannot.

There are people who seem to do wrong wonderfully well, and are never found out. They walk abroad in a world of men with heads held high and, perhaps, with never a twinge of conscience—respected, honored, even loved. They go to church and give money to God's poor in all piety, and yet—the moving finger has written the story of their sin in indelible letters. Though the world looks up to them, the letters will never fade.

Last of all, give us the tragic, pathetic part of the poem. The hopeless, the dreary part. For the poet sings sobbingly:

Nor all your tears wash out a word of it.

Once, when I was small and very awkward, I knocked over a beautiful cut glass vase and smashed it to pieces. Drowning with tears, I went to my mother and told all about it; how I had not meant to do it; how sorry I was.

Of course, I was forgiven, and kissed back into happiness. But when I went down to the parlor, I saw the crystal fragments still lying on the floor. I had been forgiven; I was happy again—but the vase was still broken.

It is easy to do wrong—very easy. And somehow, in the order of things, it seems just as easy to repent. It is very wicked to do something mean, to repeat something disagreeable about a dear friend; but it gladdens us to know that the same friend will forgive when we explain all about it. But the old Persian's point is this: You may do anything—you may weep tears of bitterness, and you may be forgiven; but no matter how bitter the tears, how sweet the forgiveness, the record of your misdeed will remain. A whole oceanful of tears will not obliterate a single word—not a solitary pen-stroke.

Girls dear, be careful, very careful, what the moving finger writes about you. You may be amazingly good for a lifetime—and yet have a little black mark loom up huge at the end. The boy who is kind and helpful to his family for twenty years and then runs away is known the day after—not as "the man who was good," but as "the boy who broke his mother's heart."

Friends of mine, read the little verse, and remember this: Through dark days and bright ones an eye is watching everything you do; every word you say is being recorded by a finger that moves slowly, deliberately—unreturningly.

The Worker

I HAVE watched the seed when planted
In the field down near the stream;
I have watched the rains descending;
I have seen the sun's light lending
To the barest of the hillsides
The beauty of its gleam.

I have seen the wheat a-waving,
Making all the meadows tan;
I have seen the scythe a-swinging;
I have heard the peasant singing;
And at last I've solved the riddle—
The purpose of a man!

I have seen the rustic dweller
Far away from city strife;
Far away from noise and rumble
Of the city's endless grumble,
And he too has solved the riddle—
Of the happiness of life.

Wonderful Ancient Tablets

THERE are thousands of people in this country who would give a good deal to become possessor of some favorite piece of early American furniture of the colonial period. But these are things of yesterday compared with the relics that are now being excavated in ancient Babylonia. Among the most wonderful of these is the discovery of the Babylonian tablets. Written in cuneiform characters on fine clay, over 2,000 years before Christ, they tell the story of the life, manners and customs of the days of Abraham. Many of the tablets were found in the ruins of Ur, the home of the patriarch. The tablets are not for sale. They can be obtained by members of the Christian Herald Family who send us two new eight months' subscriptions at one dollar each. The number is limited. You should act at once.

CAUSE AND EFFECT

Indigestion and the attendant discomforts of mind and body are certain to follow continued use of improper food.

Those who are still young and robust are likely to overlook the fact that, as dropping water will wear a stone away at last, so will the use of heavy, greasy, rich food, finally cause loss of appetite and indigestion.

Fortunately many are thoughtful enough to study themselves and note the principle of cause and effect in their daily food. A N. Y. young woman writes her experience thus:

"Sometime ago I had a lot of trouble from indigestion, caused by too rich food. I got so I was unable to digest scarcely anything, and medicines seemed useless.

"A friend advised me to try Grape-Nuts food, praising it highly, and as a last resort, I tried it. I am thankful to say that Grape-Nuts not only relieved me of my trouble, but built me up and strengthened my digestive organs so that I can now eat anything I desire. But I stick to Grape-Nuts."

METZ "22"—$475

One of the big features of the METZ "22" is its gearless transmission. With no clutch to slip and no gears to strip, it does away entirely with gear trouble.

The METZ "22" is extremely economical in operation. It travels 28 to 32 miles on one gallon of gasoline, 100 miles on one pint of lubricating oil, and often does 10,000 miles on a single set of tires.

The METZ "22" climbs Prospect Hill, near Boston, on the high speed. This hill is nearly one mile long, with a grade of from 5 to 21 per cent.

The METZ "22" made a record non-stop run of 1,600 miles, Boston to Minneapolis, in 89h. 33m., without requiring a single adjustment to engine or any working part.

EQUIPMENT includes four-cylinder water-cooled motor, Bosch magneto, wind shield, top, 5 lamps, artillery wheels, best quality Goodrich clincher tires, horn, pump; tools, etc. Left hand drive, center control, $475.00.

The 1914 Model

Reo the Fifth

$1,175 Equipped

F. O. B. Lansing

A Handsome Super-Car

The fame of Reo the Fifth, up to 1914, was due mainly to the chassis. It was the car of extremes, of costly construction. In fine engineering it stood for the best Mr. Olds could do.

But we reached the limit there. Last year we devoted to lines and finish, to beauty and equipment. Now the car excels in appearance as it does in the hidden parts. Inside and outside, this latest model marks the super-car.

Flowing Lines

We adopted the streamline body, now European vogue. The angle dash has disappeared for good. Note the artistic and unbroken lines.

We have given you new-style fenders, a built-in windshield, a flush-set instrument board. We give you rich, enduring finish, deep upholstering, a roomy tonneau. And we give you a driver's seat without a lever in the way.

We have adopted the best system of electric lighting and starting. We give you dimming searchlights. You will see few cars at any price so impressive, so modernly equipped.

But Don't Forget

But don't let simple beauty sell you any car. In an honest car the value lies in parts you do not see.

Reo the Fifth is built to standards which most men call extreme. But time and tests have proved each one essential.

It has vast over-capacity, but there are times when you'll need it. All driving parts are strong enough for a 50-horsepower engine, but there are times when you'll be glad.

We spend six weeks on each car, but the result is exactness. You will find no weakness, no oversight, no flaw.

Our test cars are given 10,000 miles of rough driving, to prove what the parts can stand. But that insures you years of perfect service.

Get the Utmost

Men who have had troubles, upkeep and repairs will tell you it pays to get a well-built car. A car can't be too good. After a few months, a skimped car is bound to prove expensive. Many thousands of men who know this from experience are now buying Reo the Fifth.

The steel is made to formula and analyzed twice. The gears are tested in a 50-ton crushing machine—the springs for 100,000 vibrations. There are 15 roller bearings—190 drop forgings. There is a very costly clutch to make gear clashing impossible. There are big tires for economy. In every part we give you here the very best we know.

A Lower Price

This year we give you a lower price. All the special machinery for building this car has been charged against previous output. Now we wipe out that charge, and give you this year's savings on electric starter and tires.

Now Reo the Fifth, with electric starter and lights, costs $220 less than last year. Yet we give you this year more than ever. Now no price reason need debar you from the best car in its class.

Our sales this spring will, by thousands of cars, exceed any previous record. Men are coming more than ever to this class of car. They are buying cars to keep. They are looking for years of service.

If that is your idea, please see our nearest dealer and measure up this car.

We have dealers in 1155 towns. Write for Reo Magazine—a book for every motorist, showing all the inner secrets of building an honest car.

Questions and Answers

J. H. F., Toronto, Ont. What has Christ made possible to those who are not possible before? How is this brought?

It is one of the most definitely and positively affirmed facts of history and of present-day life that thousands of people have an experience of peace, power, purity and joy which grows out of their belief that God as manifested in the flesh of Jesus of Nazareth died for their sins. This experience is real, is tangible to all who seek it, it makes the lives of those who possess it altogether different from what they were before. When we ask if such an experience was possible before Christ died, the answer is very clear—No. Many Old Testament saints had a very beautiful and exalted spiritual experience, but they could not have the experience of knowing that God in the flesh had died for their sins, because the death had not yet taken place. The question of the reality of these facts is one and the deliverance from it presents some philosophical difficulties, but no really practical difficulties. We can see now that if any persons found deliverance from sin before Christ came they were only [illegible] that now the deliverance is offered to all. A few saints may have looked forward and grasped the promise of the atonement by faith; we look back upon it as a historic fact and so appropriate its benefits. Again, it is interesting [illegible] that since the incarnation men have been able to get a totally new and infinitely deeper idea of God than if he had not manifested Himself in the flesh. He has been willing to come to terms of human life, so as to open [illegible] to comprehend how God thinks and feels and speaks. It is a higher revelation even than which came through the prophets. "God who at sundry times and in divers manners spake in time past unto the fathers by the prophets hath in these last days spoken to us by his Son" (Heb. 1: 1, 2). It is well illustrated by [illegible] that the experience of being saved by a personal friend is different from the experience of loving God as he was revealed in Old Testament times. And now, as the promise was supported, there is added the knowledge that he died to save us, there is a peace and depth to the love that would otherwise have been impossible. The answer to the last part of your question is very simple: Faith. The one who truly believes in Christ receives [illegible] the remainder of his life. Doubt and unbelief. The one who doubts never receives [illegible].

L. B. T., Washington, D. C. [illegible] of the editorial by Mrs. Carrie Harris quoted in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD of April 29, that Villa, the Mexican bandit, was brought up in Methodist service. I have heard a rumor that [illegible] was raised in a county twenty miles east of Washington, known as South Spring, Montgomery County, Md., and that his father's name was Robinson, his mother being an Indian. Is [illegible] true? It is the first time I have heard of the United States as a "Christian nation." There are [illegible] claimed as to Villa's origin, even if subject was to remain unverified. He is necessarily a picturesque character at the present time, whatever he may be to come from.

S. E. T., Cincinnati, O. 1. Divine grace is bestowed [illegible] even at the eleventh hour. If those [illegible] are sincere in their repentance and accept the [illegible] as offered to sinners, they are [illegible] as much as those who are [illegible] Christians. We have no right to limit the divine compassion, nor the power of God. Jesus pointed [illegible] of the dying thief on the cross, as [illegible] passed for years filled correctly and accurately [illegible] all those long years, yet [illegible] right to trust [illegible] past practices were [illegible]. But "the prayer of the righteous availeth much." 2. Where is the passage in the [illegible] where [illegible] is [illegible]? See the [illegible] to a correct translation.

E. E. M., Hamilton, Ont. Many a congregation has to be [illegible] because the [illegible] to [illegible] and [illegible] of [illegible] has been [illegible] and [illegible] of [illegible] to [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

SCENE NEAR THE SOURCE OF THE BARADA RIVER—THE ABANA OF THE OLD TESTAMENT

ON THE ROAD TO DAMASCUS

FOURTH ARTICLE IN THE NEW TRAVEL SERIES

BY REV. FRANCIS E. CLARK, D.D., LL.D.

Founder and President of the Christian Endeavor Society

AS WE follow Paul out of Jerusalem, we are inclined to wonder hat his feelings and notions may have been. ery likely he saw the ot, as he left the city, here a little before the martyr Stephen had been stoned to death, while Paul mself guarded the garments of the murderers of the saint. Perhaps he membered the heavenly face lifted toward the skies, and heard again the ntle words of forgiveness: "Lord, lay not this n to their charge." He may have remembered so that in his dying moment Stephen called upon unseen one, saying, "Lord Jesus, receive my irit." It was to persecute and imprison, and if ssible to kill, the followers of this same Jesus at Paul was now hurrying to Damascus at the ad of his little cohort. Perhaps he went out of e very gate which is now called St. Stephen's ate. As he traveled northward, and heard, ubtless, all along the way, tales of Christ's marlous works, heard how "He spake as never man ake," how he told stories, which he called paraes, about the lilies and the work of the farmers, d the birds of the air, all these reminders of Him hom the young zealot was persecuting through s disciples very likely added fuel to the fire of s wrath.

A few months ago it was my privilege to urney over much at least of the same route that aul took in this ever memorable crusade against e Christians, and a new interest was added to e road made forever famous by Jacob, and seph, and even before them by father Abraham, d especially by the feet of our blessed Lord. I membered that over these same rough ways assed the great apostle on his way to Damascus he supposed, but really on the road which should ad him almost to the uttermost bounds of the own world to proclaim everywhere the religion had desired to blot off the face of the earth.

There were two ways by which Paul might have urneyed to Damascus, which is some hundred d thirty-five miles almost due north of Jerusam. His route, in all probability, was not far om the road which now leads over the rugged dge between the valley of the Jordan and the plains of the Mediterranean, past Nablous, as the ancient Shechem is now called, past the hill of Samaria, the low mountains in which Nazareth nestles and the edge of the Sea of Galilee. Every mile of the early part of the journey at least teems with memories of him whom Paul was so soon to call his Lord and Master. My recent journey to which I have alluded, in which we attempted to follow so far as possible the footsteps of Paul, started from the Jaffa Gate, or rather through the great breach in the wall near the Jaffa Gate, which was made a few years ago to allow the entrance of the German Emperor and his gorgeous retinue. On one side of this new entrance is a tall, ornamental clock tower built by the Mohammedans, showing a strange contrast to the ancient massive "Tower of David" on the other side of the street. At the time of his visit, Emperor William wrote in the album of the German Protestant Church—which is shown to all visitors at Jerusalem—a text from one of Paul's letters to Timothy which expressed his faith in Jesus Christ: "There is one mediator between God and man, the man Christ Jesus," under which in bold letters William signed his name, while the empress, Augusta Victoria, over her autograph wrote another of St. Paul's confessions of faith: "Other foundation can no man lay than that is laid, even Jesus Christ the righteous." These two of the world's leading rulers could find no better words to express their faith.

GRAIN FIELD OUTSIDE DAMASCUS

Hill after hill we climbed in long zigzags on the first day's journey, which took us from Jerusalem to Nablous. The first ten miles or so of the road lies over a very barren and rocky waste, but as we looked back we had many fine views of Jerusalem with its towers, its minarets and its huge hospices outside the walls, and even when the buildings of Jerusalem became blurred and indistinct in the distance, the Mount of Olives, crowned with its great Russian Church and tower, stood out bold and distinct against the Syrian sky.

Doubtless Paul looked back more than once as he journeyed on, for Jerusalem was to him the center of his world, and its buildings and its natural surroundings were dearer to him than his own boyhood's home. The country was less sterile than it is to-day, and smiling vineyards and olive orchards very likely covered hills which are now stripped of all vegetation; but even to-day the country is not wholly barren, for after ten or twelve miles of this road, we came to a valley filled with olive trees and lined with patches of fertile soil. A few villages, too, could be descried, nearer or more remote, many of them composed of rude hovels built of stone and mud. The best of these villages, the cleanest and most prosperous-looking of all, is the only Christian village in the vicinity.

Thus we journeyed on over these historic roads, every foot of the ground instinct with memories dear to the Bible student, until, toward night, two symmetrical hills, higher than most in their vicinity, rose before us and seemed at first sight to prevent our further progress. One of these was Ebal and the other Gerizim, the "mounts of blessing and cursing" of Old Testament days, while near by is a well of peculiar interest, both to Jews and Gentiles, for it is not only the well dug by the father of the twelve tribes of Israel, but more dear to the Christian's heart because on its ancient curb sat our Lord as he talked with the woman of Samaria. The site of this well is better authenticated than most traditional sites, and we can rightly regard it with genuine reverence.

Shechem, or Nablous, as it is now called, is still a very considerable city, and here live to-day the remnant of the interesting sect of the Samaritans, who have dwindled to barely 170 souls, but who still have a high-priest, observe their ancient ritual, and try to impress upon all who hear them or read their literature that Mount Gerizim is not only the most ancient place of the worship of the true God, but the only place where he can be perfectly worshiped to-day.

On the way to Jenin, twenty miles or more from Nazareth, we passed many places which must have been of peculiar interest to the young Paul. Samaria, for instance, is not far from Nablous. A beautiful terraced hill it is, where the tragedies of Ahab and Jezebel and Ehud were enacted, and here Ahab built his ivory palace, after the capital of Samaria was removed from Shechem to this hill-top. No wonder he chose it for his capital, for all about are fields green with sprouting grain, dull green olive orchards, and patches of red soil by way of contrast, while the outlook from the Hill of Samaria in every direction is sublime. On this hill-top the American excavators have recently been at work, and have unearthed what are believed to be the pillars of the palace of Ahab, overlaid as they are by many later Roman ruins.

However eager we may be to believe, it is difficult to credit the story that as we look through holes in the crypt of this church into three tomb chambers we are looking upon the last resting-place of the prophets Obadiah and Elisha, but such is the tradition, and of these facts we are solemnly assured by the guide. It is more satisfactory to look off toward the east, where we see a small bare hill crowned with a single big olive tree, near which nestles a little mud-colored Turkish village, for this hill, we have every reason to believe, is Dothan, where

TRAVELERS ON THE ROAD TO DAMASCUS

Joseph found his brethren feeding their flocks, and where he was treated by them in so unbrotherly a manner.

Beyond Jenin our road lay across the Plain of Jezreel, a long dreary, flat stretch of fertile soil, where the wheels sank into the mud up to the hubs at every turn. At some seasons of the year the road is much more passable even in these days, and possibly in St. Paul's time one of the splendid highways for which the Romans were famous made his journey comparatively easy all the way from Jerusalem to Damascus. But heavy and dreary as the road is, the historic associations never failed to engage our eager attention. There is the hill of Jezreel, where Saul was defeated by the Philistir and the mountains of Gilboa in the distance wh David lamented over Saul and Jonathan. Beyc the Plain of Jezreel are the hills of Nazareth.

Before we reach Nazareth, however, we come a large Turkish village called El Fuleh, throu which the railroad runs from Haifa to Damasc A new railroad, now under construction from Je salem, will soon join the line at this point, and will then be possible to go all the way from Jeru lem to Damascus by rail. This village is typical the work which Turkish misrule can do. The p of an American farmer would be better housed th are most of the people of El Fuleh. At a distar the houses look like big mud beehives, a all of them are plastered with dung, dryi for the fires which shall cook the noond meal.

The railway which we here took to Dam cus probably does not run far from t ancient road over which St. Paul would jou ney, and much of it runs through a wild a inhospitable country. At one point it touch for a little way the southern shore of t Sea of Galilee, and for many miles it f lows the upper courses of the Jordan and tributaries. Deep wadies, or cañons, cut t landscape in many places. The road son times for long distances skirts the edge of precipice with a brawling stream tumbli over the rocks below. A few poor villag one sees here and there upon the hillsides, occasional shepherd with his flock of goa or sheep, but much of the journey is throu lands desolate and barren almost beyond d scription.

One commending feature of the landsca must have impressed the traveler to Dama cus in the first century, as it does us of t twentieth. This is snow-capped Hermo conspicuous for many miles before o reaches Damascus, and always the landma of chief interest to every visitor to th ancient capital. Over nine thousand feet it towe above the plain, its three peaks always covered wi snow, while the view from its top embraces almo the whole of Syria. The Jordan, the Sea of Galile Samaria, Carmel and Tyre can all be seen from th lofty coign of vantage.

As St. Paul journeyed along this historic way c his mission of destruction this mighty mounta must have been before his eye during the long day looking down upon him in its serene majesty eve when at last, in the most memorable moment of h life, he was stricken to the earth and rose at last r longer Saul the persecutor, but Paul the preache of Christ Jesus.

OUR INCREASING POPULATION

THE estimated population of continental United States as figured out by the Census Bureau will total 98,781,324 by July 1 of the present year. If the increase in the next year is proportional there can be little doubt that the mid-decade enumeration of 1915 will reach the 100,000,000 mark, thus putting us in the imperial class of nations and placing us third in the scale of the great powers, with only the British Empire and Russia leading. Of course old China has a great scattered population of almost 450,000,000, but it cannot be reckoned a world power. Of Western civilizations Russia alone exceeds us in home population, having 164,000,000. The British Empire with its colonies and dependencies which stretch around the world encompasses 396,294,752 people, but its home population, including England, Wales, Scotland and Ireland, is less than 42,000,000. The German Empire has a compact population of only 65,000,000, and France can put forward but 38,000,000.

Very possibly we shall soon boast a world metropolis in the city of New York. No other city of ancient or modern time has made such strides. Considerably less than 300 years ago it was only a small Dutch village of less than a thousand inhabitants. To-day it is the second city on earth in regard to numbers, and easily the first in wealth and commercial importance. The Census Bureau estimates the population of New York City on July 1, 1914, at 5,333,539, as follows:

Borough	Population 1910	Estimated Population 1914	Quadrennial Increase	Per Cent.
Manhattan	2,331,542	2,526,716	195,174	8.37
Brooklyn	1,634,351	1,833,696	199,345	12.1
Bronx	430,980	529,198	98,218	22.7
Queens	284,041	339,886	55,845	19.69
Richmond	85,969	94,043	9,074	10.54

This indicates an increase of 566,656 in four years; and, basing future reckoning on these figures, by 1920 there should be an increment of 1,400,000, which would carry the population up to the neighborhood of 6,200,000, or only about one million short of the present population of Greater London. Registration London has a population of but little over 4,500,000. Including the suburbs, which cover a large territory, there are almost 3,000,000 more, but the rate of increase is so small when compared with that of New York that it is not hazardous to say that the latter city will overshadow the English metropolis in less than ten years.

The next largest city of Europe is Paris, with a population of 2,763,393, but Paris is at a standstill, if not retrograding. Vienna comes next with 2,085,888 and Berlin third with 2,040,148 exclusive of the suburbs, which count 1,300,000 more. Several Oriental cities, as Tokyo, Japan, and Canton and Peking, China, are listed at the 2,000,000 mark and over, but the figures cannot be taken definitely, as sometimes the population of the provinces in which the cities are situated is included in the enumeration.

Besides New York many other American centers of population have largely increased in the past few years. The following table shows the estimate of the Census Bureau for the leading cities of the country in 1914 and their increase from the last census year, 1910.

TROOP OF RURALES IN MEXICO CITY

MEXICAN FEDERALS ON PARADE

NEW REBEL VICTORIES IN MEXICO

MEXICAN affairs are now in the realm of conjecture. Any one may hazard a guess as to the outcome. Huerta is reported to be near his political end; he is also said to be stronger than ever. Union of rebel and Federal forces for common defense against the United States appears impossible. Nor will the rebel leaders, they assert, submit their cause to the peace conference set by the South American mediators for May 18 at Niagara Falls, Canada. Villa will mediate only in Mexico City. Sensational stories from Mexico serve to keep alive the war spirit in our own country, and Washington admits pessimism as to the results of mediation. An armed peace, as between the United States and the de facto government in Mexico, prevails, almost too much in spirit like the "time" between "rounds" in a prizefight. But as any one may hazard a guess, a safe one might be that the signs of Huerta's overthrow by the rebels point to the real solution of the trouble. Yet American occupation to pacify the country may have to come after that.

The plans for mediation had scarcely been started when reports of the arrest and sentence to death of a representative of the American Red Cross, Dr. Edward Ryan, as a spy, by Federals at Zacatecas, threatened to stop proceedings abruptly. The State Department at Washington took immediate steps to secure the release, or a legal trial, of Dr. Ryan. The carrying out of the sentence would undoubtedly have precipitated open hostilities, as the charge was groundless. Fortunately the authorities at Zacatecas reconsidered their action, and on May 5 Dr. Ryan was reported as in Mexico City in custody, but under the safeguard of the Brazilian minister, who is looking after American interests. Reports are also received of illegal arrests and detention and of disappearances of Americans in other places, notably that of the American vice-consul at Saltillo, John C. Silliman, of whom no trace has been obtained in a month. All such reports are being vigorously investigated.

CHILDREN OF VERA CRUZ

On May 2 a body of Mexican Federals with cavalry made a demonstration at the pumping station, eight miles out of Vera Cruz, which controls the city's water supply. The Mexicans demanded the surrender of the water-works, which was of course refused, and a conflict seemed imminent. The officer in command notified General Funston by wireless, and reinforcements were rushed to him. The Mexicans finally retired without provoking an engagement.

Following this action, word was received from Mexico City that no further offensive movement would be permitted by the Federal troops during the negotiations for mediation. On May 6 General Funston was given discretionary authority to extend his lines beyond the city limits, in order to be prepared to defend the place in any contingency. This order resulted from reports of the mobilization of some 10,000 Federals at outlying points and the alleged mining of the railways. This latter method of resisting any advance upon Mexico City tremendously increases the natural difficulties that would confront the American troops. The report has not been fully confirmed; on the contrary, previous reports of the destruction of bridges have been found to be unreliable.

The attitude of the Constitutionalist chief, Carranza, toward the proposed mediation has been the principal stumbling-block to those who are working along that line. Carranza showed a desire, amounting to a demand, to be represented at the conference without committing the cause he represents to its deliberations. It was confidently expected that the Board of Mediation would have entrusted to it not only the questions at issue between the United States and Huerta's government, but the internal troubles of Mexico as well. To this course Carranza refuses to consent, as does also General Villa, their claim being that they must press the advantages already gained by their armies, as the overthrow of Huerta and the establishment of a constitutional government are matters that do not primarily concern the mediators between the United States and Huerta. Thus the main object of the proposed mediation, namely the restoration of law and order in Mexico and the establishment of a stable government, seems far less likely of attainment than when the South American envoys first offered their services.

The rebel forces under Villa are pushing their campaign against Saltillo with vigor. It is supposed the Federals have about nine thousand soldiers at that point, and the advance attack upon the town was repulsed. The latest reports declare that a rebel army approximating twenty-five thousand men is approaching in three divisions, General Villa being at the head of one, and the fall of Saltillo is taken for granted. In fact, the Federals are believed to intend retiring to the town of San Luis Potosi for their final stand. A simultaneous attack upon these two towns and Tampico is looked for. Tampico is practically in a state of siege. Increasing scarcity of food supplies, unfit condition of the drinking water, and other conditions have reduced the inhabitants to great distress. On May 6, a temporary truce between the Federals and Constitutionalists was broken, and attacks by rebels massed outside the town in large numbers were renewed. General Maas, who is military governor of the State of Vera Cruz, and commander of the Federal forces, proposed to Villa that the latter join with the Federals in resisting occupation by the United States. This proposal was rejected with great scorn by Villa. A similar report, claiming that the rebel leader in the south, Zapata, head of a powerful force, had formed an alliance with Huerta, is denied, and the press reports a proclamation issued by Zapata announcing the early attack of Mexico City by him with the summary trial and execution of Huerta and his supporters if the city is taken.

Thus the various foes to the rule of Huerta appear to be rapidly pressing him to a decisive defeat. The press of May 7 stated that it is understood at Mexico City that Huerta is prepared to abdicate, provided the United States enter the country to take control until law and order are restored; but excepting on that condition he will refuse to resign and will resist the advance of the rebels to the utmost. The exact fighting strength and financial strength of the Huerta government have not been made known to the outside world. While the impression is general that the dictator cannot hold out much longer, it is remembered that his collapse has been expected at different times for several months.

It is also stated in this connection that foreign Powers, and especially the envoys of the mediatory Powers, believe that the only hope for Mexico lies in exactly the course attributed to Huerta, namely, the pacific occupation of the country by the United States by invitation until a constitutional government is established.

Very impressive memorial services were arranged for the reception of the bodies of the seventeen American sailors and marines who were killed at Vera Cruz, when the Montana and Mayflower reached New York with them. The program included an address by the President at the Brooklyn Navy Yard, following a parade from the pier across New York.

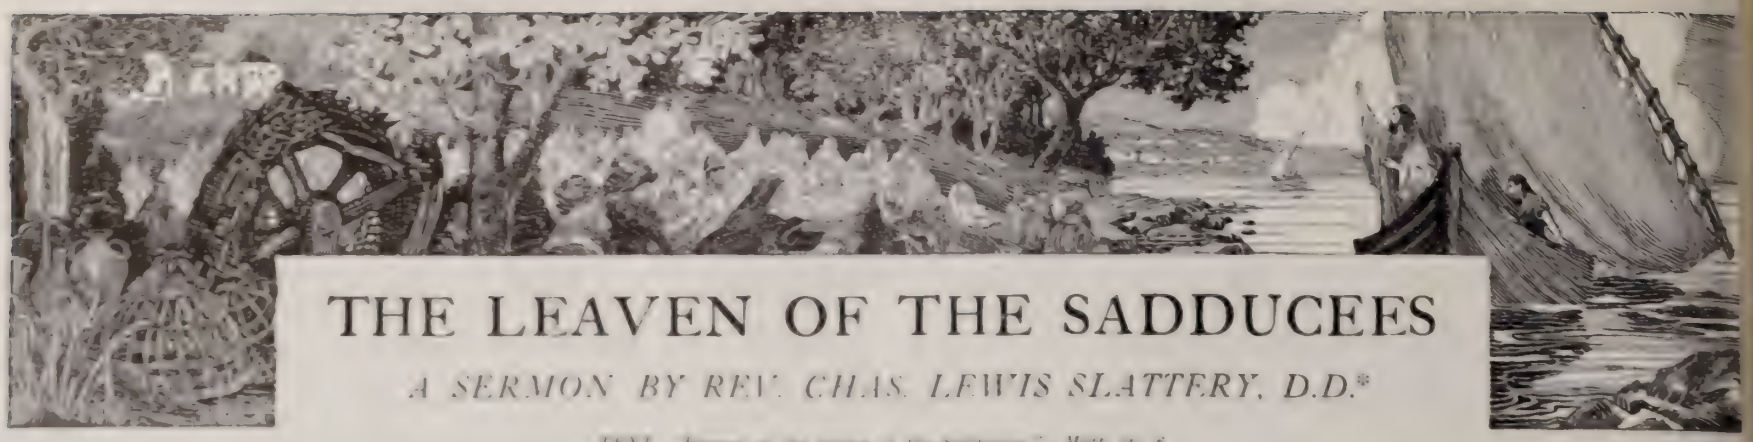
AMERICAN SAILORS ASSISTING REFUGEES ARRIVING AT VERA CRUZ



THE LEAVEN OF THE SADDUCEES

*A SERMON BY REV. CHAS. LEWIS SLATTERY, D.D.

TEXT [illegible] "Matt. xvi. 6

PEOPLE sometimes wonder why the preacher is perpetually going back to the Bible. They wonder why he does not leave a history so ancient and concern himself only with the present. Let me say two things about this. First, the Bible is a striking history of a great people. The man who is attempting to help his own time must know the history of the past: he must know how certain tendencies, which he is sure have recurred in history again and again, have worked themselves out for victory or for destruction. The Bible, as mere history, tells plainly what happens to individuals, to churches, and to nations if they insist upon pursuing certain courses. To hark back to that dear superstition is the most modern of notions. The statesman who really counts has his desk loaded with histories; he does not intend to make mistakes or lose opportunities which a long-ago statesmanship can demonstrate to him. But the Bible is more than ordinary history: it is history consciously in contact with God. Therefore, in the second place, to seek help in the Bible for our present problems or vital heresies we may thereby look at deeds and characteristics similar to our own from God's point of view. In all history, so far as a great historian interprets it, the divine purpose can be seen; only, it is dimly seen. In the Bible, the divine purpose, the divine warning, the divine praise shine brilliantly through almost every page. We know, not only what comes of certain ways of living, but we know what God thinks about it. Is it not worth while, then, to go back to the blessed old Book, that it may be a lantern to our footsteps in this day and in this far-away land?

Present Day Sadducees

So I ask you to think this morning about the sins of the Sadducees. They were a Jewish party in the days of our Lord, half political, half religious. As we read the life of Christ, it is not the Sadducees but the Pharisees who most distress us. By ostentatious religious ceremony, by unscrupulous means, by a riotous insincerity, they have contributed an adjective to the list of hideous epithets—pharisaical. But the Sadducees, we think, could not have been so bad. They did not persistently attack our Saviour. From the world's point of view they were more agreeable than the Pharisees. They were better bred. They were a smaller party, much more satisfactory to the Romans, and consequently had control of the higher Jewish offices, particularly in the Jewish Church. But we must remember one thing. If our Lord repeatedly warned his friends against the Pharisees, he also warned them against the Sadducees. "Beware," he said, "of the leaven of the Sadducees"; that is, beware of the insidious influence of these people, who seem harmless, who really have characters that are deadly.

Before I ask you to think of the qualities which made up the character of a Sadducee, I beg that you will notice what was the fate of the Sadducean party. In our Lord's time, about the year 30, the Sadducees controlled Jewish affairs. Forty years later, with the destruction of Jerusalem, they vanished from history. These characteristics that I am about to name to you, innocent as they often seem, spelled nothing less than annihilation for those ancient people. Do you wonder that I would warn you against them?

Now, what were the characteristics of the Sadducees?

First, they cultivated indifference. When the popular party, the Pharisees, were crying out that Christ is without honor, he was destroying all the sacred Jewish traditions, the Sadducees in scholarly calm smiled condescendingly. Why should they concern themselves with a poor agitator from Galilee? Why should they listen to the bigotry of the rather loud and vulgar Pharisees? The day came when they did listen to the Pharisees; but of that I shall speak later. It was the habit of these well-to-do, comfortable Sadducees to be indifferent to the religious movements about them. They took their religious life rather complacently. It was a matter of institutions, outward conventionality. They never expected their hearts to be touched. Indeed, they steeled their hearts against any chance rush of emotion. They were consistently indifferent.

It is easy to cultivate a habit of indifference to high affairs. It is the trait most to be dreaded in any character in which you are interested. People sometimes say: "Oh, this is an age of religious fads. One man is wildly pursuing a strange religious craze; another is trying to play with a new theory of life; another is making health to be religion: another is saying that there is neither body nor soul, only mind; another is reducing God to impersonal law; and so one and the other drop away from the old paths and go running after theories and experiments and fads. And alas!" moan the critics, "is it not very dreadful?" Well, I answer, it may be somewhat disheartening to see the world ignoring the lesson of the Christian ages; but enthusiasm for even an emasculated religion is vastly better than indifference to all forms of religion, good or bad.

Several years ago a young man in the Berkshire Hills committed suicide. I believe that he had been misled, and in despair had put an end to a disastrous career. At his funeral people assembled who had encouraged him in his downward course, or who had allowed conditions in the town to encourage such habits; for the town was not what it ought to have been. The service was not ours, and an address was expected. The minister excused himself from making the usual panegyric, pleading that the occasion was too serious; and then as he stood over the poor boy's dead body, he looked into the faces of the complacent men who sat about him, and told them plainly that they were to blame for this young man's wasted life. Perhaps they had not done anything very bad, but they had been indifferent to the best. They had not come to church; they had not stirred themselves to keep the town clean and pure; they had secured themselves against all annoyance and all trouble. And here they were in the presence of one result of their indifference. Whether it was the time and place to read such a lesson does not in the least concern us. The only detail we need notice is that the indictment was true. He who is in any way indifferent to the best and the highest things in life, he who is taking his ease, when he ought to be in his place strenuously at work, is sooner or later some one's murderer.

The World's Tender Spot

Indifference is a dangerous quality. It seems harmless. It kills at last.

I said that there came a time when the Sadducees were aroused from their indifference. They were not aroused by seeing Jerusalem going down; they were not aroused by the thought that Rome was tightening her grasp on the ancient Hebrew nation; they were not aroused by seeing bad men and women ply their influence. Nothing that affected the soul, their country, or God moved them. But at last their indignation burst out against Jesus of Nazareth. At last the common herd, the bigoted Pharisees, found ready listeners to their accusations. What had Jesus of Nazareth done to break up the indifference of these complacent Sadducees? He had driven out the money-changers from the temple. They would interfere with the revenues which came to the chief Sadducees. What if this alienation of business from the temple were made permanent! Oh, horrible thought—how their income would shrink! Away with him! Good Friday was only four days away.

It is humiliating to remember that some of the most beneficent movements of the world's history have been initiated only upon the manifestation of that aspect of tyranny which affects one's money. It is the worldly spirit, pure and simple. It shrugs its shoulders before all complaint about injustice and falsehood and evil living, but cries "Halt!" the moment a finger is put upon a bit of gold. The Protestant Revolution in Europe found the final and effective appeal for its righteous cause in exactly this way. A great soul here and there had said, "The Spanish Inquisition is heathenish murder; the church which allows such enormities should be reformed"; but the world allowed the Spanish Inquisition to continue. A great soul here and there had said, "We should have services in the language of the people, so that the people may know what they are saying and what is being said"; but the world still was content with a vague murmuring in an unknown tongue. A great soul here and there had said: "We ought to be reading the Word of God to get the comfort and the help of it for our lives"; but when the authorities protested the world for the most part acquiesced: what was the use of bothering about it anyway? When, however, Leo the Tenth decided to build St. Peter's, and needed therefore millions of dollars to finish it, when, to get this tremendous sum, he sent Tetzel up into Germany to sell indulgences; then upon the worldly old world in wrath, and said: "The old order must go; we can endure this tyranny no longer. For our pockets are touched: this is very serious." Of course the great leaders had higher reasons; but the world at large fell to work for the new and better order only because money seemed to be in danger.

Nor may we as Americans feel too comfortable in any such arraignment. For was it not the unjust taxes of England which drove our forefathers to seek independence? Here, too, the leaders had higher ideals; but the worldly spirit, pinched in accounts, rose at length to follow their leadership.

Wisdom's Folly

I am not forgetting that money is a symbol, and so is capable of a high moral interpretation. Nor am I arguing that one should not be indignant when one's property is unjustly attacked. My only contention is that it shows a low state of character to pass by all other insults and affronts, and to be disturbed only when some one pulls hard at your purse-strings. A really fine man will be excited far more when the honor of his country is at stake than when a ship filled with his country's gold is sunk in the depths of the sea. And when the investigation of some public enterprise reveals that only a small fraction of the money appropriated has gone into building or work, and that the bulk of it has gone to enrich dishonest politicians, even then the emphasis ought not to be on the lost money, but rather on the shame of being a people who could elect or allow to be elected such villains. Money has its true place: I am not scoffing at it. But the human soul cannot be bought or sold. Whatever touches or affects that, is to be reckoned with first. He who waits for the enemy to attack money-interests very often finds, to his dismay, that his fortress is taken while he slept.

Beware, then, first of indifference, and second, of the worldly spirit.

Now let us see another trait of the Sadducees. We hear very little of what they did believe; but we know some of the beliefs which they disowned. For example, we know from the Gospel records, as well as from other sources, that they did not believe in the resurrection. When people said with glowing faces and shining eyes, "I believe this and this," the Sadducees tossed back their heads and said: "And we do not believe it."

In other words, so far as we know, the Sadducees had a negative creed. They were always explaining what they did not believe. It made them feel superior to the common mob about them, credulous, wide-eyed, open-mouthed. They were too advanced to be drawn into believing much of anything. But they boasted a long list of beliefs which they scorned to accept.

This negative belief is also a disastrous trait, and further, explains why the Sadducees soon became extinct. A man who is honest with himself cannot believe to the last detail just what all his neighbors collectively believe. There must be various shades of acceptance of the large collection of generally approved truths about man, the universe, and God. I will grant all that. But right here is my contention: no man, no church, no nation, can survive by negations. If you believe in but two facts in life say with a glad heart your belief in those two facts, and say nothing about all the facts which you do not believe. For Truth is so egregiously larger than the human mind can grasp that the man who

FOR EVERY DAY IN THE YEAR, BASED ON THE WORDS OF JESUS

BY PROFESSOR W. H. T. DAU

SUNDAY, May 24. Matthew 5: 31, 32. "It hath been said, Whosoever shall put away his wife, let him give her a writing of divorcement: but I say unto you, That whosoever shall put away his wife, saving for the cause of fornication, causeth her to commit adultery: and whosoever shall marry her that is divorced committeth adultery." It appears that the Pharisees in olden times had made divorce even more easy than the infamous proceedings in some of our divorce-courts. "Give her a written dismissal," they would say to a suitor; "that is all that the law demands. And then you may marry another, or let her become married to another." Such a ruthless dissolution of the sacred bonds of matrimony for a cause which God does not allow, our Lord calls adultery. A harsh name, but true! How must those scribes have winced when they heard the Lord's interpretation of the law! When on a later occasion they brought a sinning woman to the Lord, and he challenged their own innocence, they all slunk away with guilty consciences.

MONDAY, May 25. Matthew 5: 33-37. "Again, ye have heard that it hath been said by them of old time, Thou shalt not forswear thyself, but shalt perform unto the Lord thine oaths: but I say unto you, Swear not at all; . . . But let your communication be, Yea, yea; nay, nay." As a solemn attestation of the truth our Lord, when called upon, did not shrink from making oath to the correctness of his teaching. Nor did Paul refuse to take an oath. What Jesus denounces in this place is the habit of designing men—still noticeably prevalent among Jews and others—to interlard their conversation with strong protestations of their sincerity. In order to escape the charge of blasphemy, profanity, and trifling with holy matters, these people will resort to all sorts of tricks of language which enable them to avoid the use of the divine name outright. When a person swears a true oath, he calls on God as a witness to the truth he is about to tell, and as the avenger of the untruth, if he should tell that. Such an appeal to God may be made in a manner that calls for no oath at all, but for a simple, straightforward, matter-of-fact statement. The Pharisees in the days of our Lord were habitually irreverent people. Men shall give an account of every idle word that they have spoken.

TUESDAY, May 26. Matthew 5: 38-42. "Ye have heard that it hath been said, An eye for an eye, and a tooth for a tooth: but I say unto you, That ye resist not evil: but whosoever shall smite thee on thy right cheek, turn to him the other also. And if any man will sue thee at the law, and take away thy coat, let him have thy cloak also. And whosoever shall compel thee to go a mile, go with him twain. Give to him that asketh thee, and from him that would borrow of thee turn not thou away." We are aware that unbelievers have held up this text with scorn to show that Christianity is inapplicable to the conditions under which men live, and must live, in this world. It is a pity that the much-advertised "fool actions" of Christians who have, in some cases literally, obeyed this law of Jesus, have not been studied by the critics in their results; for they have had the effect of the coals of fire, which Paul tells us we should heap on the head of an enemy. In the law of retaliation, the demand for exact compensation is not the highest point. The follower of Christ, viewed as a citizen of an earthly commonwealth, has indeed the same rights as any other citizen, and can demand the same protection of the laws under which he lives as others; but he can, and he will gladly, surrender his rightful claims if he can thereby advance the cause of his Lord. The early Christians uncomplainingly suffered the spoiling of their goods, and by their patience and persistence in heroic well-doing conquered the world, and wrote their names even in the records of secular history.

WEDNESDAY, May 27. Luke 6: 31. "And as ye would that men should do to you, do ye also to them likewise." Not as others have dealt with you, but as they should have dealt with you, so deal ye with them—that is a general precept which Christ gathers from the law properly understood. But how am I to know what is proper in every instance, according to this interpretation? Would you have others do you harm or good? Would you have them exacting or lenient to you? Would you have them speak ill or well of you? Would you wish to have them suspect you, whisper damaging reports about you, and interpret your actions uncharitably; or would you have them believe you capable only of virtuous actions, and put the best constructions on all you do? Surely, in each case you would instinctively choose the latter alternative. That is an unerring indicator to you as to what treatment you owe to others. The fundamental truth in God's law—love—has been written in your heart, and when you apply God's law in an unloving spirit and in an unloving manner, you have broken God's law and offended your own conscience.

THURSDAY, May 28. Matthew 5: 44-45. "Love your enemies, bless them that curse you, do good to them that hate you, and pray for them which despitefully use you, and persecute you; that ye may be the children of your Father which is in heaven." The law of love to a fellow man had been interpreted by the Jewish scribes so as to exclude an enemy. Revenge was declared permissible. Our Lord enjoins that we approach an enemy from an opposite direction. We must not show him that we can curse, hate, spite, and persecute as effectually as he. He probably knows that, without our revealing the fact; and he probably expects us to do just that, if he views us in our carnal state. We must treat him to a different revelation: we must reveal to him our heavenly parentage. Let us show him that a child of the Father in heaven can bear injustice and abuse, and return nothing but kindness for it. That is the law which the Father puts into the hearts of men. According to that law, the Spirit of Christ worketh in us. Every shower of rain, every sunrise, should remind us of God's love for his enemies.

FRIDAY, May 29. Luke 6: 32, 35. "For if ye love them which love you, what thank have ye? for sinners also love those that love them. But love ye your enemies, and do good, and lend, hoping for nothing again; and your reward shall be great, and ye shall be the children of the Highest: for he is kind to the unthankful and to the evil." Christian love, or charity, does not select its beneficiaries according to the principle of self-interest, and does not operate on the contract plan of so much for so much. To use a kindness as a fisherman uses his bait, to catch something, is not practicing charity. When several persons assume a common risk and carry out a mutual agreement, that may be business, but it is not charity. It is not even pure and clean business in every instance. The element of selfishness must not enter a charitable endeavor. Christian charities are not nicely calculated investments from which the investor hopes to derive revenue in some form, but generous gifts, like those of the Father in heaven, who is impartially kind even to the undeserving and ungrateful.

SATURDAY, May 30. Luke 6: 36-38. "Be ye therefore merciful, as your Father is also merciful. Judge not, and ye shall not be judged: condemn not, and ye shall not be condemned: forgive, and ye shall be forgiven: give, and it shall be given unto you; good measure, pressed down, and shaken together, and running over." The example of the Father is once more held up to the children, to impress upon them mercy in judging others and also generosity. Especially as regards the former, the Pharisees' conduct was notoriously faulty. It is well known how harshly they judged not only individuals who had been overtaken in a fault, but whole classes of people, like the publicans, and races, like the Samaritans. From both of these the Lord had drawn some of his most faithful followers. Without considering mitigating circumstances attending a wrong action, or inquiring into the motive of the doer, the Pharisees mercilessly denounced each act that did not square in every minute particular with their standard of right, and forthwith assumed only the worst motive possible for the action. Their whole life was filled up with incessant censure of others. Those who had once fallen under their angry sentence were relentlessly persecuted as hopelessly reprobate. Over against this censoriousness, which was made to pass for a genuine exhibition of orthodoxy, the Lord inculcates mercy, heartfelt pity with the erring, the sinning, the fallen and the perverse, and generous liberality to all in need. By such conduct his followers are to commend themselves and their religion to men, and their acts of mercy are promised an abundant reward.

THE LEAVEN OF THE SADDUCEES

ompously stands forth and declares what he, poor tom, does not, and never shall, believe, is more nan absurd; he is a criminal against light. No life an survive on negations. If your creed is short, let be short; but let it be positive, every word of it. et it ring with confidence and assurance. Let it be our beckoning to deeper, truer, surer faith. There something wrong with the man who says that he elieves less and less as the years go by. Every an ought to be acquiring, each year, new and rmer convictions.

I wish to name one other characteristic of the adducees. They attempted what our Lord declared to be impossible: they attempted to serve od and the world. Because they were rulers in e Jewish Church, they felt that they must serve od—at least respectably. Because their offices deended on the worldly Romans, they felt that they must keep on approved terms with the world. So it came about that they served neither their outward comfort nor their inner peace. They failed—just as our Lord said that such people must fail.

A great many Christians wish the church to be; but they do not wish it to be too aggressive, too pious, too generous. They explain that the world owes the church an unending debt; for what would life be worth if the sanctions of the church did not stand guard over childhood and womanhood and weakness and death? Oh, yes; the world needs the church's restraining hand. And then, when bitterness and trial come, the world needs the assurance of hope and the comfort of a tender Saviour. Yes, yes; the world is grateful. But the world must have her rights. The church may come only just so far. The church must not ask the busy man to worship God every Sunday. The church must overlook a little worldly wisdom—sometimes called crooked—because the world needs it. And in general the church must not be too thoroughgoing.

It is a sad and very ancient tale; but, with all other Sadducean traits, it makes for ruin in the end. The church has one Master, one Master only, and that Master is not the world. Christ is the Master of the church, and he must be all in all, or nothing. The Sadducees, great in their day, faded away like mist in the morning sunlight. Four traits worked their ruin: indifference, the worldly spirit, a negative creed, the attempt to divide themselves between God and the world. It is all ancient history. But you see what comes of such traits. So let us ask God to-day to make us enthusiastic, unworldly, positive, loyal to him—and to him alone!

A WEEK IN THE WORLD'S NEWS

Preparing for a City of 25,000,000

AN ELEVATED railroad from New York to Chicago, high enough to be level regardless of topography, and a submarine tube railway along the pleasant scenery of the ocean bed between America and Europe, are among projects which have had their day of publicity. The Maritime Association of the Port of New York, an entirely serious body, recently had discussed before it a plan to annex Manhattan to Long Island by filling in the East River from Hell Gate to the Battery, the creating of a trunk-line sewer from the northern suburban limits to a disposal terminal miles at sea, Jersey and Staten Island having tributary lines; the building of a cape from the lower end of New York almost to Staten Island, and connecting that island hill with the city by tunnels. The idea has been declared desirable and practicable, inclusive of the expenditure of $100,000,000 a year to bring it to pass. Dr. T. Kannard Thompson is sponsor for the scheme.

Burned Ship Survivors Rescued at Sea

THE steamship Seydlitz on May 4 reported an unidentified vessel on fire three hundred miles off Cape Race, around which she circled without discovering any signs of life and no small boats in the vicinity. The Seydlitz sent out wireless calls, and the Cunarder Franconia, bound from Liverpool for Boston and carrying 1,733 passengers, responded. That vessel picked up a small boat in which were thirteen sailors in a state of complete exhaustion from exposure, and also the body of Chief Steward Matthews, all of them from the British steamship Columbian, which had caught fire on Sunday night and was quickly rendered useless by a series of explosions, one of which wrecked the wireless apparatus while sending out calls for help. When able to talk, those rescued stated that the Columbian's crew and officers had left her in two boats which drifted apart. The other boat contained fourteen men including the captain, but uncertainty regarding the number of the crew leads to fears that besides the missing boatload twelve other men may be lost. Captain Miller of the Franconia put his vessel about in futile search for the missing boat or boats. The next day the Manhattan picked up the second boat. Nineteen men are still missing, four are known to be dead.

Independence Day in Norway

NORWAY is celebrating its first centennial by an exposition to last from May 15 to October 15, and it is said that nearly a quarter of a million American-Norwegians will attend. North Dakota, one-half of whose population is said to be composed of this race, has made an appropriation and will be represented by Governor Hanna, who will deliver an address on July 4, one of the two chief gala days in the celebration; May 17, Norway's Independence Day, being the other. Wisconsin and Minnesota will also send exhibits representing Norwegian labor. A large contingent of Lutherans will attend from the United States.

Some Deeds in the Doing

WHILE rescuing ice-bound fishing vessels this winter, the naval tug Potomac was herself caught in the floes and abandoned in the Gulf of St. Lawrence. A determined party, made up from her crew and Newfoundlanders, has at last reached the tug at great risk, remanned it and started to bring it to port. . . . The Haitian Congress was thrown into confusion May 6 by a British demand for immediate payment of a $62,000 indemnity awarded a British subject for destruction of his sawmill during the last revolution. It was not a question of honor, but of cash, of which none was in sight. The guns of the British cruiser Suffolk, however, helped the government to locate the amount. . . . Memphis, Tenn., entertained the Southern Sociological Congress from May 6 to 15. The National Conference on Charities and Corrections, embodying nine affiliated welfare organizations, convened with the congress. Hundreds of delegates attended. The annual meetings of these bodies are productive of nation-wide activities of an altruistic nature. . . . Chinese pirates are getting their deeds recorded in the press. On March 31 the steamship Shingtai, flying the British flag, set sail from Hongkong, carrying seventeen pirates rated as passengers. On signal these desperadoes attacked the crew, slew several, including officers, and secured $30,000. They then took charge of the vessel. Subsequent events are not stated in the news item which appeared May 6. . . . On the other hand, a number of Chinese officers and civilians will presently receive gold watches and chains, forwarded May 6 by the United States Government to our legation at Peking, to be given them in appreciation of services to American citizens, chiefly missionaries, saved from massacre in October, 1913. . . . Officers of the United States army and navy who rendered noteworthy services in connection with the construction of the Panama Canal will also benefit by this appreciative mood of Congress, if a bill now in committee is passed authorizing promotion and the thanks of the nation to such men.

MR. AND MRS. WILLIAM G. McADOO

THE fourteenth White House wedding (there is uncertainty as to the exact number of such weddings, however) occurred Thursday, May 7, when the President's youngest daughter, Miss Eleanor Randolph Wilson, became the wife of William G. McAdoo, secretary of the treasury. As great an interest was taken in this event as in the marriage of Miss Jessie Woodrow Wilson to Francis B. Sayre, November 25 last, though equal public notice had not been evident. It was the wish of the President and Mrs. Wilson to have this wedding marked by simplicity throughout. It is said that no cards of invitation were issued, and that the official character of the bride and bridegroom were purposely eliminated. Many beautiful and valuable gifts were received from the cabinet, the House of Representatives, government officials, and the host of friends of the couple both within and outside of official and diplomatic circles. It was announced in the press that Mr. and Mrs. McAdoo would sail on Saturday for Europe, where the honeymoon will be passed, it being their intention to be back in Washington early in June, and that the summer will be spent at the national capital. It is also stated that Mrs. Wilson will leave the White House after the wedding to spend a few weeks in rest. The wedding ceremony was a notable addition to the long list of social events in the White House.

Federal Reserve Board Appointed

PRESIDENT WILSON has won the approbation of bank and business men generally and of politicians in his selecti of members of the Federal Reserve Board, the supreme gove ing body in the new banking system. Mr. Richard Olney, Boston, formerly secretary of state, was selected as governor of the board, declined on account of age. The remaining members are Adolph C. Mill Berkeley, Calif.; Paul M. Warburg, New York; W. P. G. Harding, Birmin ham, Ala., and Harry A. Wheeler, of Chicago. Secretary McAdoo and Com troller of the Currency Williams are ex-officio members. It is thought possib that Secretary of Agriculture Houston may be selected in Mr. Olney's pla The positions carry an annual salary of $12,000, and the appointees will h office for two, four, six, eight and ten years, respectively.

Suffrage Fete Day Observed

SATURDAY, May 2, was widely observed as Suffrage Day advocates of votes for women. A two-mile parade of wom with bands and woman cavalry was planned to take place Chicago, rain or shine; in Pennsylvania sixty places celebrate and a parade and mass meeting gave Pittsburg its first important suffra demonstration; an automobile parade was scheduled for Kansas City; 9,0 persons took part in a splendid pagea in Boston; other cities witnessed simil scenes. Out-of-door speaking was t rule. In New York City the princip public squares became so many rallyi points. A huge meeting held in Carneg Hall in the evening was partly dampen by Mayor Mitchel's expressed doubt the practical need that women have f the vote. As a faint echo of the day rejoicing, a London militant ruinous slashed the year's greatest picture of t Royal Academy Exhibition, a portrait Henry James, by the American painte John S. FEDERAL RULE IN COLORADO

THE course of events in the Colorado coal miners' strike points to a termination of hostilities under compulsion of Federal troops, and a thorough governmental inquiry into the conditions which have made Federal intervention necessary. Upon invitation of THE CHRISTIAN ERALD authoritative statements from both sides in the conflict are promised r our readers next week. Exact facts are almost impossible to obtain from trained observers, however unprejudiced, and we trust these coming state- ents will illuminate the subject.

The public at large has seldom been so stirred by reports of strike disturb- ces. The "war" in Colorado has taken on the importance of a national isis. In the main the press has found much to enlist its sympathy for the iners, much to arouse its condemnation of what was done to overawe them. his attitude is reflected in their reports of public demonstrations against the ore prominent mine owners, chiefly Mr. John D. Rockefeller, Jr. Strike mpathizers have "picketed" the offices of the Standard Oil Company at 26 roadway, New York, and the city d country residences of Mr. ockefeller, by walking to and fro efore these buildings wearing epe. They have attracted enor- ous crowds, and this form of blic antagonism, coupled with flammatory speeches against in- vidual mine owners, is said to ave caused Mr. Rockefeller to re- re to his father's country seat for season.

The Federal Department of La- or has made repeated efforts to duce the mine companies to enter nto an arbitration. To all requests e response had been that those ho are responsible for the strike hould be held responsible for rminating it and that they, the ine owners, would not consent to nter into any arbitration which ncluded the United Mine Workers f America.

Federal troops under Colonel ames Lockett and Major W. A. olbrook were in practical charge f the infected region by Sunday, lay 3. Acting under orders of the resident and the secretary of war proclamation was issued as fol- ows:

Whereas. Under existing circumstances e possession of arms and ammunition by persons not in the military service of the United States tends to provoke disorder and to incite domestic violence and hinders the restoration of normal conditions of peace and good order:

I do by the authority of the President of the United States call upon and direct all persons not in the military service of the United States who have arms or ammunition in their possession or under their control to deliver them forthwith to the officer at the place herein designated.

Receipts will be issued for all arms and ammunition so delivered. The above applies to individuals, firms, associations and corporations.

Disarmament has not proven an easy matter. Many mine guards were reported as having given up their weapons, but strikers were disposed to hide their guns against a renewal of hostilities. The presence of Federal troops promptly ended open warfare. Under the proclamation, militiamen, police and all others not in the military service of the United States will have to give up their arms, leaving the United States forces in absolute control of the district. The saloons have been closed by Major Holbrook until further orders. It cannot be said that the danger of outbreak is entirely passed as yet.

The Colorado legislature assembled in special session May 4 to take action for the termination of the strike and safeguarding the rights of both operators and miners. A well-defined movement was afoot to impeach Governor E. M. Ammons, because of the lawlessness which has existed, resulting in many deaths. It was also planned to arrest and court-martial a large number of militiamen, who are charged with responsibility for the deaths of women and children and the destruction of property of the strikers. Legislation is proposed looking to compulsory arbitration of present and future difficulties, and even to government ownership of the mines. A bill for the issuing of bonds for nearly a million dollars in order to pay the militiamen for strike duty will be hotly contested. There is a strong disposition to issue a revised call for a special session in order that a much wider program of reconstruction may be put through, looking to the future and not alone to the present situation. Colorado women are organized to procure justice for the miners. It is still hoped that the efforts of the Federal Department of Labor to bring about an amicable arbitration will succeed.

A LITTLE ANGEL OF THE MOUNTAINS

BY CYRUS TOWNSEND BRADY

SYNOPSIS OF WHAT HAS TAKEN PLACE

Olaf Tryggvesson, one of a party of orphans being sent west rom New York years ago to new homes, climbs unnoticed from he train, as it comes to a stop, to gather an armful of flowers, nd is left behind. He races along the track, then gives up, ollowing the rails till late afternoon, when he turns off on a rail leading through the wilderness, where he meets an Indian, ho takes him into his camp. Two miners ride up. The men lay cards, the young Indian accuses one of the miners of cheat- ng and is knocked down and cruelly kicked and beaten. The ld Indian shoots the miner, whereupon the other miner shoots he father and also the mother, who rushes forward to protect im. The living miner binds the wounded Indian and the body f his companion upon ponies and rides to Cañon Creek, a ough mining town, which he reaches on Sunday morning. Olaf, following furtively, comes to the cabin of "Parson Bill," ho is by no means a parson, at about the time Dead Shot ackson reaches the Black Pup Saloon. Jackson accuses the ndian of killing his friend, a court is organized, with Old Four Eyes as judge, and the Doc as prosecuting attorney. Parson ill is sent for to act as counsel for the Indian. In his testimony ackson states that his partner was killed without provocation nd that no other Indians were present. The Indians testified, elling of his mother's presence and her murder. Parson Bill uddenly announces that the prisoner is ready for cross-exam- nation.

CHAPTER VI

'n Which Little Olaf Tryggvesson Braves the Wrath of the Desperado and Tells the Truth

"YOU said somethin' about a squaw?" began the Doc, without delay.

The Indian nodded.

"What squaw?"

"Yellow Feather's squaw."

"What did she butt in for?"

"She come cry over dead chief. That man"—pointing at his accuser—"he shoot her."

"Did she make any threatenin' movements toward him?"

"No."

"Didn't draw no gun?"

"No."

"Nor knife?"

"No, she have nothing. She bend over Yellow Feather."

"An' then?"

"He shoot her."

"There wasn't no woman there, I tell ye," roared Jackson desperately. "He's lyin' an' he knows it."

"You was all drunk, wasn't you?" asked the Doc of the prisoner, who shot a look of supreme contempt at his vociferous accuser.

The Indian nodded. It was his evident purpose to conceal nothing. His only hope was in the truth and he was smart enough to realize it.

"Me little drunk, big chief more drunk, white men most drunk," he said frankly.

"How do you make that out?"

"They give us one bottle, two bottle, they took four."

"That's all," said the Doc. "Your honor, this yere case is like this. It's the word of a white man agin' that of an Injun, an' in course there ain't no doubt as to which one the jury'll believe. It don't seem necessary to argufy that p'int at len'th an' therefore I rests confident that the jury'll convict the Injun without no more words from me."

"Pardon me, your honor," interrupted Parson Bill suavely as before, "that is not all. I would like to have Mr. Jackson called to the witness stand again."

"Mr. Jackson, stand up," said the court.

"He gave his testimony once," said the Doc, "an' a man can't be asked to testify twice in the same case. That's the law, ain't it?"

Old Four Eyes frowned. He had heard something like that in the old days, but he was not sure. Parson Bill laughed derisively, and the laugh stiffened the backbone of the hesitant judge.

"In this yere case, he testifies as many times as he's called. What we wants is the truth," he said decisively.

Some little sympathy for the Indian had been engendered even in the minds of the prejudiced audience. The story of the shooting of the woman, about which nothing had been said before, produced a certain effect on the men, who were not devoid of a rude sort of chivalry, even toward a squaw. It put a little different face on the affair. Dead Shot Jackson looked more angry than ever and fairly glared his defiance at Parson Bill. The latter began deliberately.

"So there was a woman there?"

Now the desperado was not without discretion. He quickly realized that it would be easy to send back and discover the body of the woman or what remained of it. He had entirely overlooked that possibility. He had thought his simple statement would convict the Indian, whom "the boys" would have great pleasure in hanging, otherwise he would have killed him out of hand. He had been very drunk indeed when the affair occurred and he had not got completely sober yet. But he realized now that he was in a serious dilemma, and he could no longer foresee the outcome, much less control it. Very reluctantly he was forced to admit that the Indian had told the truth in some respects, damaging as the admission was to his own veracity. He had hoped to bluff the affair through on his reputation as a "killer," and he still hoped, but his bluff was being called. Parson Bill was calling it, and he hated him accordingly.

"I believe there was," he admitted at last, and most reluctantly, "but I was so excited over poor Bud that I disremembered it when I was testifyin'. She didn't make no difference noway. The p'int was—"

"Never mind the point," said Parson Bill. "You have just admitted that you didn't recollect it?"

"Yes, but—"

"And then you added that it was not material. How can you say you forgot it on one hand, and that it made no difference on the other?" he asked.

Jackson could only glare at his tormentor. Old Four Eyes nodded his head approvingly.

"That p'int seems to be well taken, you gents of the jury."

"I thank the court," said Parson Bill.

"Now, Mr. Jackson, will you kindly tell us just what happened to the—er—lady?"

"How do I know?"

"Did you leave her there?"

"No—yes— Say, what are ye drivin' at?"

"What did you do to her?"

"Well, I kind a remembers that she got in the way of—"

A Great Testimony to Prayer

ONE of the most remarkable declarations ever recorded, testifying to the efficacy of prayer, has just been made public in England. It is the report of a committee of ten representatives of the Church of England and ten distinguished medical men, the chairman being the Dean of Westminster. In stating its conclusions, the committee says:

> The committee desires to express their belief in the efficacy of prayer. They reverently believe, however, that the divine power is exercised in conformity with and through the operation of natural laws. Spiritual ministration should be recognized equally with medical ministration, as carrying God's blessing to the sick. Health, bodily and mental, is capable of being enhanced, for good, by spiritual means. The physical results of what is called faith or spiritual healing do not prove on investigation to be different from those of mental healing or suggestion. The committee recognize that suggestion is more effectively exercised by some persons than by others, and this fact seems to explain the gifts of a special character claimed by divine healers.
> The committee are forced to the conclusion that faith or spiritual healing, like all treatment by suggestion, can be expected to be permanently effective only in cases of what are called functional disorders, as distinct from organic ailments. Those who resort to healers are therefore warned that they may thereby be postponing until too late medical treatment which might serve to arrest organic disease.
> The committee desire to set increased importance attached to spiritual ministrations as contributory means to recovery, but they strongly deprecate the independent treatment of disease by irresponsible and unqualified persons.

Belief in prayer and faith in a prayer-hearing and prayer-answering God are far more general than the world imagines. This is the kind of faith the very simplicity of which confounds unbelief. To the Christian, it is the most natural thing in the world that he should take all his needs and his troubles to his Father, asking him in the name of his dear Son to give the help he has promised to all who come in faith, nothing doubting. And why not in sickness as well as in health? Did not God hear David when in his distress the king prayed to him who "forgiveth all thine iniquities and healeth all thy diseases"? Many times in the Gospels is the fact emphasized that "the prayer of faith shall save the sick." Countless thousands to-day can testify that he is still the same prayer-answering God.

The English committee, which was appointed in October, 1911, examined many witnesses, and while there was a wide difference in detail, the mass of evidence submitted showing the power of prayer in sickness was convincing proof of the fact that the Lord's hand is not shortened, and that he is ever the same, ready to help those who trust in him.

This whole attractive subject is one with which many earnest Christians are familiar. They believe in prayer, and they believe also, in the great majority of cases, that they do right in applying the remedies at hand and asking him "who knoweth all our infirmities" to bless the means so employed. Then it becomes their duty to give him the glory, by gratefully acknowledging before the whole world the blessing received.

Standing By

BEING criticized is part of the price a man pays for winning a place of responsibility. But there are times when criticism of a public leader is almost criminally out of place.

Much of the criticism of President Wilson and Secretary Bryan during the present grave national crisis has been not only ill-timed and vicious, but ridiculous as well. One cartoonist ridicules the President's grief for the slain heroes of Vera Cruz, evidently holding that since he may be said to have been, because of his position, in some degree responsible for their deaths he had no right to grieve. Another paper held that he did not grieve enough and was inclined to curtail the obsequies, carrying out his contention that we were not engaged in war and that the brave men were doing not war duty, but police duty. Another paper complained that he was making too much of the ceremony and thus unduly glorifying war. He is blamed for having sent troops at all. He is blamed for not sending the troops into the interior now that they have landed on Mexican soil.

All this bandying is disgraceful. Steamboats have the sign, "Do not talk to the man at the wheel." Can you imagine how difficult it would be to steer a ship if passengers and crew were jeering, heckling and condemning the pilot? Statecraft is not a barefaced game. There has been during this Mexican crisis too much noise from the bleachers.

Washington was cruelly censured by many of his compatriots. Lincoln was shamelessly ridiculed and blamed. The findings of history have put these objectors to silence. President Wilson and Secretary Bryan have upon their hands a task of colossal magnitude and infinite delicacy. No fair-minded observer can seriously doubt that their deep desire is for peace; that their hearts bleed and their minds are shocked by the wounds and death so far incident to the carrying out of their best judgments, and that their profound hope is to bring the whole matter of the welfare of our sister republic and our relationship to her to the right conclusion with the least possible sacrifice of blood and life. It is a time for standing by. We can help more by praying than by condemning. May God guide aright these earnest men to whose hands has been entrusted the course of our ship of state through this undesired storm.

Responsibilities of Riches

IN THIS day of colossal fortunes and of sharp criticisms to which their owners are often subjected, one cannot fail to be reminded of the comparatively modest competencies of the wealthy class a few generations ago. Then, our millionaires could almost be counted on the fingers of one's hand; now, we reckon them by the hundreds. This tremendous accumulation of wealth in the hands of a few is one of the greatest problems our republic has to face. It is significant of the public feeling on the question that it has come up for discussion in that dignified legislative body, the United States Senate.

We find in Bible times many social problems very much like those we ourselves have to meet. Among the foremost was this problem of riches, of the "instability and deceitfulness" of which the old Bible gives warning. Even in those early days, as now, increasing wealth was inevitably accompanied by still more rapidly increasing poverty. The line was drawn with cruel sharpness between the rich and the poor. In many ways the Scripture impresses upon us the wickedness and folly of glorying in the mere possession of wealth, which we should hold as a stewardship from God, to be used for his glory and the benefit of humanity. Jesus himself repeatedly warned his followers against the temptations of wealth. "Labor not to be rich," he said; "lay not up for yourselves treasure on earth."

To the poor, such a lesson might seem to carry little consolation; yet the whole world is learning it. Mere wealth, without merit, is somehow losing the old-time power with which it used to conjure so compellingly. The very manner of its accumulation is being questioned. In another generation many of the great fortunes of to-day will have changed hands and been dispersed. It is urged that when any great fortune has been accumulated at the expense of others, the only logical disposition must be such as would make restitution.

These are problems for philosophers rather than philanthropists to decide. Men cannot be made moral by statute, but the opportunities for wrong doing can be lessened. In God's own good time the question of worldly riches will be righteously adjusted. The sheer love of gain, the spirit of conquest, the desire for the power that comes through affluence; the fierce joy of the battle of business—these have become with many an obsession and the race for wealth a national madness. By and by, as civilization broadens and better light comes, men may see that their talents were not given for the purpose of raking together a pile of straw, like the sad and melancholy figure in Bunyan's allegory, who was so absorbed in his task of accumulation that he could not look up to see the Shining One above him, holding out the priceless crown which he could have had for the taking. What a glorious and welcome change it would be if, even now, men would let the straws and the rubbish go and gladly reach out to grasp the eternal riches!

Tell the Truth

NEWSPAPER readers have been frequently horrified during recent weeks by the news of fresh discoveries of perjury in the events leading to the retrial of two prominent murder cases. One cannot read these accounts without being appalled at the ease with which some men and women will lie, even under oath. It makes the search for justice almost hopeless to have the way blocked by such a tangle of lies, contradictions, fresh confessions, and further lies.

There is urgent need for some new kind of insistent exhortation to tell the truth. A child ought to be brought up to shrink from lying as he shrinks from death. There ought to be a horror at any sort of deception or evasion, or anything that will, even by silence itself, mislead another. New laws are, indeed, being made and enforced, compelling manufacturers and merchants to tell the truth in advertising their wares. New laws are needed to compel newspapers to tell the truth even in cases that could not be covered by suits for libel. It is the newspaper man's business as well as the business man's obligation, to tell the truth, and a lie ought to make a man a criminal.

It has been considered a deadly insult to be called a liar. It is a worse insult, an insult to oneself and to God, to be a liar. "Buy the truth, and sell it not." Cling to it, live by it. Think it; speak it; live it. Every lie is a step on the way of death. Lies make personal, social, business, political, judicial, ecclesiastical, national life unsound and unsafe. Let us build our lives, our homes, our churches and our commonwealth upon the Truth.

A Tablet Opportunity

WE HAVE had so many requests from friends about to renew, who desire Bibleland tablets, but who do not feel able to secure two new subscriptions, that we are constrained to modify our offer so that every one who is about to renew may be enabled to secure one of these remarkable tablets.

As we fully anticipated, the tablets have awakened tremendous interest. The idea of possessing something which was really used by the people in Ur of the Chaldees, in the time of Abraham, has fired the imagination of many readers, with the result that our stock of tablets cannot last very long and unless we are able to replenish it by securing more, we shall very shortly have to withdraw the offer. In the meantime, however, we desire to give every one an equal chance as long as the tablets last.

It should be very easy for any of our subscribers to secure at least one new subscription, besides his own, at our special price of $2.25 for the two yearly subscriptions. This includes the tablet, of course, which we will send to the one securing and forwarding the subscriptions. This is a most liberal reduction, which should make it very attractive for those who desire to renew at a reduced rate at the present time.

If you desire to renew and wish to take advantage of this special offer and will do so at once, remitting $2.25 for the two yearly subscriptions, we will send you, as a reward for your effort, one of the Bibleland tablets, FREE OF ALL CHARGE.

Kolehmainen Wins Marathon Race

AT THE crack of a pistol in the hands of Police Commissioner Woods, nearly two thousand well-trained runners started at Jerome Avenue and 184th Street, New York, on the afternoon of May 2, beginning the thirteen-mile Marathon. Hannes Kolehmainen, the great Finnish long-distance runner, repeated his victory of last year in 1 hour 9 minutes and 1-5 of a second. Gaston Strobino, an Italian, finished next, in 1 hour, 11 minutes and 28 seconds. Harry J. Smith, a member of the Bronx Church House, and Villie Kyronen were third and fourth. The course this year was 13 miles and 200 yards. Last year's course was 12⅜ miles. Kolehmainen covered the shorter distance last year in 1 hour 5 minutes 15 3-5 seconds. It is thought that nearly a million spectators lined both sides of the streets along the course. This was one of the most wonderful athletic events in the history of the world. It is claimed that more people witnessed it than saw the Marathon at the Olympic games at Athens, Paris or Stockholm. The winner goes to Europe to enter great contests and seek coveted prizes. In this race one man among the two thousand who entered the contest won; the rest lost. In the race we make with Satan on the road of life we may all win. This fact is thus taught:

Know ye not that they which run in a race run all, but one receiveth the prize? So run, that ye may obtain. (I Cor. 9: 24.)

Rescues Three Men

A CABLE from Para, Brazil, brings the news of the rescue of three men at the risk of his own life by Colonel Roosevelt, on his canoe trip down the Duvida River. At one cascade a canoe in which were three of the party was about to capsize. The colonel plunged into the river from his own canoe, seized the endangered canoe and, although he was dragged along by it, clung to it and prevented it and the three men in it from going over the falls of the rapids to death. Colonel Roosevelt's foot was cut, and the wound, which became infected, still bothers him. Brave as a lion and strong as an ox, he did not hesitate to risk his own life to save his imperiled companions. During his long journey through the Brazilian wilderness, Colonel Roosevelt made many interesting discoveries, one of the most important being a "find" which will put the colonel's name on the record of distinguished explorers, and put a hitherto unknown thousand-mile-long river on the map. This mysterious river rose in a high upland in Matto Grosso, and the explorer, having taken all the necessary geometrical observations, gives its exact location, north of the 13th parallel of latitude and between longitude 59 and 60 west of Greenwich. It is a stream as large in volume as the Hudson or the Rhine and full of curvings and waterfalls and dangerous rapids. He found it impracticable for continuous navigation. The river of time is full of rapids and dangerous falls, and it is a beautiful picture to see the men of to-day, as well as the women, rescuing those who are being swept on to their death. The South American incident and the modern Men's Movement in the church are in obedience to the command of the apostle:

Quit you like men, be strong. (I Cor. 16: 13.)

Kentucky's Sunday School Day

SUNDAY, May 3, was set apart as Go-to-Sunday-School Day in Kentucky by the official proclamation of the governor of the State. Its general observance not only by the Sunday school and church people, but also by good citizens of all religious denominations and political beliefs, was a matter of congratulation and gratitude among the Lord's children. It is thought that a million people attended the Sunday schools of the State on that day. In his proclamation Governor McCreary said: "The supreme need in our State to-day is that the forces which make for character and Christianity shall control the forces which make for intelligence and patriotism. One of the forces that make for character and Christianity is the Sunday school." President Wilson sent to the people of the State, through his private secretary, the message: "No study is more important to the child than the study of the Bible and of the truths which it teaches, and there is not a more effective agency for such study than the Sunday school. It certainly is one of the greatest factors of our lives in the building of character and the development of moral fibre." How beautiful and important these wholesome truths sent by the President and governor to the people of Kentucky and the whole country! The hope of the nation is its sanctified youth. They will solve perplexing problems and perpetuate the commonwealth. Moses thus commands the communication of God's words to the children:

And ye shall teach them to your children, speaking of them when thou sittest in thine house, and when thou walkest by the way, when thou liest down, and when thou risest up. (Deut. 11: 19.)

THE FEARFUL COAL MINE TRAGEDY

SUCCESSIVE explosions in shafts 5 and 6 of the New River Collieries Company at Eccles, W. Va., produced a fearful harvest of death. At least 175 men perished, most of them being Americans. Those who were not killed with the concussion were poisoned with the gases, and possibly a few wounded were drowned in the waters that flooded the mine. Most of those in Shaft No. 6 were rescued. Thirty-seven of them owe their escape to a boy hero, Davy Buckhannon, a trapper, who heard the explosion in No. 5 and, knowing that the deadly afterdamp would soon sweep the workings of No. 6, gave the alarm. Without thinking of himself and not knowing how soon the dust of No. 6 would let go, he ran along the gallery, shouting a warning everywhere. The fire boss quickly gathered the men in an underground storehouse, and had them build a wall about themselves. After three hours' imprisonment, they were rescued. But the worst fears for the poor men in Shaft No. 5 were realized. Not one is reported to have come out alive. Science has done much, but it must do much more to safeguard human life, remembering its value, thus expressed: "All that a man hath will he give for his life." (Job 2: 4.)

Suppressing North African Slavery

SLAVERY is practically abolished in every civilized nation on the earth. There are some relics of it yet in certain colonies, which the home governments are striving earnestly to sweep away. It is reported that the French colonial office has at last succeeded in abolishing the slave markets of Morocco. A Paris paper charges that 3,000 slaves are imported into Morocco every year. Recently, Premier Asquith of England received a memorial signed by such names as Lord Cromer, Lord Curzon and Mr. Bryce, asking for some government action to suppress this traffic, which is conducted over boundaries controlled by England. Nowhere has our modern civilization or our modern Christianity more powerfully manifested itself than in the destruction of physical slavery, and the guarantee of intellectual, political, moral and religious liberty. God abolished the slavery of Egypt many centuries ago when he took his people from the bondage of Pharaoh.

And the Lord spake unto Moses and unto Aaron, and gave them a charge unto the children of Israel, and unto Pharaoh, king of Egypt, to bring the children of Israel out of the land of Egypt. (Ex. 6: 13.)

Taller Than Eiffel Tower

IN THE presence of members of the International Commission on Wireless Telegraphy recently there was erected close to the royal residence at Laeken, Belgium, the first metal section of a huge tower intended to facilitate international scientific study of atmospheric and electrical phenomena. When completed, it will be in the shape of a pylon about 1,082 feet high, being 108 feet higher than the famous Eiffel Tower. The mastery of the air, in compelling it to convey messages without wires, over seas and continents, and to open a path in its blue for the navigation of ships with wings, is one of the wonders of the modern world. This tall tower reminds us of one undertaken of which there is this mention made:

And they said, Go to, let us build us a city and a tower, whose top may reach unto heaven. (Gen. 11: 4.)

Life Term for Kidnapping

W. C. WALTERS was convicted on the charge of kidnapping the son of C. P. Dunbar, in the court at Opelousas, La., the other day. The jury brought in a verdict of guilty, without capital punishment. Under the law, Walters will receive a prison sentence for life, unless successful in the appeal which his attorneys are striving to secure. Kidnapping is one of the blackest crimes. How many deaths the Ross family must have endured, and all without hope, when their darling boy was stolen? Imprisonment for life is not too severe for the person who will steal a child for a ransom. Boys and girls, young men and women in great numbers, are being kidnapped in the moral and spiritual realm by the fiends that lie in wait for them. They are on the avenues of wealth and in the alleys of poverty; they are on the village street and country road, in the drinking places, the gambling hells, and other haunts of vice and crime. Has the church an ear quick enough to hear the cry of these lost young souls, and the agonizing wail of homes bereft of them? Has the church feet swift enough to run and save them? May God give his children a fresh baptism of sympathy and service for such,

That they may recover themselves out of the snare of the devil, who are taken captive by him at his will. (II Tim. 2: 26.)

Armenian Gives Missions $75,000

AT THE twenty-sixth annual meeting of the Manhattan district of the Woman's Congregational Board of Missions, held the other day in Jamaica, Long Island, Rev. M. G. Papazian announced that a wealthy Armenian layman of his congregation had just presented $75,000 to the Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions. The money is to be used in Christian educational work in Armenia. Mr. Papazian explained how his liberal parishioner came to this country a poor boy twenty years ago, and had become wealthy. Realizing what Christianity had done for him in his struggle upward he determined to help as many others of his countrymen as possible into the same life of happiness and usefulness he enjoyed. This is a beautiful example of earthly success in gaining money, and of the greater spiritual success of devoting a portion of it to the salvation of men. He saw the vision and heard the divine call:

Come over into Macedonia, and help us. (Acts 16: 9.)

GOOD INTENTIONS

BY MARGARET E. SANGSTER, JR.

A FEW Sundays ago I went to evening service in a large, luxurious and softly-lighted church. As I sat in a velvet-cushioned pew I heard a dignified, eloquent man preach a very wonderful sermon. I was breathless, almost, until the end, and then I heard him speak of a boy who had strayed away from the narrow path. "He meant well," said the minister fiercely. "He meant well! He kept saying that he was going to reform, that his intentions were good—but hell is paved with good intentions!"

Abruptly, startlingly, his sermon came to an end, and I went out into the darkness of the night—wondering.

I have heard the old proverb a great many times: "Hell is paved with good intentions," and each time something surges up in my heart that says: "It is not true! It can't be true!" For I think that somewhere up on high there is an angel who sits, judgment book in hand, and writes down every good intention in letters of gold.

I knew a woman who had only one son—a son who was the veritable apple of her eye. She idolized everything he did, from his first lisping sentence to his graduating essay. Somehow, this boy, with every chance, every advantage in the world, met a wild class of young men and fell into evil ways. The little mother, who was suffering from an incurable disease, did not know that her son was doing wrong, until one evening he arrived at the house intoxicated. After that she grew rapidly worse, and one night he came home from a party and found her dying. Weak and trembling with remorse, he knelt at her bedside, and she stroked his short, curly hair.

"My boy," she said, "I am dying. I want you to tell me, now, that you will stop drinking."

"I will," said the boy with a sob, and he kissed her slender hand reverently. A few hours later she passed away.

Now, this youth had the best intentions in the world. He read his Bible, he prayed, and he kept away from his old haunts. But finally the lure of the evil life got him again. One night he met some friends who persuaded him to come to a quiet little supper, and before he knew it he was back where he had started from. It was cowardly, contemptible, mean, to break his word, particularly his sacred promise to his mother. There was no excuse for him, and I am offering none. But—his mother died with a smile on her face and peace in her heart, because his intentions were good. Perhaps there is one mark against his name that is a little lighter—a little less gloomy on that account.

Did you ever know any one who was contrarily saying the wrong thing to you—who had an unhappy faculty for being tactless—and did you ever say of her in excuse: "Well, she meant well"? It is, conchos, ever so much easier to forgive an interference when you know that, after all, there is a kind heart behind the action.

While I was in school, I happened to know a very irresponsible girl. She was always the first to grasp eagerly at an excuse for some escapade—always the one who led in cutting classes, going to parties, and refusing to study. One day our favorite teacher called her to task.

"Elizabeth," she said sternly, "you are coming to this school and getting absolutely nothing out of it. You idle away your time and you joke in classes and never study. You don't want us to be ashamed of you, do you, dear?"

"No." Elizabeth was nearly crying. "I don't!"

"Well," the teacher went on firmly, "I want you to promise me that you will be better. Won't you try?"

Impulsively, Elizabeth threw her arms about her teacher.

"I'll be good," she promised affectionately, "for your sake. And she walked away—a trifle sobered.

All this time I had been a rather interested listener. Now I interposed.

"Will she be better?" I asked. "Does she really mean everything that she says?"

The teacher sighed.

"She means everything that she promises," was her halting reply. "But by to-morrow evening she will be doing the same things."

"Then she breaks her promises?" I asked again.

"Yes—and no," said the teacher. "She doesn't mean to; but she forgets. Her intentions are the best, and somehow, for that reason, I can't help being patient with her."

I was walking through a country town one hot summer day—plodding along through the thick dust of the path—when I came to a stretch of road that was smooth and hard and dustless—an ideal road for motoring or walking. Stooping to examine it, I saw that it was made of hard bits of rock pounded into the dust and clay of the original sod. It was very different from most of the roads in that section.

"How does it happen," I asked a man who was with me, "that this road is so good? What is it made out of?"

"I'll tell you," he said. "This road is made out of pieces of stone that were originally meant for sidewalks. The stones that were chipped and cracked and broken were crushed and sprinkled on this road. Then a steam roller was put over it and—well, you see the result. It's the best road in the county!"

Friends of mine, I don't want you to be promise-breakers. I assuredly do want you to have good intentions, but not to break them. It is cowardly and hardly honest to yourself, as well as to others. But I want you to remember this: Good intentions, when broken, are like the cracked and fractured flagstones. They may be almost worthless, they may never be what they were intended for; yet pounded up finely and packed down with new resolutions and kept with all the determination you can summon, supplemented with divine help, which you can have if you will only ask for it, they will make a road that is smooth and firm and wonderful—the road to heaven.

LLOYD-GEORGE AND THE TAXES

MR. LLOYD-GEORGE, chancellor of the British exchequer, in introducing the national budget in the House of Commons on May 4, gave further evidences of his determination to shift the burden of the nation's taxes from the shoulders of the poor to those better able to bear it. To provide for a deficit and for necessary increases in government expenditures amounting together to $49,000,000 the tax is increased upon incomes above $5,000, and a supertax is levied on incomes of $15,000 and upward, instead of upon $25,000 and upward as at present. Other changes are suggested and the Daily News, commenting upon the whole plan, says: "We believe it will be found a great instrument of national justice."

James Creelman, describing his recent remarkable interview with the chancellor for the New York Evening Mail, shows by the figures subscribed in Great Britain for government and private securities that the prosperity of the country has waxed rather than waned during the four years since Mr. Lloyd-George put through his famous bill providing for compulsory insurance, income tax and other measures.

Mr. Creelman quotes further the following utterances of this courageous and far-seeing statesman:

"We propose a scheme which we think squares with the highest principles of equity. We want to put an end to the old order of things—slums and workhouses, sweating, unemployment, hunger, undeserved wretchedness, and poverty caused not by the man himself, but by the mismanagement of things generally.

"You waste and you want, but the waste belongs to one set of persons and the want is endured by the other. The state has been like a bad housekeeper—slovenly, a slattern, extravagant, mismanaging things—some children wasting the substance and others crying for bread. That is the old order of things which, please God, is passing away.

"As to slums, you will have no more of those pest-houses and plague-pits to poison the lives of the people. Honest labor will be requited with plenty, comfort, and leisure. Instead of workmen seeking labor with heavy hearts, you will have work seeking workmen.

"The children—the children will be the wards of the state, and the aged and infirm will be its honored guests. The sick workman will be cared for by the community, for the nation will be one family, and its might and its majesty will not rest in camps and great engines of war, but in the homes of its people. And because we know that in order to lay well and truly the foundations of that new order of things you must root every privilege and monopoly out of the soil—that is why the government is placing before you these proposals for a land reform."

TAPS SOUND FOR GENERAL SICKLES

THE death of Major-General Daniel E. Sickles on Sunday, May 3, removed one of the picturesque figures of our national life. General Sickles was in his ninety-first year, and had been ill but a short time.

This famous hero of the Civil War began his military career with the National Guard, New York State, in 1849. Subsequently General Sickles represented this government as secretary of legation in London, and later became a State senator and then a congressman. While living in Washington the young major met and married Miss Therese Bagoli, the seventeen-year-old daughter of an Italian music teacher. Later, while Major Sickles was abroad and his wife in Washington, a son of the author of "The Star-Spangled Banner" became attentive to Mrs. Sickles, and was shot and killed on February 27, 1859, by the enraged husband, who was afterward acquitted. The reconciliation of Major Sickles to his wife was considered a chivalrous act.

MAJOR-GENERAL DANIEL EDGAR SICKLES

Major Sickles was among the first to offer his services to President Lincoln at the outbreak of the Civil War. He organized the Excelsior Brigade of Volunteers of New York, and became colonel of one of its regiments. He served before Richmond, at Antietam, at Fredericksburg, at Chancellorsville, for which latter service he was highly commended for gallant conduct, and at Gettysburg, where a leg was shot off, and where, in the opinion of many historians, he saved the day by his genius. He there commanded the Third Army Corps. He was brevetted a major-general of the regular army in March, 1865, for his services on that day, which also won him his fame.

After the close of the war General Sickles served in several important national capacities. While minister to Spain in 1871 he married the daughter of a Spanish councilor of state, Chevalier de Creagh, Señorita Carmina de Creagh, who had been brought up at court. A son and daughter were born. This romance had a most painful ending. When the general returned to America, his wife refused to accompany him, but later rejoined her husband only to return to Madrid, and for twenty-nine years the couple have been estranged. Mrs. Sickles returned to New York in 1908, and has ever since lived near the general's residence at 23 Fifth Avenue.

Misfortunes attended his last years. At a moment of great financial stress his wife came to his rescue, but without breaking down the barrier between them. When General Sickles was attacked by his fatal illness, however, Mrs. Sickles and their son, Stanton Sickles, were reconciled to the old war hero and remained in attendance upon him to the end. His name will ever be associated with the triumphant outcome of the Civil War.

Hygeia
Nursing Bottle

Next best to mother's nursing, baby takes naturally to the Hygeia Nursing Bottle. The broad yielding Hygeia Breast, with its "hidden shield" that renders it uncollapsible, is the modern, natural and scientific nurser.

The Hygeia bottle, or, more correctly, cell, is a wide-mouthed, easily cleaned glass receptacle, made in 8-oz. and 10-oz. sizes. Hygeia Nursers are sold by good druggists and by us direct for 35c postpaid wherever no dealer can supply.

NOR Is Excellence Confined to Any One Feature of the Lozier Light Four $2100

IF YOU WOULD determine, to your own satisfaction, wherein lies the excellence in this latest Lozier, we'd say to you, "Look for it where it has always been found in Lozier cars—everywhere. In each individual part—and in ensemble."

LOZIER QUALITY means uniform excellence—not goodness in spots.

SO BEGIN WITH THE RADIATOR CAP—and continue to the rear axle; and back of that to the gasoline tank and the tire holder. And on the way omit no detail—for none may be slighted or skimped and yet produce a good car—a Lozier car.

THAT'S THE LOZIER IDEA, and if, in buying, you adopt it as your own, you will succeed where so many buyers fail—in getting a car that will afford you 100 per cent. satisfaction.

WHEN YOU HAVE EXAMINED this latest Lozier minutely—more minutely than we have been able to describe here—take your notes along and compare other cars point to point with this $2,100 car.

YOU WON'T FIND ANY that will compare in excellence of detail and in general excellence, with this car—not at less than $3,000.

Hawaiian Pineapple

is very different from other pineapple—in its beautiful golden color, in texture, in flavor, in ripeness, in digestive and tonic properties.

Pineapples fully ripened on the plant contain over ten per cent. of pure sugar. Most of this is absorbed by the fruit during the final days of ripening and gives a flavor and tone to the fruit that green cut pineapple ripened in the vessel hold, the refrigerator car and the storehouse can never get.

Hawaiian Pineapple is better than other pineapple because it is of the Smooth Cayenne variety, "the garden pine," grown extra big, yellow, tender and luscious, in a sub-tropical climate, in a soil which exactly suits it, and especially because it is picked and properly canned in pure cane sugar syrup on the very day it reaches perfection.

Sponge Pineapple Pudding

Hawaiian Pineapple is a delicious dessert for early summer days, simply cooled and served as when makes tempting ices, sherbets and fruit drinks or as a most highly satisfactory basis of many fine salads, purees and puddings suitable for the finest table of the entertaining. All are described in our free booklet

OBEDIENCE AND GRATITUDE*

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON BY DR. AND MRS. WILBUR F. CRAFTS

THE writers of this lesson saw a mile of lepers on an Easter Sunday, sitting in the dust along the roadside leading to Mount Olivet. The sight of them and the sound of their voices can never be effaced from our memory.

It is quite probable that among the many blessings which we count in this favored land of ours, we have failed to thank God that there is so little leprosy within our borders. The United States Public Health Service reported in 1911 having found 278 lepers; of these 145 were foreign born and 13 were of unknown nativity. By contrast we are told by the Mission to Lepers that a conservative estimate places the number of lepers in India at 250,000, and that Japan has at least 30,000 leprous families; that China, Korea and Siam are seriously affected with this terrible scourge. Dr. Jewell says: "The disease is incurable by any means at present known." But Jesus Christ cured leprosy. He cured it simply by his touch (Matt. 8: 1-3; Mark 1: 40-45; Luke 5: 13-15). He cured simply by his word of power (Luke 17: 11-19). And when Jesus sent out his disciples two by two he gave them power to heal lepers (Matt. 10: 5-8).

The Mission to Lepers is now supporting or in some form helping 11,200 lepers and their children. This work was reported at the World's Sunday School Convention at Zürich in July, 1913, when it was stated: "The readiness with which these stricken people respond to the 'Christ treatment,' as it has well been called, is evident from the fact that there are to-day in connection with the society's stations 3,940 Christian converts, all of them, it should be remembered, coming into our asylums without hope, and often degraded and ignorant heathen." There are about 3,000 scholars in leper Sunday schools connected with the mission. It is the custom in India to have examinations of the 500,000 Sunday school scholars once a year. We were told at the Zürich convention that one leper boy received the highest marks for his examination of any Sunday school scholar in India. And so lepers have noble souls even if they have terribly sick bodies, and it certainly appears that it is our privilege and our duty to do something for them: to pray for them and to send gifts of money for their relief and uplift.

One of the ten lepers whom Jesus healed all at once by the word of his power was thankful. The whole ten had called out to Jesus from the tombs and the rocks where they were in exile: "Jesus, Master, have mercy on us!" as he was passing through the land to Jerusalem. "Go and show yourselves unto the priests," he had replied. They knew well the import of his words: that when they should stand in the presence of the priests they would have no more leprosy. They believed the words of Jesus, and started on their way—nine of them to go to the Hebrew priests in Jerusalem, and one to the high priest in Samaria, for he was a Samaritan. "As they went, they were cleansed" made well. The Samaritan when he felt the thrill of health in his body, felt also the thrill of gratitude in his soul. He turned back, singing a loud song of praise, glorifying God, and when he reached again the place where Jesus was, he fell at his feet and gave him thanks. The nine Hebrew lepers and the one Samaritan leper came at length to their respective priests, and received from them the seal that their leprosy was healed.

Obedience and gratitude, twin stars, may shine in every human breast. Only one—obedience—beamed in the nine others, but both shone in the heart of the Samaritan leper.

We are not all lepers, but we are all sinners and in need of cleansing. The great question is, "How shall we be cleansed?" The answer echoes back to our waiting hearts, "As they went, they were cleansed." Many things about the way of obedience are hard to be understood when studied before we reach them, but as we go we shall learn that faithful living is the shortest and surest way to full believing. We can easily imagine the ten lepers saying to Jesus when he had bidden them "go to the priests": "The priests have just sent us forth with orders never to come into their presence again unless perchance we should recover, but we dare not return until you heal us." But they said nothing: they simply obeyed, and "as they went, they were cleansed."

Let us take courage, and whatever doubts, dangers, or anxieties seem to pursue or await us in the path of duty, let us be assured that we have only to obey God's commands, and the way shall constantly be made clear before us. George Macdonald has said: "If we obey God, we shall come to love him and trust him; and there is no other way to get faith in God and love for God than by obeying him." Let us obey our heavenly Father as good children obey their earthly father. A railroad man in Prussia was holding on to a switch with both hands, as was necessary in order to keep the switch in proper position for an approaching express train, when he saw his five-year-old boy walking up the track toward the locomotive. The switchman knew that if he should let the switch go, it would mean destruction to the train, so he shouted to his boy "Lie down!" The lad obeyed at once; the train passed over him, and he was not hurt in the least. That is the kind of obedience we must yield to our Father in heaven if we would be safe. Job, in the midst of fiery trials, exclaimed: "Though he slay me, yet will I trust him" (Job 13: 15).

Trust and obey, for there's no other way.

Then go heart-forward, bearing the banner of obedience.

But the star of gratitude did not shine in the hearts of the nine lepers, and so they missed half of the sweetness of being healed. How joyful was the way of the man who returned to thank Jesus for the healing he had received! There was no detention for the turning back, for his step was afterward more buoyant and quick, strengthened by love and happiness.

Listen to the story, told by Ian Maclaren, of a little blind girl in whose heart the star of gratitude was brightly shining:

"'If I dinna see'—and she spoke as if this were a matter of doubt and she were making a concession for argument's sake—'there's naebody in the Glen can hear like me. There's no a footstep of a Drumtochty man comes to the door but I ken his name, and there's no voice oot on the road that I canna tell. The birds sing sweeter to me than to onybody else, and I can hear them cheeping to one another in the bushes before they go to sleep. And the flowers smell sweeter to me—the roses and the carnations and the bonny moss-rose—and I judge that the oat-cake and milk taste the richer because I dinna see them. Na, na, ye're no to think that I've been ill-treated by my God, for if he didna give me ae thing, he gave me mony (many).

"'And mind ye, it's no as if I'd seen once and lost my sight; that micht ha' been a trial, and my faith micht ha' failed. I've lost naething; my life has been all getting.'"

An incident in the life of Florence Nightingale, the world-famed English army nurse, discloses a gleam from the star of gratitude shining upon a human friend. A Highland soldier was about to undergo an amputation. Miss Nightingale asked that the operation might be delayed, as she thought careful nursing might render it unnecessary. Through her unremitting care the man's arm was saved; and when asked what he felt toward his preserver, he said that "the only mode he had of giving vent to his feelings was to kiss her shadow when it fell on his pillow as she passed through the wards on her nightly rounds."

Should we not love to honor the very name of Jesus as we remember that he is faithful and just to forgive us our sins and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness? (I John 1: 9.) He cleansed lepers, he cleansed sinners and is still cleansing them. Have you cried out, "Master, have mercy on us," as did the lepers? Will you be as obedient as they were? Will you be as grateful as the Samaritan leper?

We are told that a missionary in India had rendered some kindly attentions to a sick and dying Hindu woman. Seeking in some way to express her gratitude, the poor woman said: "I am soon to die, and I hope that I may be so favored that I shall be born again as a dog, that I may come back and follow you." Poor soul, how dimmed was the star of gratitude shining in her! How she needed the heavenly atmosphere of the Lord Jesus Christ! The poet Lillo writes:

When gratitude o'erflows the swelling heart,
And breathes in free and uncorrupted praise
For benefits received, propitious heaven
Takes such acknowledgment as fragrant incense
And doubles all its blessings.

WHEN THE BIRDS COME BACK

WHEN the birds come back in springtime, wheeling up the southward way,
Like stray, floating clouds of music on the silence dull and gray,
Glint of blue and green and crimson, throats a-quiver, wings a-whirr,
'Tis as if the dead world wakened to the homing soul of her.
And I run and shout a welcome, where they weave their airy track.
It is good to live in springtime when the birds come back.

Cavaliers of field and forest, exiles on an alien shore,
Dead the bitter Roundhead Winter, you bring home the prince once more;
Lilac buds his cloak of purple, orchard-blooms his banner gay,
Hail, all hail the Lord Triumphant, laughing Chevalier of May!
And you, heralds of his coming, speeding on to clear his track,
Love and largesse be your portion; O my birds, come back!

Minstrels of the bright wild places, gleemen of the vale and hill,
You have taught us joy of living, joy of giving teach us still!
Almoners of love unstinted, fairy ships on airy seas,
Voice of tree and grass and blossom, bid us to be glad with these.
And if this alone our fortune, surely we shall know no lack,
But be happiest of the happy when the birds come back.

Maysville, Ky. ELEANOR DUNCAN WOOD.

ANSWERED PRAYERS

A SISTER, N. S., writes to acknowledge that prayer has been answered for the conversion of her brother. Mrs. R. E. McN. writes from Dayton, Ohio, to say that 1,500 persons professed conversion during the revival campaign for which special prayer was asked. She asks the Prayer League to continue to pray for three men who were not, so far as she knows, converted during the meetings.

Mrs. L. H. S. of Shavertown, N. Y., writes: "My request of a few weeks ago for prayer has been answered. A loved one is healed of a serious affliction. Also we were successful in raising a heavy debt from our little church, for all of which I desire to praise the Lord." Mrs. S. E. V. writes from Morris Plains, N. J.: "Some time since I asked prayer that I might not lose a sum of money due me, if it were God's will. The case seemed well-nigh hopeless, but he has answered prayer, and I am now receiving the money by weekly payments."

Acknowledgments of answers to prayers have also been received from:

Mrs. H. L., Millersfon, Pa.; Mrs. A. S. H., Gardener, Me.; A Reader, Norway, Mich.; Mrs. J. J. McC., West Berkshire, Vt.; H. B., Parsons, Pa.; Miss E. P., Rolla, Mo.

It is necessary to remind our readers again of some of the requirements of the correspondence for the Prayer League. The full name and address should be sent with every letter; every letter should be as brief as possible and should be addressed directly to the Prayer League, not included with a communication to any other department of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD; requests and acknowledgments should be written on separate sheets of paper and each sheet should be written on one side only. Thought and care in these matters will greatly help.

Requests for Prayer

I. T. requests prayer for revival in a church at Lawrenceburg, Ind.; M. E. B. for the upbuilding of a church in Withee, Wis.; M. H., for a revival at Booth, Ark.; Mrs. E. E., for a revival at Marble Hill, Mo.; Miss R. F., for a revival in the community of Saidora, Ill.

The following friends ask prayer for a deeper work of grace, for the assurance of sins forgiven, or express in other ways their desire for personal spiritual blessing:

A. B. B.; Mrs. R. S. (to be fully restored to the joys of salvation); S. E. Z. (to be filled with the Holy Spirit); Mrs. W. H. P.; Miss R. F.; Mrs. M. M. S.; Mrs. J. E. T.; M. E. B.; Mrs. M. J. P.; Mrs. L. P.; Mrs. M. G.; M. H.; Miss R. B.

A friend in Winona, Wis., requests prayer for his daughter, Louise Webster, who suffered a stroke of paralysis two years ago, and has not walked since. Her father writes urgently, asking the members of the Prayer League to pray for her by name. Another sad letter comes from a wife whose husband left her years ago, leaving her the care of their three children. Through severe trials and struggles she kept the home together until now the children can care for themselves. They are now married and the mother, not wishing to be a burden to them, asks prayers for guidance and help as she goes to begin life again in a strange community. The other side of a similar story comes from a father who through dissipation became separated from his wife and their seven children fifteen years ago. One of the children is now a missionary. The husband has been converted and is praying that his wife may consent to their reunion.

A "broken-hearted mother" asks prayers that her daughter may be delivered from a drug habit. Another very sad letter comes from a reader who is estranged from a friend. Another member of the Prayer League asks prayer for this same reader and for another friend who is bearing a great burden. Mrs. M. S. M. asks prayer that a young lady who is tempted to worldliness may be brought back to the spiritual life before her approaching marriage takes place.

The following friends ask prayer for themselves or friends for restoration of sight or that threatened blindness may be averted:

Mrs. C. H.; Miss C. A.; Mrs. H.; Mrs. J. A. D.; H. E. A.; Mrs. J. E. T.

The following persons request prayer for the conversion of sons:

L. T.; Mrs. W. D.; E. J. C.; S. W.; A Reader, Draper, Va.; Mrs. E. S. T.; Mrs. R. S.; Mrs. G. B. M.; Mrs. A. A. D.; Mrs. M. G.

The following request prayer for the conversion of husbands:

L. T.; Mrs. M. S.; Mrs. A. A. K.; Mrs. R. S. (that husband may be fully converted); Mrs. W. H. P.; Mrs. G. B.; Mrs. E. A. B.

The following request prayer for the conversion of other relatives and friends:

Mrs. M. S.; Mrs. C. H.; E. J. C.; Miss N. D.; Miss C. McC.; Mrs. S. B. H.; Miss S. W.; A. B. B.; H. E. A.; J. S. R.; Mrs. W. H. P.; Mrs. G. B. M.; Miss A. F.; Mrs. E. R. R.; Mrs. M. J. P.; Mrs. L. P.; Mrs. M. G.; Mrs. A. C. C.; Mrs. C. E. C.; A. B. D.

For Healing

The following friends request prayer for healing for themselves or friends:

Mrs. L.; Mrs. E. H.; Mrs. C. E. G.; A. M. C.; Mrs. L. A. B.; Mrs. L. M. L.; Mrs. P. G. C.; Mrs. E. E. T.; Mrs. L. A. P.; Mrs. E. A. Z.; M. E. N.; Mrs. M. C.; M. E. D.; Mrs. E. W. S.; Mrs. M. J. H.; E. S.; Mrs. F. L. R.; Mrs. A. J. L.; Mrs. G. R.; Mrs. L. B. H.; Mrs. A. M. D.; A. K. S.; D. E. S.; Mrs. F. E. W.; Mrs. A. E. R.; M. E. J.; Mrs. S. M. H.; M. A. G.; A. B. G.; Mrs. N. E. F.; A. O. J.; A Reader, South Boston, Va.; Mrs. E. A.; G. A. DeF.; Miss L. B. N.; I. H. F.; M. E. F.; S. S. I.; G. R. J.; Mrs. H. L.; Mrs. W. McC.; Miss R. P. P.; M. & M. L.; Mrs. H. A. W.; M. F. A. K.; M. B. W.; Miss E. P. (that a friend may be healed from epilepsy); Mrs. C. B. J.; C. S. C.; Mrs. J. R.; Mrs. M. M. S.

Other Requests

The following friends request prayer for varied desires and needs:

E. B. (that son may yield to the call to preach the Gospel); S. B.; E. G. S.; E. McC.; E. P. M.; Mrs. P. M. H.; Mrs. W. F.; Mrs. R. B.; G. M.; Mrs. H. McK.; E. J. G.; A Reader, Germantown, Pa.; Mrs. L. W.; Mrs. S. Van V.; Mrs. A. N. S.; Mrs. A. J.; N. H.; A. H. (that peace may be restored between two brothers, also that a great burden be lifted).

LIVING ADVERTISEMENT

Glow of Health Speaks for Postum.

It requires no scientific training to discover whether coffee disagrees or not.

Simply stop it for a time and use Postum in place of it, then note the beneficial effects. The truth will appear.

"Six years ago I was in a very bad condition," writes a Tenn. lady. "I suffered from indigestion, nervousness and insomnia.

"I was then an inveterate coffee drinker, but it was long before I could be persuaded that it was coffee that hurt me. Finally I decided to leave it off a few days and find out the truth.

"The first morning I left off coffee I had a raging headache, so I decided I must have something to take the place of coffee" (The headache was caused by the reaction of the coffee drug—caffeine.)

"Having heard of Postum through a friend who used it, I bought a package and tried it. I did not like it at first, but after I learned how to make it right, according to directions on pkg., I would not change back to coffee for anything.

"When I began to use Postum I weighed only 117 lbs. Now I weigh 170 and as I have not taken any tonic in that time I can only attribute my present good health to the use of Postum in place of coffee.

"My husband says I am a living advertisement for Postum."

Name given by the Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

Postum now comes in two forms:

Regular Postum—must be well boiled. 15c and 25c packages.

Instant Postum—is a soluble powder. A teaspoonful dissolves quickly in a cup of hot water and, with cream and sugar, makes a delicious beverage instantly. 30c and 50c tins.

The cost per cup of both kinds is about the same.

There's a Reason" for Postum.

A LITTLE ANGEL OF THE MOUNTAINS

"Why did you shoot the woman?" thundered Parson Bill suddenly.

"She was a-comin' at me, yellin' like mad an' brandishin' a we'pon," admitted the man, driven to the wall.

"What sort of a weapon?"

"I think it was an ax, an' if I hadn't shot her she'd 'a' cut me down."

"Please, sir," broke out a very small, quavering voice at this juncture, "she didn't have any ax at all."

"Jumpin' Jehosaphat!" cried the court in great astonishment, in which everybody shared. "Who've we got 'ere?"

He actually rose and fixed his glance on a very small, blond-haired boy who, very much abashed, had suddenly appeared in the room.

"If you please, sir," repeated the boy, forcing his way through the men, "I was there."

"What!" roared Dead Shot Jackson in great astonishment, with a menacing gesture, taking a step in the boy's direction.

But there were plenty of men to interpose. A boy was a boy, they had not seen one for a long time, and there was something attractive about the lad standing in the middle of the court room. The desperado's advance was at once stopped by the bystanders.

"Your honor, I can explain," said Parson Bill quietly, although he was almost as much surprised as any one. "This lad came up the trail to my shack this morning. He said he had been traveling up the cañon all night, that he had been lost from an overland train yesterday and had strayed up this way. I fed him and put him in my bunk and told him to go to sleep. I had not the least idea he knew anything about the case. It seems he was there. I do not know to what he will testify, but I now offer him as a witness."

"Come up here, sonny," said the court kindly. "Stand up on this table where all the gents kin see you. Do you know the meanin' of an oath?"

"I don't believe so, sir. Do you mean swearing? I was told not to do that."

"Who told you?"

"My mother."

"Where is your mother?"

"She died, in Norway."

"Your father?"

"He died on the ship that brought us here."

"Do you know what happens to little boys that don't tell the truth?" asked Old Four Eyes amid deep and interested silence.

"Yes, sir."

"That'll do. Go ahead with your witness, Mr. Lawyer."

"You say you were there?" began Parson Bill.

"Yes, sir."

"How did you come to be there?"

"The Indian, Yellow Feather was his name, found me on the trail. I was frightened, but he was good to me. He gave me something to eat and told me to sleep by his tent."

"And did you?"

"Yes, sir."

"Well, what next?"

"I was waked up by hearing the men yelling and shouting. I got up, and this man and the two Indians and another man were standing up quarrelling. The other man struck this Indian here and knocked him down and then he kicked him."

"Ah! Did this Indian do anything first to him?"

"No, sir."

"Did not draw any gun or make any attempt to strike either of the white men?"

"No, sir; only talked."

"Then what happened?"

"Then Yellow Feather, the old Indian, that is, shot him."

"And then?"

"This man shot Yellow Feather."

"And the squaw?"

"She came running and knelt down by her husband."

"She didn't have any ax in her hand?"

"No, sir."

"She didn't make any threatening movement?"

"No, sir."

"Well, go on, my boy; tell the court and the jury all about it."

"She took his head in her arms and cried."

"And then?"

In a stillness like death the boy turned and pointed his finger straight at the desperado, who stared like one possessed at his small but brave accuser.

"That man shot her."

"Dead?"

"Yes, sir."

"And what was the prisoner doing when his mother was shot?"

"He was lying there; he couldn't do anything. He couldn't get up. The man had kicked him so hard. And then the man there put the dead man on the horse and tied up the Indian and put him on another horse and went away."

"Why didn't you cry out?"

"I was afraid, sir. I was scared awful. I thought he'd kill me, too."

"What did you do then?"

"After I came out and rolled the woman over and looked at the man, something howled in the trees and I ran. I ran all night up the path, and in the morning I came to your house, and—that's all, sir."

Little Olaf Tryggvesson stopped amid a silence broken only by the deep breathing of excited men.

"Your honor," said Parson Bill, calmly addressing the judge, "if necessary we could adjourn the trial and send somebody down the trail to see if the dead bodies are there and so verify the testimony of this brave boy."

"'Tain't necessary," said Old Four Eyes decidedly; "I'm convinced that the boy's tellin' the hull truth."

"I have no more witnesses to offer, then," said Parson Bill, "and with the permission of the court, I will make a little argument to the jury. Without meaning to reflect unduly upon the character of Mr. Jackson, which is, of course, well known to you all," he went on with fine sarcasm, "I submit to you that in this case he has not told a straight story. He claimed that his memory was at fault at first, and when pressed declared that a very important incident had not been mentioned by him because he thought it was not material. In other words, he said he did not remember killing the squaw, and then admitted that he did it, but thought it a matter of no consequence. Both statements cannot be true. He also claimed to be in danger from her. On the other hand, we have proved by the testimony of the last witness that everything my client said in his behalf was absolutely true, and the prosecuting witness has practically admitted it. We know now that much that Mr. Jackson said was, to speak plainly, positively a lie. The influence of liquor, as we all know from experience, being bad, it appears that these two gentlemen and these two Indians got into an altercation, the two white men being the aggressors. My client did not do any shooting, according to his own story and that of the boy. Whoever else is guilty, it is plain that he is not. I move that the court instruct the jury to find a verdict of 'Not guilty' and the prisoner be discharged with the return of all that was won from him. And I think we ought to take up a collection for him as some compensation for his outraged feelings and the treatment meted out to him."

"Gentlemen of the jury," said Old Four Eyes, upon whom, as upon all present, this appeal had made a deep impression, "the cote is firmly of the opinion that Parson Bill has proved his case. There ain't no manner of doubt in my mind that the Injun an' the boy is tellin' the truth an' that Dead Shot Jackson ain't. There's been murder done, but this Injun ain't never done it. Do you wish to retire an' deliberate as to your verdick?"

What Is This Extraordinary Book?
What Is the Secret of its Success?

The New Encyclopaedia Britannica

is a book that cannot be imitated. It is the one library to which scientific men and great scholars go when they want to settle their doubts and their disputes.

And it is also the one library in which business men and farmers and mechanics and women and children can find knowledge, on any subject, in a perfectly clear, straightforward form.

And it is also a library which everyone can read with real delight, for it is written in a readable and interesting style. The Britannica itself teaches you all you need to know about any subject in order to grasp it intelligently.

There has always been something in the spirit of the book, handed down from one generation of editors to another—some splendid spirit of foresight and thoroughness and impartiality and nobility of purpose, that the imitators could never copy.

"The sum of Human Knowledge," 29 volumes, 41,000 articles, 44,000,000 words of text, printed on India paper, in No. 2 book case. Each volume one inch thick.

You Cannot Afford to Lose This Last Chance

A few days are left—and for those who do not see this notice until some time after it appears, only a few hours—before the sale closes, and the opportunity to buy the new Encyclopaedia Britannica at the lowest prices will have gone.

The Cheapest Book in the World

The 44,000,000 words of text in the Encyclopædia Britannica would, printed in ordinary fashion, take up 440 good sized volumes. If some of these 440 volumes cost $1.50, some $2.00 and some $5.00, and if they averaged $2.50 a volume, this library of 440 volumes would cost $1,100.

In buying the Britannica at the present prices, you pay only from one-tenth to one-sixth as much as you would for any sort of equivalent.

For value received, compared with price paid, the new Encyclopaedia Britannica ranks far above any other book.

THE BINDINGS

Cloth—as good as a cloth binding can be made.

THE YOUNG PEOPLE'S MEETINGS

NOTES ON THE CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR, EPWORTH LEAGUE AND BAPTIST YOUNG PEOPLE'S UNION TOPICS

Converted Purses*

IT PROBABLY happened without any special planning, but just as the time drew near for studying this Christian Endeavor topic, assigned many months ago, announcements appeared in the daily newspapers that a group of the leading missionary boards were together reporting deficits amounting to a million dollars. Some people predicted that after the whirlwind campaign of the Laymen's Missionary Movement and the Men and Religion Movement there would come something of a reaction in the giving of the churches. Evidently it has come—expected but not justified. Maybe the expectation is what brought it. We might have had more faith. The thing to do now is to begin again. We must give all we can this year, and then keep it up, giving more if we earn more, and inducing others to give.

Converted purses! The relation of money to religion has always been an important and serious matter. Our lesson title implies that it sometimes happens, or at least seems to happen, that a person's heart becomes converted while his purse remains unchanged. Of course this can never be actually so. For a chief feature of the change which takes place at conversion is that before it one wants to get and after it one wants to give.

This is a missionary lesson, so the real subject is the relation of the money we give or do not give to the conversion or non-conversion of our brothers and sisters on the other side of the world. There is something terrible about the thought that that particular dollar now in your pocket might help some soul in a distant land to find his way to the companionship of Christ. But the thought is more than terrible; it is beautiful. What more wonderful thing can be done with money than to turn it into praises to our Christ? To lead people out of the dread and despair and pain and sin of superstition, to the light and gladness and purity of Christ's salvation?

The Bible has many stern and earnest things to say about money. When rightly understood a large part of the Bible message seems devoted to the appeal that men should shift their interests from money to life. That was the argument of Jesus in the Sermon on the Mount. He said: "You are interested in what you eat. Is not the life itself which your food sustains more important than the food with which you nourish it? You are interested in what you wear. Is not the body which is clothed of greater value and more worthy of interest than the clothes you put upon it?" He came to talk to us about life, to talk to us about a plan which will prevent this life from ending at the grave and which will assure us of a body that shall be radiant and strong when all the earthly garments have returned to dust.

The Christian man should always think of money in its relation to the eternal kingdom of God. Not what can my money purchase for me here, but what can it purchase for me there. Not how fine a house can I have here, but how fine a house can I have there. Not what fine raiment can I wear here, but how may I live so that my soul shall be forever clothed in garments of beauty and power. Not only how can I find life, eternal life for myself, but what can I do to bring others to eternal life. This is the "abundant life" to which Christ came to lead us.

Conquests by the Bible†

DID you ever have a verse of Scripture come into your mind with startling suddenness, bringing you a message that you particularly needed? In some lives practically all spiritual progress is marked by such events as these, occasions when it has seemed that the voice of God himself, through the words of his written message to men, has sounded almost in the physical ears as well as in the mind, bringing a message that has remained forever afterward distinct and powerful.

Much has been said during recent years about the difficult problem as to just the quality or the extent of the Bible's inspiration. That discussion need never frighten or harm any one who has had some such definite experience as those we have been speaking about. There have been millions of people in the world who positively knew that God spoke to them in the words of his Book, and that is enough to make it totally different from every other book in the world. It is the Book of God. In it we hear his voice, through it we are led to him.

You have heard the story of how St. Augustine was led to faith in Christ by seeing a parchment manuscript and hearing a voice saying in his ear: "Take, read." He took up the parchment and found there the "wonderful words of life" which led him to Jesus. Moody used to tell of a man who was led back after long wandering just by the image of the words which had been painted above the pulpit: "God is love."

So the business of Christian conquest, the business of getting people to receive the salvation of Christ and accept his friendship, is largely the business of getting the Bible to them. It has been translated now into practically every language and dialect; it circulates by the million copies; it is bringing its light and its gladness over all the world.

Francis Asbury

IT GIVES one an uncomfortable feeling to study Asbury's life. Why did he sacrifice so much, and why do we sacrifice so little? Why was he so willing to suffer for the cause of Christ, and why are we so unwilling? Why was he so furiously eager to see souls saved, and why do we care, or seem to care, so little about it?

The picture of Francis Asbury, gentle, cultured, almost delicate, riding the wilderness of America, his horse swimming its swollen streams or sinking in its mires, in peril from the hostile Indians, suffering the torments of rheumatism and malarial fever, homeless, except as he had many homes east, west, north and south, companionless much of the time, except for the never-failing companionship of Christ, preaching the Gospel of the kingdom of God, winning souls by the thousands, building churches, directing other preachers and evangelists, laying the strong foundation of a great denomination which was destined to have much to do in molding American life and making the American nation, and was to send out its own missionaries to the end of the earth—that picture is one of the most beautiful, noble and inspiring in all history.

In 1771 at the age of twenty-two he began his work in America; in 1784 he was made bishop of the American church; he continued his mighty task till 1816, when, at the age of seventy-one, he was promoted to the army of the heavéns. Almost a half century of toil. But who can estimate its rich rewards? Shall we not determine henceforth to be more worthy of such spiritual ancestry?

POLISH CATHOLICS MAKE PROTEST

A SOUTH BEND, Ind., reader writes to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD concerning the recent disturbance in the Polish Catholic church in that city: "The church in trouble is Polish Catholic, and the laity of this church is fighting for the same principle the thirteen colonies stood for—against taxation without representation. They have no voice as to who shall or who shall not be their priest. This parish owns, clear of debt, its own property. In a large measure these people are to be pitied. Another thing they ask is for a priest who is absolutely free from any priestly order. No attention is paid to their demands.

"South Bend and Mishawaka, adjoining cities, have some distinction relative to the progress of the Roman Church. We have one Independent Hungarian Catholic Church. Not long ago, about two hundred Hungarians left the 'mother church' and united with the Episcopalian, and another large Polish Catholic church threatens to bolt and establish an independent church. Unless the Polish church now in trouble gets its demands it is probable it will bolt also.

"What does this all mean? The beginning of the end of a bulldozing and dictating priesthood. The cardinals may have their special day in Washington City, the heart of our government. The priesthood may have their day of retreats and the sisters their day of final vows, but, bless God! the laity of the great Roman Church is coming into its day of recognition and freedom! The people of the Roman Church are to-day the 'voice of one crying in the wilderness.' I have no fear for this country from the common people of this church. They want to worship, and to let worship in peace. The intrigue, if at all, is from the organized parish priesthood on up to the end."

THE South Bend, Ind., Tribune of February 15 has the following version of the trouble at St. Casimir's Church to which the foregoing letter refers: "The differences between the laymen of St. Casimir's Church and the church authorities dates back to the preparation of a petition requesting the appointment of Rev. Leon P. Szybowicz, C.S.C., as pastor of the parish, instead of the priest who was then considered for the place. The drafting of the petition was considered insubordination by those in authority and disciplinary measures were at once taken. An appeal to Bishop Alerding was answered by a statement that he would not interfere.

"An appeal was then addressed to Archbishop John Bonzano, papal delegate to the United States at Washington, by leaders of the thirty-five societies of the church. The controversy is said to have started when Rev. A. Zubowicz was transferred to the pastorate of St. Hedwige's Church. Rev. Leon P. Szybowicz, C.S.C., assistant at St. Casimir's, was the favorite of the parish. He was not appointed pastor, however, Rev. W. T. Szaleewski, C.S.C., being named. On petition of the parish, Father Szaleewski was withdrawn and Rev. Boniface Iwaszeski, C.S.C., assigned to the parish. In October, 1913, he resigned because of ill health. The parishioners immediately signed a petition asking the return of Father Szybowicz. The request was followed by the removal of the sacrament, this taking place on November 6, 1913. Since that time the societies of the church have waited upon the bishop several times, but he referred them to Very Rev. Andrew Morissey, Order of the Holy Cross."

Bible-Burning a Disgrace to Civilization

I enjoy reading your paper the best of about fifteen different papers and magazines, and I certainly believe in taking a strong stand in favor of free press and free speech. The burning of Holy Bibles and the assaulting of public speakers who are working in the light and living in the light for the sake of humanity is a disgrace to any so-called civilized nation.

"White at Last"

"I certainly am glad to get this house white. What makes this so much whiter than the paint we had before?"

"Well, I asked Henderson who painted his house last spring and what paint he used. He told me that Davis & Son did the work with Carter White Lead and linseed oil, so I told Davis to send his men up."

"Hasn't our house always been painted with white lead?"

"Yes, but Carter seems to be whiter than other white leads. Davis showed me a couple of samples of white lead that he said were pure and they both looked gray along side of Carter. He says it's Carter that made Henderson's house so white, and this looks as if he were right."

CARTER Strictly Pure White Lead

is a perfectly clear, pure white because it is manufactured by a modern process that eliminates even slight impurities and employs no discoloring agents. It is unusually fine because it is being constantly and thoroughly pulverized during the fifteen days it is being chemically changed from pure metallic lead to white lead.

Carter White Lead is unexcelled in its affinity for linseed oil, its spreading and covering qualities, in durability or in any of the other qualities that have made white lead the most widely used white pigment.

Carter white lead is preferred by experienced painters as the base for making colored paints because it contains nothing to dim the brilliancy of the tinting colors used.

If you are thinking of having your house painted in colors ask your painter or paint dealer to show you a copy of "The Paint Beautiful" portfolio, which shows twelve modern houses painted in up-to-date color combinations.

Whether your house is to be painted in colors or white you should send today for a free copy of "Pure Paint, a Textbook on House-painting" illustrated with four color plates from "The Paint Beautiful" and containing in small space information of great value to property owners.

If you have had any trouble with paint or painting, write to our Paint Information Bureau about it.

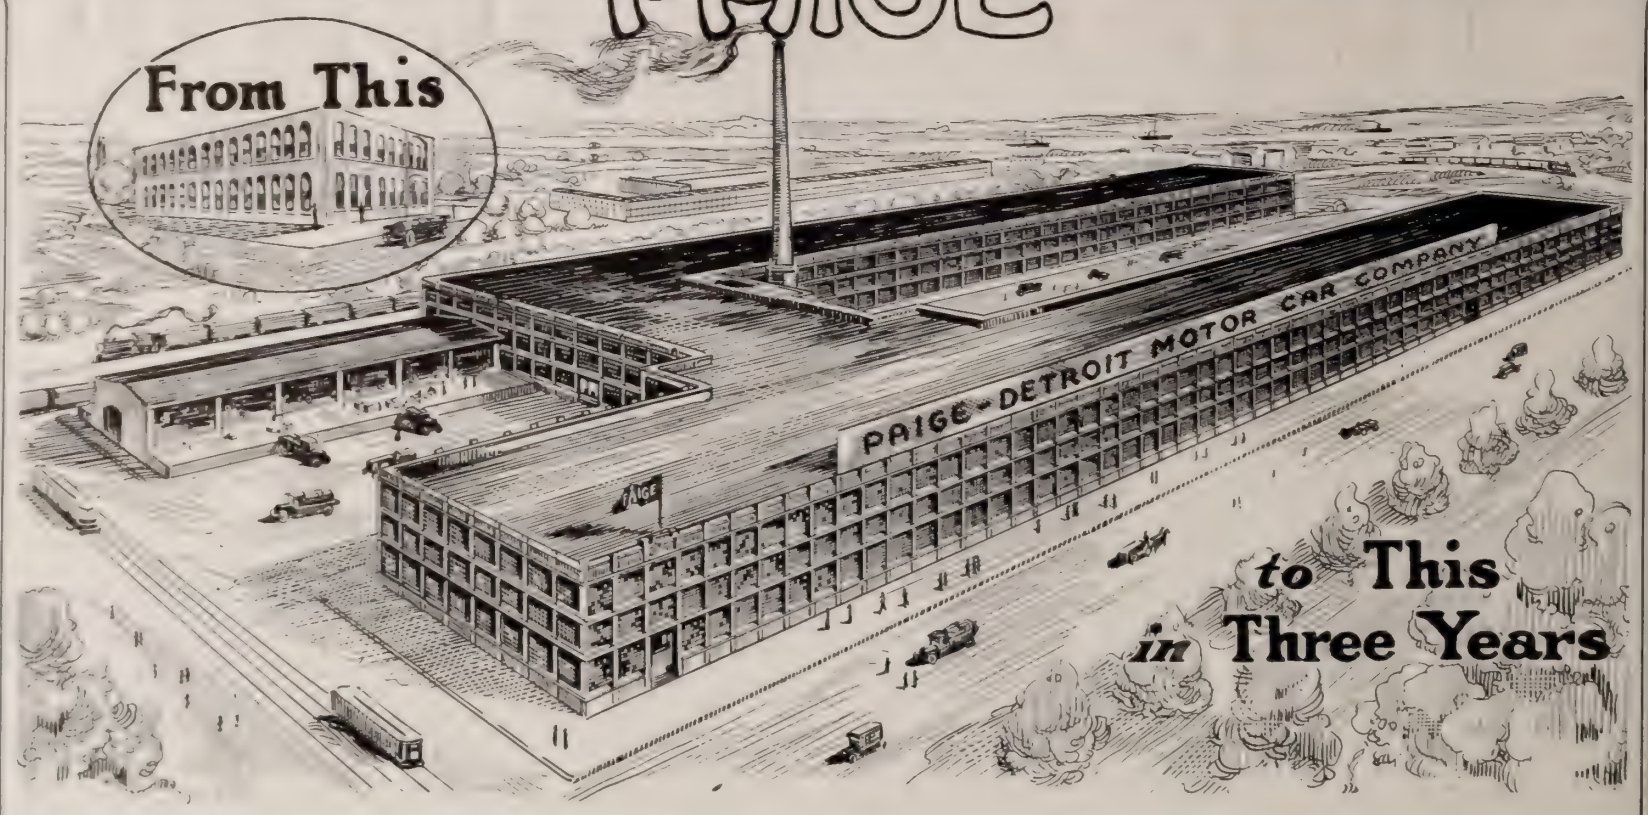
PAIGE



From a tumble-down two-story building to one of Detroit's greatest manufacturing plants—in three years.

From an output of 300 motor cars to an output of 13,000 cars in three years.

From a business of $300,000 to one of $12,000,000 in three years.

Miracle of the Paige

Three years ago the Paige car was unknown and without standing.

Today its leadership in the medium-priced field is acknowledged wherever motor cars are driven.

In other words the Paige has accomplished in the incredibly short period of three years what other cars have struggled eight, ten, fifteen years to attain.

And the reason for it all is two-fold—

1. The extraordinary value that is put into Paige cars.
2. The extraordinary financial position of the Company back of the car.

Check up the Paige on the essential points of structural quality.

Note, for instance, the Electrical equipment—Gray & Davis large unit starting and lighting system—made for cars costing from $2,500 to $5,000—you can't find this large unit system on any other car costing less than $2,500.

Then there is the multiple Disc Cork insert clutch—that is the clutch you know that you find on the exclusive high priced cars—It is not used on any other car in the Paige price field.

Then instead of using the usual timing gears on auxiliary engine shafts the much more expensive silent chain drive is used—This is a feature to be found on only one other car costing less than $1,900.

Add to these things the best type Bosch magneto, Gray & Davis electric lamps, with dimmers on headlights, and the finest, most complete equipment to be found on any car costing under $2,500—and you have some of the reasons for Paige leadership—

Then you will naturally want to know how the Paige Company can produce such a car at such a price—

And the answer to that question is,—the Company back of the car—

The Paige-Detroit Motor Car Company is sound financially—It has no excessive capitalization—No watered or preferred stock on which it has to earn dividends—No bonded indebtedness on which it has to pay interest—No heavy overhead expenses of any kind—Nothing to worry about but just to build cars and put every possible dollar of value into them.

Under such conditions do you wonder that the Paige is absolutely without rival in its price field?

Let us send you Paige literature — Get acquainted with the Paige dealer in your community — Ask for a demonstration.

A WEEKLY ILLUSTRATED NEWSPAPER FOR THE HOME

PRESIDENT WILSON EULOGIZING THE VERA CRUZ HEROES AT THE MEMORIAL SERVICES

FOR THOSE WHO FELL AT VERA CRUZ

ALL interest in the Mexican situation focused on New York on Monday morning, May 11. The solemn incident that occurred there brought the President of the United States from Washington, naval and military commanders and other eminent officials from routine duties, State and city dignitaries from their accustomed places. Crowds such as only the most important spectacles can attract in the streets of New York, packed the sidewalks and filled windows and every vantage point along the very unusual route over which was to pass one of the remarkable cortèges of our history. In the Brooklyn Navy Yard the bodies of the seventeen United States marines and sailors who fell in the taking of Vera Cruz were grouped in their flag-shrouded caskets at the feet of the President, while their names were officially placed upon the roll of the nation's honored dead.

Nineteen names were thus honored, but the bodies of two of this company had not been removed from the hospital ship aboard which they died of wounds, May 5. The others, thirteen sailors and four marines, fell in the fight at Vera Cruz, and their bodies were conveyed to this country on the battleship Montana, which arrived Sunday, May 10, convoyed by the Wyoming and the yacht Mayflower, the latter bringing Secretary of the Navy Daniels from Washington. The funeral fleet anchored off the Battery in readiness for the transference of the bodies to land on Monday morning as the first act in the impressive ceremonies which had been arranged.

Seldom has public imagination been so stirred as it was by the plans for the official reception of these seventeen bodies. The memorial service throughout was of the simplest character; nothing was attempted in the way of display. The procession to escort the bodies was to be composed of detachments of marines and sailors and prominent public men. The route was to be from the Battery up Broadway to the City Hall, up Center Street to Canal, across Canal over Manhattan Bridge to Brooklyn, and thence to the Navy Yard. At the City Hall a chorus of five hundred school children were to sing, and Mayor Mitchel was to place a wreath upon one of the seventeen caskets to be borne upon gun carriages, each drawn by four horses commanded by artillerymen.

Yet it is estimated that one million people congregated along this short route and at the Battery, City Hall Park and the Navy Yard. This enormous throng was so dominated by respect for the heroic dead that no unseemly struggles for view points occurred to provoke police activity, and even the appearance of President Wilson in the only open carriage in the parade failed to produce more than a subdued murmur of applause. As the brief cortège passed slowly on its way, business in that section of the city was practically suspended. The multitudes stood bareheaded as the bodies passed. And when the last of the parade had marched by, a host that usually would be almost unmanageable dispersed with scarcely a sign of confusion, silent and sad.

The program was carried out with military precision. At seven o'clock Monday morning the bodies were transferred from the Montana to land by naval tugs. The men of the Montana stood at attention while the flag-wrapped caskets, which had rested on deck under guard all the way from Vera Cruz, were lowered over the side. No salute was fired, but the ship's flag stood at half mast. Everywhere flags were half-masted, on ships, on buildings, over government offices. The two funeral boats drew up to the pier, thousands of silent spectators looking on. In detachments, sober-faced bluejackets carried the caskets ashore. In due time, still wrapped in their flags, each casket was strapped to a gun-carriage. Great, beautiful floral wreaths, tributes from army and navy organizations and others, were placed upon them. There they waited in the square formed by battalions from the Wyoming and Texas. Behind those rigid lines 50,000 persons massed themselves silently, reverently. Perfectly managed police marked the limits for spectators.

Between eight and nine o'clock those who were to take part in the parade arrived at intervals. The brilliant full-dress uniforms of the officers from the army and navy lightened the scene. The battalions of mounted police who were to lead and close the procession were early in their places. There was an air of subdued excitement over all. At a little before nine, President Wilson, contrary to expectations, appeared to take his place in the parade. His arrival was announced by a bugler, and when, a few moments later, he prepared to enter his carriage as a signal for the start, the ships' bands played "The Star-Spangled Banner," while all heads were bared and the enlisted men stood at rigid attention. Immediately after the first squad of mounted police began to move, the bluejackets and marines from the battleships fell into line, and at exactly 9.05 the first caisson was in motion.

Each caisson bearing its honored dead was drawn by four horses, in charge of artillerymen, and was flanked by eight bluejackets as pall-bearers, a marine bringing up the rear. Forty-one carriages, headed by the President's and carrying officials of the navy, the governor of New York State, army officers and many distinguished men, followed. Representatives of the Seventh Regiment, New York State National Guard, and of other military organizations marched in the parade.

When this impressive procession reached City Hall there was a brief halt, while Mayor Mitchel placed the city's memorial wreath upon the first casket and made a few well-chosen remarks. The mayor then joined President Wilson in his carriage, and as five hundred school children sang "My Country, 'Tis of Thee," the cortège took up an uninterrupted journey to the Navy Yard. The route lay through a typical part of New York's East Side, and part of the way was between houses whose windows and fire-escapes and other points of observation were crowded with descendants of citizens of foreign birth.

All along the route the appearance of the first wreath-crowned casket was a signal for the baring of heads. The appearance of President Wilson in an open carriage, hat in hand, his face marked by a serious yet agreeable expression as he bowed slightly to the left and right, was greeted with some demonstrations of applause, obviously hushed by a sense of unfitness on such an occasion.

When the procession had entered the Navy Yard, some 10,000 spectators following, the caskets were removed from the caissons by sailors and placed in a long row immediately before the official stand which was filled by the presidential party, relatives of the dead, and guests of honor. Everything was done with a quiet promptness characteristic of army and navy routine, and almost immediately after the arrival in the Navy Yard the final exercises had begun.

The strains of "Nearer, My God, to Thee," played by the band, died away. At once Chaplain W. G. Cassard offered prayer. Then Secretary of the Navy Daniels stood and addressed the President, handing him as he finished a list of the dead, saying: "I hand you, sir, the names of these heroes, recorded high on the national roll of honor, that they may be preserved in the archives of our republic. Their services will be held in lasting remembrance by a grateful people."

THE FUNERAL CORTEGE PASSING CITY HALL

In his brief address, Secretary Daniels had said: "Of the nineteen who at Vera Cruz sealed with their blood their devotion to the flag of their country, thirteen were twenty-two or under. The oldest was thirty-six; the youngest nineteen. Their average age was but a little over twenty-three."

President Wilson accepted the list with much emotion. He rose to reply, looking down at the row of flag-draped caskets, and facing the lines of Seventh Regiment officers and marines and bluejackets drawn up as a guard and the thousands of spectators who surrounded the enclosure. In an earnest voice and with an expression that revealed the depth of his feelings he spoke in part as follows:

"I know that the feelings which characterize all who stand about me and the whole nation at this hour are not feelings which can be suitably expressed in terms of attempted oratory or eloquence. They are things too deep for ordinary speech. For my own part, I have a singular mixture of feelings. The feeling that is uppermost is one of profound grief that these lads should have had to go to their death, and yet there is mixed with that grief a profound pride that they should have gone as they did, and, if I may say it out of my heart, a touch of envy of those who were permitted so quietly, so nobly, to do their duty. Have you thought of it, men? Here is the roster of the navy, the list of the men, officers and enlisted men and marines, and suddenly there swim nineteen stars out of the list—men who have suddenly gone into a firmament of memory, where we shall always see their names shine; not because they called upon us to admire them, but because they served us, without asking any questions, and in the performance of a duty which is laid upon us as well as upon them.

"Duty is not an uncommon thing, gentlemen. Men are performing it in the ordinary walks of life all around us all the time, and they are making great sacrifices to perform it. What gives men like these peculiar distinction is not merely that they did their duty, but that their duty had nothing to do with them or their own personal and peculiar interests. They did not give their lives for themselves. They gave their lives for us, because we called upon them as a nation to perform an unexpected duty. That is the way in which men grow distinguished, and that is the only way: by serving somebody else than themselves. I hope to God none of you may join the list, but if you do, you will join an immortal company.

"So while we are profoundly sorrowful and while there goes out of our heart a very deep and affectionate sympathy for the friends and relatives of these lads who for the rest of their lives shall mourn them, though with a touch of pride, we know why we do not go away from this occasion cast down but with our heads lifted and our eyes on the future of this country, with absolute confidence of how it will be worked out—not only upon the mere vague future of this country, but the immediate future. We have gone down to Mexico to serve mankind if we can find out the way. We do not want to fight the Mexicans. We want to serve the Mexicans if we can, because we know how we would like to be free, and how we would like to be served if there were friends standing by ready to serve us. A war of aggression is not a war in which it is a proud thing to die, but a war of service is a thing in which it is a proud thing to die.

"Notice that these men were of our blood. I mean of our American blood, which is not drawn from any one country, which is not drawn from any one stock, which is not drawn from any one language of the modern world, but free men everywhere have sent their sons and their brothers and their daughters to this country in order to make that great compounded nation which consists of all the sturdy elements and of all the best elements of the whole globe.

"War, gentlemen, is only a sort of dramatic representation, a sort of dramatic symbol of a thousand forms of duty. As I stand and look at you to-day and think of these spirits that have gone from us, I know that the road is clearer for the future. These boys have shown us the way, and it is easier to walk on it, because they have gone before and shown us how. May God grant to all of us that vision of patriotic service which here in solemnity and grief and pride is borne in upon our hearts and consciences."

At the conclusion of the President's remarks, listened to in unbroken silence, Rabbi Stephen S. Wise offered the second prayer, and then the Rev. John P. Chidwick, chaplain of the navy yard, pronounced the benediction. The firing squad moved quickly in front of the stand. An officer gave a command. Three volleys crashed above the caskets. Another command, and the bugler spoke the nation's last message of farewell to those heroes of Vera Cruz, bidding them, "Sleep, your warfare o'er."

The seventeen bodies were sent to their homes for burial, in every case a public demonstration of respect being made at the funeral; in some instances the crowds were so great that many persons were injured in the crush. The names of the nineteen men are given below, the last two being those whose bodies are on the hospital ship Solace:

TAMPICO TAKEN BY THE REBELS

ON MAY 13 a change of tone was noticeable in the reports from Washington as regards the outlook for successful mediation. Friction over alleged mistreatment of Americans, some of them of official standing, by Huerta, and the uncompromising attitude of the Constitutionalists had given grounds for fear that little good would be accomplished by the envoys. On May 13, however, renewed hope was expressed that a plan might be evolved acceptable to all concerned for the temporary government of Mexico, pending the pacification of that country.

One of the most acute questions was the continued detention under arrest of the American vice-consul at Saltillo, John R. Silliman. The representations of our government through the Brazilian minister in Mexico City, finally resulted in the release of Mr. Silliman, the Mexican Government's charges against him of improper activities not, however, being withdrawn. Sixteen other Americans had been jailed at Saltillo, but were previously released, and when they arrived in Vera Cruz told of harsh treatment.

The occupation of Lobos Island, off Tampico, by American marines for the purpose of maintaining the light located there, the Mexicans having abandoned the station, was regarded by Huerta as a breach of the armistice entered into pending the peace conference. Admiral Mayo, however, insisted that the move was not a hostile one. The incident, with many others that have caused friction, will probably be adjusted by the mediators. The activities of the rebels have centered at Tampico. On May 9 a desperate battle was reported as in progress. An army of 7,000 men, for whose advance artillery was opening the way, was prepared to take the place. On May 11 it was reported that the Federals had repulsed the attack and that nothing of moment had been accomplished by the rebels. The fighting was renewed on the 12th by an artillery attack begun in the morning and continued late into the night.

FEDERALS ENTRENCHED BEFORE TAMPICO

On the 13th the Navy Department announced that Tampico had fallen. The heavy artillery attack and a desperate assault on the Federal lines by the Constitutionalists drove the Federals from their trenches. The attacking force followed them into the city and from one position to another until the Federals were forced to evacuate, and retreated toward San Luis Potosi, about seventy miles to the west, where it is said they hoped to make a successful stand. The victorious rebels have already adopted the slogan "On to Mexico City," and are confident of speedily taking both Potosi and Saltillo before beginning the final stage of their advance. The taking of Tampico is a victory of the very greatest importance to the rebels.

BOTH SIDES OF COLORADO LABOR WAR

THE MINE OPERATORS AND THE UNITED MINE WORKERS PRESENT THEIR CASE THROUGH THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

THE OPERATORS' SIDE

By President Osgood, of the Victor American Fuel Company, in Behalf of All the Mining Companies Interested

RESPONDING to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD'S telegram for a comprehensive statement of the Colorado trouble from the standpoint of the mining operators, President J. C. Osgood of the Victor American Fuel Company, Denver, Col., forwarded a detailed statement from which we take these essential points:

On September 23, 1913, the United Mine Workers of America inaugurated a State-wide strike of the coal mine employees of Colorado. The number of men employed in the mines at that time was 12,346. In October, 1913, the month following the calling of the strike, the average number of men in the mines of the State was 7,696, showing a loss, approximately, of 4,700 men. Not all of these men left the mines in response to the call for a strike. Many of them, when the strike was being agitated, left the State to find employment where no labor troubles existed. The number of men working in the mines has increased steadily each month until March, when 10,146 men were working. These figures, President Osgood says, are taken from the official reports of the State Inspector of Coal Mines and show conclusively the falsity of the United Mine Workers' claim that 95 per cent. of the men went out on strike and that there are 12,000 now on strike in Colorado. "There are at the present time," he writes, "in the strikers' camps not to exceed 2,000, many of whom are lawless men brought from other States, who have never worked in the mines of Colorado."

No Ground for Strike

Of the United Mine Workers of America he writes that they are "an unincorporated organization which claims a membership of 375,000 out of 750,000 coal mine workers in the United States. Their published records show that prior to the calling of the strike in Colorado they had about 2,000 members in District 15, which includes the States of Colorado, New Mexico, and Utah, out of a total working force of over 23,000 men." One of the principal aims of the organization, he declares, is to secure a monopoly of coal mining labor in the United States and to be able to dictate terms of employment, wages, etc., among all the mines. Proceeding to the history of the present strike, President Osgood says:

"The coal mines of Colorado have been operated for the past thirty years, since mining has been conducted on any considerable scale, on an 'open-shop' basis, employing union and non-union men indiscriminately, but not having any contract with labor organizations. During this period there have been but two general strikes, the so-called "Debs strike" in 1894, which was nation-wide, and the strike in 1903, called by the United Mine Workers of America. The men employed in the mines of Colorado include Italians, Austrians, Slavs, Greeks, Bulgarians, Montenegrins, etc., and with a larger percentage of English-speaking workmen than in most of the unionized States in the East. The coal mining industry in Colorado has doubled every ten years for the past thirty years, and in order to obtain the requisite amount of labor the employers have been obliged to pay wages and offer conditions that would attract labor from the Eastern States.

"At the time the strike was called, September 23, 1913, no demands had been made by the men, who were apparently satisfied with their wages and conditions. Before calling the strike of September 23 of last year the United Mine Workers' officials demanded of the coal operators to contract with their organization, agreeing to employ all union men and discharge all non-union. The operators declined. The mine workers then called a 'delegate meeting' of miners on September 16 and formulated seven demands, including the recognition of the union and union contracts. What this meeting did, President Osgood thus explains: "The seven demands they made were for an eight-hour day, two weeks' pay, 10 per cent. increase in wages, check-weighmen, freedom to trade where they pleased, pay for dead work, enforcement of mining laws and union contract. All of them except the question of wages and recognition of the union were regulated by State laws and were already in force in all of the mines of the State."

Attitude Toward the Union

During the strike the operators have refused to deal with the union officials on the ground that they did not represent any of their workingmen, but "they have been willing at all times to meet actual representatives of their workingmen, and have done so on two occasions, once at the request of the editors of the State, the other at the request of the governor." At both of these meetings the miners' claims were presented, a full hearing was given and decisions were rendered in favor of the operators. The governor advised the calling off of the strike under conditions which he suggested and which the operators accepted, but which the United Mine Workers rejected. President Osgood charges that the principal weapons of the United Mine Workers of America in all of the strikes have been threats, intimidation and actual violence. "Many of the men who went out were induced to do so by fear," he adds. The day following the strike, the marshal of one of the mining camps was ambushed and killed by strikers, and from that time on acts of violence continued. Tent colonies were established for the strikers and their families by the United Mine Workers, in close proximity to the mines, the largest colony being at Ludlow, near six of the biggest mines. In the Ludlow tent colony there were at one time some 2,000 people. "Many men and women going to or coming from the mines were attacked and beaten," President Osgood proceeds. "The United Mine Workers, organizers and agitators visited the various camps, preaching anarchy to the workers." Most of the strikers, he declares, were well armed, and he adds: "In the testimony before the Congressional Investigating Committee, it was shown that the officers of the United Mine Workers had purchased ammunition and arms and shipped them into the district a week prior to the calling of the strike." At this stage, the employers called on the county authorities to protect their men and property, but the authorities were powerless, being unwilling or unable to incur the expense. The county sheriffs, however, advised the operators that "if they would employ suitable men they would be commissioned as deputy sheriffs." This was

THE MINE WORKERS' SIDE

By the President, Vice-President and Secretary of the United Mine Workers of America

MOST thoughtful and serious consideration to the miners' strike in Colorado has been given by the International Executive Board of the United Mine Workers of America. Thus far it has been an awful conflict. Many lives have been lost, much property destroyed, while the State itself has been burdened with an indebtedness in excess of one million dollars.

"We deplore the loss of life, acts of violence and destruction of property which have taken place. We are for peace and the establishment of right relations between employers and employees. We have exercised our efforts at all times towards righteous dealing, a friendly conference and an arrangement of a just and fair wage-scale, in which the rights of both parties are clearly set forth and fully recognized. But what are the facts? Who is to blame? Upon whom must the responsibility for the conditions prevailing in the mining sections of Colorado rest? We herewith set forth incontrovertible facts, and then let the public decide for themselves.

"Before a strike took place, the miners asked their employers to meet with them and listen to their grievances. They pleaded for a hearing, a meeting with their employers and an opportunity to be heard, but to no avail. They asked again and again for a conference, but each time their request was refused. Each morning they left their homes, bade their families good-by, went into the mines, risked their lives and performed faithful service. Theirs is a hazardous calling, consequently many were killed during the course of employment. Government statistics show that, covering a period of ten years past, more men were killed per thousand employed in the coal mines of Colorado than in any other mining section throughout the entire world. If they were good enough to mine their coal, why should their claims for social justice be denied? They could not get a conference, and so they did what any self-respecting workingmen would do. They discontinued work until they could be heard.

Persecution to Break Strike

"Ninety-five per cent. of all the men employed ceased work, and are still idle. The statement widely circulated by the coal operators' representatives that ten per cent. of their employees were attempting to coerce and control ninety per cent. is absurd and unqualifiedly false. The small number employed are Mexicans, Japanese, and incompetent strike-breakers who have been imported from some of the larger cities. It is reported that a condition of peonage prevails, because many are held in the stockades surrounding the mines against their will.

"In an effort to drive back to work their striking employees, the operators began a policy of persecution and the establishment of a reign of terror. They evicted the miners from their homes, and employed hundreds of vicious gunmen, many of whom had been imported from cities and communities outside of the State. They armed these men with deadly weapons and high-power machine guns, some of which were installed in steel-constructed automobiles, which moved quickly from place to place, for the evident purpose of terrorizing the miners and their families. Many miners and their representatives have been shot and killed. The homes of the striking miners have been invaded, shot into and many of them completely destroyed. Hundreds of the striking miners have been thrown into prison and confined therein without a charge against them.

"The officers of the United Mine Workers of America have been harassed by legal proceedings, indictments in the courts and civil suits aggregating a million of dollars. Newspapers which espoused the cause of the striking miners and essayed to print the truth have been boycotted and threatened with financial ruin.

"A long list of persecutions culminated in the massacre of Ludlow on April 20. The brutality of the gunmen seemed at that time to reach its climax. The homes of the striking miners were riddled with explosive bullets, fired from deadly machine-guns, and then, like barbarians, they applied the torch, sparing neither women nor children. After the battle was over, eleven children, ranging in age from six months to ten years, and two women whose bodies were blackened and burned, were taken from the smoking ruins of their burned and destroyed homes. The State of Colorado was covered with shame, while the whole nation looked on with awe. No fouler crime or more brutal deed was ever recorded on the pages of American history. How could men restrain themselves, when their women and children were thus slaughtered and their bodies burned in their own homes?"

Placing the Blame

The United Mine Workers' statement declares that this sacrifice of life could have been avoided "if John D. Rockefeller, Jr., who occupies such a powerful position in the financial world, would have spoken one word favoring a settlement through a meeting between the representatives of the coal companies and the representatives of his striking employees."

The statement then proceeds: "And now, shall this war of extermination go on? It is no longer a mere struggle for social justice and industrial freedom, but instead, the humble miners and their families in Colorado are fighting the battle of the common people, the masses and humanity against the powerful corporations. Shall these powerful financial interests crush and destroy the hopes, ambitions and aspirations of these striking miners and their families? The answer must be 'No!' There can be no turning back or turning aside. The sacrifices already made are too great. The slaughter of the innocents demands from us our fullest measure of devotion. With resolute purpose and firm determination, the United Mine Workers of America hereby pledge themselves to support the mine workers in Colorado and aid them as long as this contest goes on, even though it lasts for a period of ten long years, until their rights are recognized and an honorable settlement brought about. We pledge to them the support of the international organization, and hereby solemnly declare our unyielding purpose to supply them with financial help and moral support until their rights are recognized, and an honorable wage settlement is brought about.

"We have consistently worked for peace and a peaceful solution of the points at issue. The grievances of the Colorado miners are just and well

WAR AND PEACE.

A DECORATION DAY SERMON

BY PASTOR D. H. STEFFENS

Pastor, Lutheran Church, Baltimore, Md.

TEXT: "And what shall we do?" Luke 3:14.

"WARS and rumors of wars" give this day, which, as the memories of our great civil conflict passed away, has more and more tended to become a feast of flowers, a new significance. The long rows of headstones in our great national cemeteries, all pitifully alike in size and the story they tell; the scattered graves in our private burying grounds carefully sought out that each may receive its little flag and wreath; the trenches of our great battlefields with their unidentified dead, to-day deliver a new message.

They speak of the horrors of war, above all of a guerrilla war under a hot sun of a country with whose distracted people we have no quarrel, whom we can hardly blame if, misunderstanding our motives, they resist to the utmost any invasion of their rights or territory. As we look at the graves which we have again decorated led by the surviving comrades of the fallen dead, solemn thoughts fill our hearts, compelling the Christian people of this nation to ask themselves and their pastors the question of our text: "And what shall we do?" It was first asked of John the Baptist, who was preparing the way for the coming of the Prince of Peace. "And the soldiers likewise demanded of him, saying, And what shall we do?" Here is his answer: "Do violence to no man, neither accuse any falsely; and be content with your wages."

The remarkable thing about John's reply is not what it says, but what it does not say. To quote a hackneyed phrase, it is eloquent in its silence. One would have expected the stern preacher of righteousness to condemn war, which like famine and pestilence is always an evil, and to admonish these soldiers who came to him seeking spiritual instruction, to cast aside their arms and standards, refusing obedience to their officers and any further military service to the state. One would have expected him to condemn the profession of arms as being incompatible with a profession of faith in the coming Christ.

John says nothing of the kind. Leaving these men in their present calling, like the publicans who had asked him the same question, for both were servants of the state, he points out to them the particular duties of their profession or state of life. He thus tacitly recognizes the truth set forth by St. Paul in I Corinthians 7: "Let every man abide in the same calling wherein he was called" (verse 17). "Brethren, let every man, wherein he is called, therein abide with God" (verse 24). Christianity does not interfere with existing relationships or the existing social order. Christian men are to remain in these relationships, in this order, and in them develop the inward spirituality of Christian life. For Christianity works from within outward, not from without inward. It never attempts forcibly to alter outward institutions, as if perfect institutions could make perfect men. No, it accepts existing institutions as being those under which God has placed us, and in which we are to mold our lives according to his holy will.

The Place of the Sword

Accepting these institutions, which in this sinful world can never be anything but imperfect, Christianity seeks to fill them with a newer and holier meaning. It obeys the powers that be "not for wrath, but for conscience sake." Following the example of its Lord, who did not refuse tribute to Cæsar, it is ever subject to the power of government, as being ordained of God and therefore entitled to its willing and loyal support. It does not forbid Christ's Christians to render service to the state, even when they are called upon to bear arms; although war, like famine and pestilence, is always an evil. When these soldiers came to John, asking him what to do, he did not tell them to seek a more peaceful calling; he simply tells them to do violence to no man and to be content with their wages. He does not glorify war. He does not exalt a soldier's calling. Neither does he depreciate it. Fearful as it was in those days, John simply accepts it as an existing institution and assumes on the part of the soldiers who came to him seeking baptism, a loyal and unfaltering support of their government.

Here, then, is the first answer to our question: "And what shall we do?" Loyally and unfaltteringly support our government, as being that power sent of God "for the punishment of evil doers, and for the praise of them that do well", and to that end bearing the sword not in vain, but for use, as the minister of God. This is the plain duty of every Christian citizen as taught by the Inspired Word and illustrated by the life and death of those Christian men whose graves again prompt us to ask the question they once asked themselves.

There has been a great deal of newspaper and private criticism of our President's dealings with Mexico and its self-centered dictator. God knows the President not only has endeavored to prevent war, but is even now earnestly working to that end. Whether he succeeds or not, it is for us to accept the situation and do our full duty to our country, following the example of the people of God from the Christian men who served under the eagles of imperial Rome down to the followers of Christ among the soldier dead whose graves are being decorated to-day.

Motives

This is the first answer to the question of our text: "And what shall we do?" John gives the soldiers who asked him this question another: "Do violence to no man." It seems a strange advice to give to a man under arms. But it contains the great truth that the sword of war is not only to be a terror to evil-doers, but a defense to them that do well. The first duty of a soldier, or of a nation, is not the doing of violence, but the establishment and preservation of peace. Let us keep this truth in mind. The stern logic of events may force us into a war which we have for years been trying to avoid. Yet this must be, not an end in itself, but a means to an end. Like some drastic surgical operation, its end must be not the destruction, but the preservation of life. If we must fight—and we hope and pray that this may not be necessary—let us be on our guard against that unchristian spirit of revenge, that savage delight in warfare, which without compunction would do violence to every man.

"Neither accuse any man falsely," says John to the inquiring soldiers. Not even your enemy. Be just toward him. Do not justify your violence by laying false charges against your enemy, whether he be an individual or a nation. The same Christ who commands us to serve Cæsar or the state with unfaltering loyalty, also commands us to love and to pray for our enemies.

Most nations, like most men, have their virtues and their faults. Mexico is no exception to this rule. If we must, with force of arms, intervene in her affairs, let us try to do so without besmirching the character of her unfortunate people. We have very little trustworthy knowledge, either of their character or their troubles. That the great majority of Mexico's people has been dispossessed of its lands by a few wealthy families, aided and abetted by a corrupt church whose utter worldliness has always prompted her leaders to stand on the side of privilege and against justice, we know. If they have been kept in ignorance and religious and political bondage—which is always a concomitant of the lack of knowledge of that Gospel truth which alone can make us free—they deserve our pity, rather than our condemnation; our teaching, rather than false accusations.

Thank God, there is little danger of our going into this war, if go we must, for gain by conquest! There will be no annexation of territory, and no forcible incorporation of unwilling citizens into the body politic. Our army and navy will be content with its wage, which, let us hope, will be the testimony of a good conscience, besides a nation's gratitude, a nation's honor and a nation's regard.

But there are signs that not all of our citizens are equally unselfish. We have heard the opinion boldly advanced that we must take everything down to the Canal, because we cannot fight for nothing; that we must control and develop Mexico's rich natural resources, as if we had not enough of our own to develop; that a war will be helpful to business. Thus, one of our papers calmly announced that a war with Mexico would greatly improve the cotton duck business. Signs are not wanting that the speculator, the army contractor, the investor and concession hunter, like those ghouls who under cover of darkness visit a battlefield for plunder, are again preparing to profit by the misfortunes of their fellow men.

The Way to Peace

If that be the case, then let us as a people try to remember John's words: "Be content with your wages." We want nothing but what is rightfully ours. No blessing ever attaches to ill-gotten gain. And no blessings can ever attach to territory or wealth taken by force of arms from a weak and helpless foe by a stronger nation.

But enough! Government, military service, warfare, like trade or business, are purely secular and temporal affairs. There never was and there never can be a holy or a Christian war. If a Christian bears arms, he does so as a citizen and subject of the state. Like the raising of a bushel of grain or the making of a pair of shoes, service to the state is a purely secular occupation—"ein rein weltlich Ding," as Luther calls it. Of all secular occupations, the profession of arms, especially at times of war, is perhaps the most trying to men's souls. As we recognize this truth, we shall guard against that false patriotism which so exalts death on a field of battle as to almost make it a guarantee of heaven.

On the other hand, just as a Christian can put his Christianity into his business or his trade, his farming or his shoemaking, so a Christian soldier can put his Christianity into his service under arms. He can sanctify his every duty "by the word of God and by prayer." He can carry his New Testament, not merely in his knapsack, but in his heart and into his deeds. Thus his service will be a doing of the will of God, a blessing to himself and to his fellow men, whether they be friend or foe.

For this, my friends, let us pray—"pray without ceasing." While none but a Christian can truly render this service, it is the one service which can be rendered by all Christians alike. Whether they be "father, mother, son, daughter, master, mistress or servant"; whether they be rich or poor, great or small, high or low, they can all alike do this one thing. So if we as Christians ask ourselves this question: "And what shall we do?" let me answer it with one word—pray. Pray to the Lord of Hosts that he may give to all nations peace and concord, prosper all good counsels and all just works; that peace and happiness, truth and righteousness may be established. Doing this, we shall render the best of all services; for "the effectual fervent prayer of the righteous man availeth much."

May God in his rich mercy grant that our prayers avail both for our beloved country and for poor distracted Mexico.

GRATEFUL FOR HELP FOR THE BALKAN ORPHANS

YOURS of the 19th of March came a few days ago, and the check for $4,600 has been cashed for francs, 39,599. This is your second check from the contributions solicited by Mrs. Furnajieff for the destitute orphans of the Balkan War, to be used in orphanage work.

We have come to realize, in this country, that THE CHRISTIAN HERALD means an instrument divinely used for great good in the world. THE CHRISTIAN HERALD and its readers did a fine, extensive and laudable work for our country, and you may be sure they will never be forgotten.

DAILY MEDITATION

FOR EVERY DAY IN THE YEAR, BASED ON THE WORDS OF JESUS

BY PROFESSOR W. H. T. DAU

SUNDAY, May 31. Luke 6: 39. "Can the blind lead the blind? Shall they not both fall into the ditch?" The parable of the blind leaders of the blind was aimed at the Pharisees and their following. By their ready censure of men and affairs, the Pharisees believed they were discharging the function of teachers to the ignorant masses. Being unable and unwilling themselves to see the true condition of things on which they passed judgment, they were disqualified for leadership of God's people. Their clients, trusting to these misinformed, biased and arrogant leaders, endorsing their merciless judgments, applauding their withering condemnations, copying their ungenerous example, were like blind men themselves groping after a blind man who held them in leading-strings. What could this lead to but ruin? When the leader stumbles, all whom he has been leading stumble, and when he falls into a ditch, all fall after him. It is sad to contemplate the influence of evil-judging, bitter men, who should be the true religious leaders of others. The ditch is prepared for each procession of such blind leaders, and only Jesus can avert the disaster by opening the eyes of the blind with his illuminating teaching.

MONDAY, June 1. Luke 6: 40. "The disciple is not above his master: but every one that is perfect shall be as his master." Perverse teachers of religion and morals naturally transfer their own views and feelings to the minds of their pupils. A bigoted, harshly-judging censor who is regarded as a religious authority will make those who accept his authority as bigoted and bitter as he is himself. The stern condemnations he has uttered will be re-echoed by those who have heard him and admired him for uttering them. Our Lord in these words gives a view of the future of the Jewish church. The present generation will utter its anathema against him; their sons will cast his disciples out of their schools a few years later. And so it will be to the end of time. New harvests of religious bigotry are constantly ripening as new crops are being continually sown. Wherever we meet with instances of this kind, let us remember to be merciful. Many a person who is harsh in judging others is simply repeating what he has been taught, and has never had a chance to see the matter from the proper side.

TUESDAY, June 2. Matthew 7: 3. "And why beholdest thou the mote that is in thy brother's eye, but considerest not the beam that is in thine own eye?" The censorious habit is here described as mote-hunting and as taking place among brethren. A mote is a small substance—a speck. In this parable, the term denotes a fault in a fellow believer. Faults deserve censure and must be removed. But the party removing a fault in another must go about this delicate business in a considerate manner. It is not the removing of the mote that the Lord condemns, but the way it is done. The censorious Pharisee aggravates the case of his erring brother in two ways. First, he makes an unnecessarily great ado about it. He approaches the brother with a show of kindness which thinly veils his purpose. He is really pleased to find something to criticize, and his suave manner makes his criticism rankle all the more. It is intended to do that. Secondly, he displays conceit. He holds himself superior to the brother, who, on his part, is aware of his critic's more glaring shortcomings and wonders why the man is so inconsistent as to condemn in others what he cherishes in himself; yea, why he is so concerned about comparative trifles, when he can look with indifference at huge blunders. That is certainly hypocrisy. God protect us from the mote-hunting Pharisee, and put into our hearts true brotherly love, which deals gently with the erring, to lead them safely out of their error.

WEDNESDAY, June 3. Matthew 7: 6. "Give not that which is holy unto the dogs, neither cast ye your pearls before swine, lest they trample them under their feet, and turn again and rend you." While careful to avoid the censorious habit, the disciples are warned not to fall into the opposite error of disregarding all moral and religious differences among men. There are those of such besotted character as to be comparable to filthy swine. Such people are incapacitated by their habits for appreciating what God, the Saviour, the church and kind Christian men and women wish to do for them. They do not care for grace and truth, mercy and righteousness, and to assume that they will like these things and will eagerly grasp them is a great mistake. They like them so little, that they grow angry when they discover that what has been offered them is not swill and offal but things consecrated to holy use. It is wrong to treat unregenerate men as children of God, and to admit such as have not experienced a change of heart and are still following their old nature to participate in the ordinances and rights of the children of God.

THURSDAY, June 4. Matthew 6: 1-4. "Take heed that ye do not your alms before men, to be seen of them: otherwise ye have no reward of your Father which is in heaven. Therefore when thou doest thine alms, do not sound a trumpet before thee, as the hypocrites do in the synagogues and in the streets, that they may have glory of men. Verily I say unto you, They have their reward. But when thou doest alms, let not thy left hand know what thy right hand doeth: that thine alms may be in secret: and thy Father which seeth in secret himself shall reward thee openly." Our Lord here attacks not only the defective knowledge which the Scribes in his day had of the law, but also their seeming compliance with the law. They were trespassers by what they failed to do, and trespassers again by what they did do. Their spectacular philanthropy, for instance, was a thoroughly carnal and selfish performance. It was not regard for the honor of God or consideration for the need of a fellow man that furnished the motive and the occasion for their alms, but their own self-glorification. This motive dictated to them also the public methods which they adopted for their charities. They were strangers to that singleness of heart with which a true child of God lends a helping hand to one in trouble, whenever and wherever he meets him, and then goes away without waiting for thanks, and says not a word about it to others. They intended their benefactions to become the talk of the community. In our day, put in the place of "trumpets" inch-long display type in a newsaper and you have the duplicate of the scene depicted here. Vainglorious publicity given to our almsgiving may bring us our reward in notoriety, but we shall miss the reward which the Father in heaven bestows in his own place and time.

FRIDAY, June 5. Matthew 6: 5, 6. "And when thou prayest, thou shalt not be as the hypocrites are: for they love to pray standing in the synagogues and in the corners of the streets, that they may be seen of men. Enter into thy closet, and when thou hast shut thy door, pray to thy Father which is in secret; and thy Father which seeth in secret shall reward thee openly." Our English word "hypocrite" is from the Greek, in which language it denotes a playwright, a person who acts the part of another. The hypocrite chooses to play the rôle of a virtuous character. His acts are always a sham, no matter how earnestly and fervently he may play his part. In his addresses to the Pharisees, our Lord frequently employs the term "hypocrite." So in our text, in which he is still reviewing pharisaical compliances with the law. Their prayers were a holy show with plenty of stage effect. No doubt the unthinking rabble on the streets and the throngs in the temple-court looked on in amazement while a Pharisee paid his spectacular devotions. You can witness similar exhibitions in our day at eucharistic masses, military masses, etc. The believer, when he has business with God, seeks the seclusion of his room. He wishes to be alone with God when he bares his heart to him. He leaves his Peniel refreshed and strengthened, and the blessing of the God of Jacob goes with him.

SATURDAY, June 6. Matthew 6: 7, 8. "But when ye pray, use not vain repetitions, as the heathen do: for they think that they shall be heard for their much speaking. Be not ye therefore like unto them: for your Father knoweth what things ye have need of, before ye ask him." The conception which the heathen has of his god is necessarily reflected in his addresses. His god is not supposed to know all things beforehand; therefore he needs to be informed. His god may be sleeping, like Baal; therefore he must be roused; he may be afield, and require being summoned by long and loud calls. Moreover, the heathen connects with his prayer the notion of merit. In his view, it is the effort which he puts into a communication to his deity that makes his prayer valuable. His prayer, like any other religious duty he undertakes, is to exhibit, not his need or dependence upon, or affection for, God, but himself, his worth, his skill, his ingenuity. Accordingly, the heathen sets a high prize upon long-winded prayers that abound in redundancies, and choke the leanest kind of thought in bushels of words. He will make flowing water or the wind turn a prayer-wheel for him—all to assure himself that he has done well his share in this transaction with his god. It is these fundamental errors that make long prayers an abomination to the Lord.

These Daily Meditations by Professor Dau will appear in each issue during 1914.

A SONG OF CHEER

BY ALICE J. WHITTIER

TELL me, sisters in the conflict,
And children at your play,
e men who toil and dare and do,
What brought you help this day?
t was a friendly word of cheer
That sped us on our way."

soul of mine! When through the dark
You came with drooping wings, et that bled and shoulders bowed
Beneath the load of things:
hat changed thee to a seraph
Who leaps and soaring sings?

"It was a loving word of cheer
A friend took time to say.
Oh, it lifted off the burden;
It lighted all the day;
It sent me winging up to God
And singing on my way."

O my comrades of the valleys!
O friends along the height!
One is the need, one is the power;
Give ye of joy and light.
Yea, each may cheer when toil and tears
And love have given sight.

Then let us learn, beloved,
And learn without delay,
The lovely art of cheering
A soul upon its way;
The blessed art that keeps the heart
From breaking day and day.

If springs the grain all fresh and fair,
Make glad the hand that sows.
If some strong man shall dare to know,
Rejoice with him who knows.
Seest thou a soul an atom grow,
Oh, tell that soul it grows.

Make strong thy soul with loving,
Grow joy with all thy tears;
To all God's chiming universe
Lift up a heart that hears,
And chant a song of faith and cheer
All up the winding years.

And when, within the glory
That floods the close of day,
We find the sunset's secret,
And all our steps shall stay,
A mighty song of cheer shall ring
Far back along the way.

A WEEK IN THE WORLD'S NEWS

Cutting Out School Vacations

OKLAHOMA essays to blaze a way to better public school results by testing out a year-round school year which would enable pupils to complete the required eight-year course in six years, and the four-year high school course in three. Pupils will be promoted every three months, the experiment, which is being tried in the town of Ardmore, having already reduced the number of unsuccessful pupils at the end of the customary term 50 per cent. United States Commissioner of Education P. P. Claxton is said to favor the all-year idea. At present the plan is optional with pupils.

To Vote or Not to Vote

WITH a persistence worthy of a better cause—say the anti-suffragists—a host of women from all the States of the Union gathered in Washington on May 9, and in a pageant, said to be one of the most beautiful ever seen in that city of great parades, marched upon the Capitol to demand a constitutional amendment giving women the vote. The new marching song of the cause was sung by a thousand voices on the Capitol's broad steps. Four days before the House Judiciary Committee reported without recommendation joint resolutions providing for such an amendment and also for national prohibition. The committee's action, which put both issues squarely up to the House, was due, it is said, to resentment at the criticisms directed against the committee. A vote of record on either resolution will mean political disaster to many representatives. May 6 the British House of Lords rejected the Woman Suffrage Bill by 104 to 60. On May 13 Rev. Dr. Anna Howard Shaw scored a great triumph by her address on woman suffrage before the International Council of Women at Rome, Italy.

New Canadian Ruler

CANADA is to have a new governor-general in the person of Prince Alexander of Teck, a brother of Queen Mary. The appointment was announced May 7. The Duke of Connaught will be succeeded in October. The prince, who is forty and the husband of Princess Alice of Albany, said to be very pretty and popular, is a soldier and philanthropist. They have a son and a daughter. A portion of the Canadian press protests against the appointment as tending toward hereditary principles in selecting the Dominion's head.

President Camps on Lawn

AN INNOVATION military in appearance, but designed for his comfort during Washington's period of hot weather, has been made by the President, consisting of a comfortable tent erected in a hedged enclosure on the White House grounds, and supplied with seats and writing table. Should the President's determined efforts to avoid war fail, his open-air office, which is likely to be widely copied, will be a veritable commander-in-chief's war headquarters. It is said that the strain of the Mexican situation is telling heavily upon President Wilson, though many who saw him in the parade in New York on Monday said that he appeared alert and well and not at all aged.

New War Cloud Arises

THE debt-ridden republic of Haiti threatens to become an international worry because of the alleged unwillingness of Germany and France to acquiesce in the United States' administering that country's finances alone. Only last week we reported the collection of a 62,000 debt by the British Government under threat of action, and it is said that foreign governments are considering a joint occupation of Haiti's custom house, a course which would be unacceptable to the United States. The situation is regarded as capable of producing serious complications, but an amicable adjustment is looked for. Our government is now satisfactorily administering the customs receipts of Santo Domingo, the sister republic of Haiti on that island.

Ancient Labor Suit Dismissed

ONE of the most celebrated of labor cases was decided by the United States Supreme Court May 11 by dismissing contempt proceedings which have passed from court to court since 1911, against Samuel Gompers, president of the American Federation of Labor; John Mitchell, vice-president, and Frank Morrison, secretary. The three men had repeatedly appealed from convictions obtained and affirmed in successive lower courts. The legal action grew out of alleged conspiracy to boycott the Bucks Stove and Range Company in 1907 in defiance of a court injunction. The boycott lasted till 1910, and the Bucks Company sued for damages. The case had become complicated and the decision is based on legal interpretations. The labor leaders were under sentences of thirty days imprisonment for Mr. Gompers, and $500 fines for the others.

Fighting in a Good Cause

IN THE organized fight against tuberculosis more than $100,000,000 has been spent the last ten years. This encouraging fact was brought out at the convention of the National Association for the Prevention of Tuberculosis in Washington this month. Outposts in the form of hospitals, dispensaries, open-air schools, public exhibits, branch associations, have increased from 150 to above 2,000 in the same time. The president of the association, Dr. John H. Lowman of Cleveland, asserted that the "white plague" must be attacked as a family rather than an individual menace.

Amenities of Teuton and Gaul

THE New York Times is responsible for the publication of news despatches alleging that Germany has entered upon a systematic effort to dislodge all French residents from the captured province of Alsace-Lorraine, and make it wholly German. French citizens have hitherto been required to obtain permits of residence and renew them periodically. Such renewals are being refused, and the holders notified to leave. Approximately 12,000 persons may be affected, some of them established in business. The plan originated with the military. Should it prove to be a real government move, France may retaliate. The reports, however, which have excited the public somewhat, are declared to be "exaggerated," and of a political genesis.

Important Medical Discovery

THE medical world is thought to have been taken somewhat by surprise by the announcement of the discovery of the typhus fever germ by Dr. Henry Plotz, a young physician connected with the Mount Sinai Hospital in New York. That typhus fever is caused by a germ has been generally believed, but not definitely proved until now. Dr. Plotz has been conducting his researches for a number of years. By comparing the results of what is known as Brill's disease and of typhus he came within sight of his important discovery, and has practically identified the two diseases. If the typhus germ has been discovered and isolated, treatment of that disease and other fevers will be greatly advanced. The fact of this discovery was to have been presented by Dr. Plotz to the American Association of Physicians at their annual session in Atlantic City this month, but it is said that the association declined to receive his paper (though not disputing its claim), because of the appearance of the news in the daily papers in advance, an unethical proceeding in the view of the physician. Dr. Plotz was not, however, responsible for the publication of the news. Physicians disagree as to the wisdom of the association's attitude.

Talking Through the Air

SUCCESSFUL use of the wireless telephone was reported May 13, an operator at the Marconi station at the Wanamaker Store in New York speaking to the operator at Philadelphia, who heard him with remarkable distinctness and replied by the regular wireless code. A steamer seventy-five miles at sea also was spoken to, and replied by the code, and amateur operators were able to hear parts of the conversation and also to hear the playing of a phonograph at the New York station. Guglielmo Marconi has also announced the completion of a practical wireless telephone apparatus based on a new principle. This great advance in long-distance communication seems now to be within commercial possibilities.

Storm Kills and Destroys

THE Middle West suffered a phenomenal rainfall accompanied by high winds on May 11 and 12, wide property damage resulting and the loss of some lives. A serious washout was reported on the Lake Erie and Western Railroad in Illinois, and in Ohio telegraph and telephone wires were almost rendered useless. Roofs were torn from buildings and trees uprooted in Iowa. The storm spread to other States, but its fury was felt chiefly in that section.

A Table of Years

ON ONE of the introductory pages of the Episcopal Prayer-Book may be found a table for computing Easter year by year. The table includes all the years from 1786 to 2013. It gives one an odd sensation to glance ahead and perhaps put one's finger on those years that have not yet come. A.D. 1950, 1980, 1997, 2009, and so on. What will the world be like when these years dawn? Where shall we be? Look back on the table to the year of your birth. What a tiny space from that to the present year! What a little distance brings you to years which you know will find you in another world!

Did you ever count the rings on the stump of an ancient tree? The year the tree grew this ring Lincoln died; this year Napoleon fell; this year the Declaration of Independence was signed; this year the Pilgrims came—and so on, all a matter of inches.

Such observations should make us very humble; we are but a small part of the story that is being told. They should make us very patient. While we must work rapidly, we must not grow restive if things move slowly; most of all we must not be so eager that we become confused and inefficient. Things are moving steadily. The new years will be upon us soon. Do not pray that they may come faster, but that they may find us ready.

But on the other hand these thoughts should make us bold. After all, great as the tasks are they are not infinite. The whole vast story can be indicated upon a tiny page. Let us have our part then courageously and vigorously and well. And though we must be patient we must also hasten. The end, wherever it be, cannot be far. The word we have to speak, the thing we have to do, let us speak and do promptly, before our night cometh.

If these great things are so small, how contemptible appear many of the things to which we give strength and time. Take a new gauge of life. Live not for the moment, or for the day, but for the years. Relate your life to the vast progresses of the centuries, and make it worthy of a place in them, if not in achievement, at least in thought and purity and prayer and faith and desire. Members of a minister's congregation declared that he did not preach for the times. "The others are preaching for the times," he answered. "Will you not let one man preach for the eternities?"

There is assurance and comfort in the thought that however the times may change, one great fact can never change—"Jesus Christ, the same yesterday, to-day and forever." We go forward into the waiting years with him—and in whatever land they find us we shall be, if we abide with him, safe and glad and useful—forevermore.

War or Peace? Which Shall It Be?

IN HIS oration over the bodies of the seventeen young Americans who died so bravely at the post of duty at Vera Cruz, President Wilson defined the attitude of this government toward Mexico in these memorable words:

> We have come here to Mexico to serve mankind if we can get at the way. We do not want to fight the Mexicans. We want to serve the Mexicans if we can, because we know how we would like to be used here if we were in their place. We would like to be served if there were [illegible] to come to serve us. A war of conquest is one of the most unjust wars in which a man can engage, but a war of service is one of the most honorable wars in which a man can engage.

On many previous occasions the President has declared that his administration desired not war but peace with Mexico. Yet there have been moments within these last few days when we have apparently stood on the brink of war.

Why not let us be frank with ourselves? Who is it that wants war with Mexico? It is a few reckless, sensational journals, some headstrong politicians who speak first and think afterward, and a group of interested, covetous capitalists. The American people certainly do not want war. They have no quarrel with the people of Mexico. Huerta probably wants war and will do what he can to precipitate it, as the only means by which he can "save his face." But the American people may well count the cost of adopting any course which would allow the United States to be used as a pawn in the desperate game that is being played by this despot.

Counting the cost—what does it mean? War with Mexico may mean the needless sacrifice of thousands of American lives, the piling out instantly of blood and treasure, the infliction of untold grief upon bereaved American homes. If we should go in, we need not expect to pass through a hostile country as though on some holiday excursion. And it would be only the beginning of a long enterprise, involving such sacrifices as one shudders to contemplate.

Are we prepared to go through such an ordeal and call it a "war of service"? Can an enterprise which must inevitably take a heavy toll of American lives be rightly denominated a triumph of peace? It is not a question of ultimate victory, for the strength and resources of the two nations are not comparable. The whole question which presents itself to the sane American mind is this: Is such a war either necessary or justifiable? Are we ready to lay down one thousand, or ten thousand, or it may be even twenty thousand lives to carry on this "war of service"?

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD yields to no one in its respect for the honor and the glorious traditions of our country, or in loyalty to our government. But even governments may make mistakes. If we have permitted ourselves to be led into a false position through errors in diplomacy with regard to Mexico, there is still an honorable and a Christian way out of the difficulty. War, at its best, is an unmitigated evil. President Wilson has held this view and his Secretary of State is credited with the declaration that the present administration would be one of peace. We cannot believe they have changed their convictions while there are still arbitration tribunals and peace commissions available; nor will we credit them with such a change unless they themselves declare it. A "war for service," no less than one of aggression, is just plain, brutal war, with its usual horrible concomitants; and if such a war can be honorably avoided, it is our duty to avoid it absolutely.

May God send wise counsels to this nation. We rejoice to know that the President still plans peace, that the South American ambassadors are working for peace, and that the mediators are laboring for the same laudable result. We believe that the Almighty will yet overrule all obstacles and bring to pass a peaceful solution of the present troubles.

Both Sides Heard

FOR the first time, the representatives of both sides engaged in the amazing Colorado labor war have an opportunity to submit their case at the bar of public opinion, through this issue of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. We commend their respective statements to the careful reading of all who have been watchful of the progress of those events which led up to the reckless slaughter of human lives in a State where the proper use of the power vested in the State authorities would have made such a hideous climax impossible. Whatever the impression received from the perusal of these statements, one thing is painfully evident, viz.: the official impotence of the governor of Colorado. It is not reasonable to suppose that he could have been uninformed regarding conditions in the mining camps, at a time when the tension was coming dangerously near to the breaking point. The presence of machine guns, armored automobiles and searchlights in the camps and the ominous demonstrations on both sides even before blood was shed, should have warned the governor to invoke Federal aid, instead of criminally delaying until too late.

Let us hope that the investigation to be conducted by the Federal Labor Department will be thorough and searching and that the contestants will be compelled to agree to arbitration. Even if little or nothing can now be done to atone for the wrongs of the past, it is clearly a duty to establish a precedent which will be a strong check in preventing industrial warfare hereafter of the savage and inhuman character we have just witnessed in Colorado.

Industrial Education and Missions

FEW people on this side of the world have an adequate conception of the great extent to which industrial education has progressed in recent years in the missionary field. This is notably the case in China, India and Japan. When THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, some twelve years ago, took up the cause of orphan child-training in those countries, industrial education was almost unknown there. Missionary effort was confined at first almost exclusively to spiritual training and schools for beginners. As the work advanced, however, the need of teaching the older children some kind of labor, which might ultimately develop self-support, became apparent. One mission after another added an industrial branch to its equipment and the older children were taught various useful trades, including farming, gardening, carpentry, blacksmithing and the manufacture of many different kinds of marketable articles. A few of the more enterprising missions employed expert teachers. Manual training has now become general and is everywhere regarded as an indispensable adjunct to the spiritual work of the missions. It is proving successful all along the line.

One of the ablest and most observant among our American missionaries, writing of the value of industrial training, expresses the general view in this single sentence: "If in this formative period the Christians of China are helped to open industrial work very widely, great will be the return to Christianity."

Seven Books You Should Read

AMONG the many books that come under our notice there are some few that possess qualities which appeal with more than usual force to every one who desires to know the secret of right living. Out of the literary harvest of recent years, we have chosen seven volumes of this character, each of them, in its way, a Christian classic. "Seven" is the number symbolical of perfection, and although nothing in this world can be said to be absolutely perfect, we know of no "shelf of books" that will so nearly hit the mark, as far as human satisfaction is concerned, as these seven handy volumes. In one, Dr. Torrey discusses prayer in trouble and in joy, the hindrances to prayer and the precious experience that comes of cultivating a prayerful spirit. In another book, Rev. Robert Boyd talks to young converts in terms of spiritual encouragement and fatherly advice. The third volume, by Rev. A. C. Dixon, deals with social, business and home ethics, amusements, the theater, the dance, the card-table and the novel. Dr. Gray, the famous Bible expositor, in the fourth book, turns the search light of Christian scholarship on a host of spiritual questions that are sure to arise in practical, every-day life. The fifth book deals with the difficult passages of the Bible, and effectually disposes of the hostile critics. The sixth book is a delightful story on temperance lines, by Anna Potter Wright, entitled Burton Street Folks. The last of the seven contains eight characteristic discourses by Moody, all helpful and inspiring, and dealing with vital topics of Christian life. We wish we could place these seven volumes in the hands of every reader. Old subscribers can obtain them, together with the renewal of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, for $2.00; or we will mail the seven books FREE to any present subscriber sending one new subscription at $1.50.

Overwhelmed with Kisses

EXPRESSIONS of gratitude in the form of kisses were showered on William H. Egan, station master of the Pennsylvania railroad station in New York City, the other night by the twenty-seven men and women members of an immigrant band because he had been instrumental in restoring to them a flour sack which contained $38,000 in gold and bills. The party, en route from Montana to Poland, dined in the station and then started for the pier to board the steamship Olympic. In her haste the wife of the leader of the band, to whom her fellow travelers had entrusted their money, left the bag in a waiting-room, where it was found by an attendant and turned over to Egan. Its contents had hardly been counted before the whole party of immigrants ran back in the greatest excitement to look for their lost treasure. They had not the slightest idea they would ever see a penny of it again, in such a crowd of people as thronged the waiting-rooms. Hence their wild delight when the bag with not a dollar missing was handed to them. With one impulse all the members of the band rushed upon Egan and showered upon him their kisses of gratitude. When some of the women approached him he stood up under the ordeal with becoming courage and patience; but when the men insisted on taking the same liberty with him his courage almost gave way. He was left with no doubt of the supreme joy he had caused and gratitude he had awakened. The joy occasioned by the return of the lost treasure reminds us of the joy Christ describes in the parables when the lost piece of money, the thief, and the prodigal son had been found, which parables were given to show the delight of the heavenly Father's heart at the salvation of a lost soul:

She calleth her friends and her neighbors together, saying, Rejoice with me, for I have found the piece which I had lost. Likewise I say unto you, there is joy in the presence of the angels of God over one sinner that repenteth. (Luke 15: 9, 10.)

Lightning Starts Forest Fires

FEW people ever saw the lightning strike anything, and yet it visits houses and barns frequently enough with its fearful stroke to compel the insurance companies to take notice of it. Parents, teachers and books warn children not to take refuge under a tree in a thunder-storm, as there is greater danger of the lightning striking them there. Competent authority reports that over one-half of the forest fires of the nation are the result of lightning. Twenty-two States last year reported forest fires started in this manner. California suffered the most; there were 700 different forest fires started by lightning in that State alone. A single storm started a string of fires in that State that extended 750 miles—from Oregon to Mexico. Neither the locomotive nor the campers have started anything like the number of fires caused by lightning. The ancients debated the origin of fire. Lucretius thought man got fire first from hot ores, but did not say anything about how the ore got heated. One said fire came from the striking of flint, another by friction of wood. Prometheus was said to have stolen fire from heaven. Ever since the earth was made the lightning has touched it with its fires.

He directeth it under the whole heaven, and his lightning unto the ends of the earth. (Job 37: 3.)

Yale's Football Bowl

THE largest football ground in the world is being constructed for Yale in New Haven. There will be seating capacity for 60,000 persons, with room for an increase to 100,000 if necessary. It will be in the shape of a huge bowl, with inside of concrete. Admittance to it will be through thirty tunnels. It is to cost $400,000. There is hope that it will be finished in time for the game with Harvard this Fall, though that is not certain. The 60,000 spectators and their influence on the players will illustrate Paul's statement about the effort auditors may have over those engaged in athletic games, and in the spiritual contests they typify.

Wherefore seeing we also are compassed about with so great a cloud of witnesses, let us lay aside every weight, and the sin which doth so easily beset us, and let us run with patience the race that is set before us. (Heb. 12: 1.)

Remorse Leads to Suicide

BECAUSE he wrongfully accused his friend John Feher of stealing $180 from him, John Vasco, forty-four years old, a machinist, hanged himself from a pipe in the bathroom at his home the other day. Feher paid a friendly visit to the Vasco home in New York, and after Feher had left, Vasco missed a bag containing $180 in gold. Vasco had Feher arrested and committed to the Tombs on a grand larceny charge. While Feher was in the prison protesting beseechingly his innocence, Mrs. Vasco found the missing bag behind a trunk. Then Vasco, greatly agitated, succeeded in obtaining Feher's release. He gave Feher $70 for his loss of time and wounded feelings. But remorse so preyed upon him that he took his own life. There are many false suspicions and cruel accusations, often upon the part of those counted as friends. Remorse at the ill treatment of others indicates that conscience is alive, and should prompt to apology, plea for forgiveness, or restitution, rather than to suicide. It is such a pity that this dear man did not have the moral and spiritual stamina to cure rather than be mastered by his remorse. Let there be charity enough to believe that his sorrow unbalanced his reason and threw him into self-destruction. The one colossal personal injury of the centuries and the remorse and self-destruction of Judas that followed are thus recorded:

And he cast down the pieces of silver in the temple, and departed, and went and hanged himself. (Matt. 27: 5.)

ANOTHER FEARFUL EARTHQUAKE VISITS SICILY

THE whole of the smiling countryside between Mount Etna and the Gulf of Catania has been devastated by a terrible earthquake, which reduced a dozen villages to ruins, and caused some deaths, with 350 injured. One hundred and ten bodies were removed from the ruins of the villages of Linera and Cosentini. At Bongiardo ten were removed from the débris. The village of Linera disappeared and its 150 inhabitants were either killed or fled from their homes. The national and local authorities were promptly on the scene taking out the bodies of the living and hurrying the wounded to places of shelter. Catania has suffered probably more than any other city in the world from volcanic eruptions and earthquakes, owing to its immediate proximity to the volcano of Etna. The town itself is built on a bed of lava, and most of its streets are paved with the same material. It contains 140,100 people. Since its foundation in B.C. 729 it has been destroyed several times by earthquakes, but has insisted on daring fate and staying in its place of fearful danger. In the earthquake and tidal wave at Messina and Calabria in 1908 official figures gave the loss at 77,283 lives and the loss of property was one billion dollars. This is the earthquake to whose sufferers THE CHRISTIAN HERALD readers gave so munificent an amount. The prophet thus refers to the perils of the earthquake: "And ye shall flee to the valley of the mountain; yea, ye shall flee, like as ye fled from before the earthquake in the days of Uzziah, king of Judah." (Zech. 14: 5.)

The Gipsy Moth Plague

A MAN who brought the gypsy moth from Europe in 1869 to cure his silkworms of pebrine, let them escape from him in the village of Medford, Mass., and ever since then the trees of New England and other States have been murdered by them. Unfortunately the birds will not eat them. Fortunately in Europe first, and now in America, a parasite has been found which eats up the eggs of the moth before they become caterpillars. This parasite is imported from Europe. The Agricultural Department at Washington furnishes moth eggs which have been infected in the laboratory with the enemies of the moth, which are deposited in the gipsy nests of the trees being destroyed, and the little enemies greedily devour every tree-murderer that can be found. Foresters of two States got on the track of one gipsy moth and traced it to a cemetery on Long Island and killed it. Would that such industry might be manifested in hunting and destroying more evils! The fields and forests had their murderous insects in olden times.

Thou shalt plant vineyards, and dress them, but shalt neither drink of the wine, nor gather the grapes; for the worms shall eat them. (Deut. 28: 39.)

Business by Golden Rule

A PROMINENT merchant in one of the large cities of the country died the other day leaving a fortune. After having provided in his will for his family and church and general benevolence, he arranged to have his business continued through his son and a partner, the same as when he was living. A clause of the will reads: "I desire that the business shall be carried on without interruption on the high plane of the Golden Rule on which we have been successful." With all the misrepresentations and frauds of business life it is true that most men are honest and do their business by the Golden Rule. If this were not true, financial and moral ruin would overtake us as a nation.

Therefore all things whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so to them; for this is the law and the prophets. (Matt. 7: 12.)

Large Wheat Crop Promised

THE greatest crop of winter wheat ever grown in this country is indicated by statistics announced by the Department of Agriculture. The acreage abandoned through unfavorable conditions of the winter amounted to only 3.1 per cent. of the area planted, an unusually low per centage. This makes the area to be harvested a record one of 35,387,000 acres. The condition on May 1 is indicative of a yield per acre of approximately 17.8 bushels, assuming average variations to prevail thereafter. On the estimated area to be harvested, this would produce a final crop of 630,000,000 bushels compared with 523,561,000 bushels harvested in 1913, and 399,919,000 in 1912. The outturn may possibly be somewhat above or below the figures given, according to whether the condition from May 1 to the time of harvest is above or below the average change. There may be weather calamitous to the wheatfields, but we are now so few weeks away from the harvest time that it is likely the prophecies here given will be verified. How good is our heavenly Father to make such generous provision for the nation's food for the year! There are wheatfields of thought, of affection, and service into which we have been sent as laborers. The promise of our fruitful wheat crop reminds us of the bountiful harvest in the spiritual realm in such need of hands to gather, to which the Saviour thus refers:

The harvest truly is plenteous, but the laborers are few; pray ye therefore the Lord of the harvest, that he will send forth laborers into his harvest. (Matt. 9: 37, 38.)

A NEW KIND OF MISSIONARY

TO GO, to give, to pray—these have seemed the only ways open for doing missionary work. We think there is a fourth way. We do not claim originality for the idea, because we believe there are such missionaries doing valiant work at this moment. We quote a letter below from one such worker. We believe the field for this kind of missionary labor is very big, and offers splendid opportunities for every individual who cannot go, who possibly may be able to give only a little and who may not be content only to pray. And so we suggest this new form of missionary work to our readers in connection with the one cause so worthy of your support, the salvation of outcast orphans in China.

In your town are persons able and willing to give to philanthropic work of whose proven usefulness they are well assured. You would be surprised to know how many people are ready to give to good causes properly presented to them. Undoubtedly by a little thought you can list a number of such persons in your town.

What more generous thing, what more loyal act can you do in behalf of this cause, than to put pride and timidity and other personal considerations aside in a true spirit of missionary zeal, and go to such persons with the story of the Chinese orphans and request them to enable you to forward from your town at least the amount sufficient to provide for one such child for a year? Better still, found a "patrons' fund," to be sustained from year to year, or from month to month, or in some other regular way. It costs $20 for the whole care of one child a year.

We will not extend the idea here, but will leave it with you. It requires courage to do it, but if you believe in our Chinese orphan work the courage will be yours. It requires grace and missionary zeal, qualities which our readers already possess. Do not you, the present reader and member of the Christian Herald Family, leave this for some other one to undertake. You cannot be sure that any one else in your town will read this message: If you are reading it, accept it as though you were divinely guided to read it, and set about carrying out this idea among your townspeople, as an auxiliary missionary. Why should not every one who has already given to this cause recommend it in this way to others? You believe in it—then be a missionary to carry the message to others.

Here is the letter referred to above:

I am seventy-two years of age, and may not live to see what this army of children may accomplish with God's help. But I believe this is a call from God in answer to prayer to bring China to God. I have asked and received this $6 donation from the Methodist Sunday school, where I am a member. I wish it was four times the amount. MRS. M. M. K.
Mount Washington.

From the many warm-hearted letters received we quote a few others:

Inclosed please find $20 toward Chinese Orphan Fund. I hope it may be the means of helping some child to the knowledge of Christ; that they may win many more and be the means of spreading the Gospel. A FRIEND.
Madison, S. D.

Enclosed you will find a thank offering ($5) for the China orphans. God has answered prayer and saved a dear daughter's life. A THANKFUL MOTHER.

Enclosed please find one dollar for the China Orphan Fund. It is a good work you are doing. May God's blessing rest upon it always. E. W.
Oshawa, Ont., Canada.

Enclosed find three dollars ($3) for the Chinese orphans. I am greatly interested in these little ones, and have been saving a little each week for some time and upon counting it this Easter Sabbath find I have just three dollars.
Munford, N. Y. ONE WHO LOVES LITTLE FOLKS.

THESE ORPHAN BOYS ARE LEARNING TO SING THE SONGS OF THE "HOMELAND"—FOR WHICH FAIR, GLORIOUS COUNTRY YOU ARE PREPARING THEM

Writing from the orphanage at Tsaohsien, North China, J. C. Birkey says:

Where less than ten years ago no missionary had labored, there is now a good home, which cares for two hundred orphans. Some of our older orphan boys are out in colportage work, and preaching the Gospel of Christ to their fellow men. It has been a great blessing to read in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD letters from the donators for the orphans. We have told the orphans of the sacrifices some make in order to help them, and it has humbled them to know just how the Lord is sending in the means.

We have received a number of letters from children, and wish to tell about the children's part in this work in a later issue.

Who will enroll as an auxiliary missionary? Please make a generous response at this season, both in gifts and assurance of interest. Address, THE CHINA ORPHAN FUND, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, New York.

A LITTLE ANGEL OF THE MOUNTAINS

BY CYRUS TOWNSEND BRADY

SYNOPSIS OF WHAT HAS TAKEN PLACE

Olaf Tryggvesson, one of a party of orphans being sent west from New York years ago to new homes, climbs unnoticed from the train, as it comes to a stop, to gather an armful of flowers, and is left behind. He races along the track, then gives up, following the rails till late afternoon, when he turns off on a trail leading through the wilderness, where he meets an Indian, who takes him into his camp. Two miners ride up. The men play cards, the young Indian accuses one of the miners of cheating and is knocked down and cruelly kicked and beaten. The old Indian shoots the miner, whereupon the other miner shoots the father and also the mother, who rushes forward to protect him. The living miner binds the wounded Indian and the body of his companion upon ponies and rides to Canon Creek, a rough mining town, which he reaches on Sunday morning. Olaf, following furtively, comes to the cabin of "Parson Bill," who is by no means a parson, at about the time Dead Shot Jackson reaches the Black Pup Saloon. Jackson accuses the Indian of killing his friend, a court is organized, with Old Four Eyes as judge, the Doc as prosecuting attorney, and Parson Bill as counsel for the Indian. In his testimony Jackson states that his partner was killed without provocation and that no other Indians were present. The Indian testifies, telling of his mother's presence and her murder. Recalled to the stand, Jackson admits the woman's presence, but says he shot her in self-defense as she was rushing at him with a weapon. Olaf, who has come in unnoticed, speaks up at this point denying Jackson's statement. After the surprise at his presence has subsided he is sworn as a witness, and relates truthfully the whole occurrence. After the summing up and charge the jury is asked its verdict.

THE jurymen consulted hastily a minute, and one who called himself the foreman arose.

"It goes agin the grain to believe an Injun agin' a white man, an' none of us has never done it afore," he began apologetically; "but in this yere case, as you said, it's too plain, an' we don't believe that there boy is tellin' a lie noways. He don't look like it. We therefore says that the Injun ain't guilty an' he gets all the plunder, which it is unanimous our opinion."

"Gentlemen of the jury, the cote thanks you for the jestice an' impartiality of your verdick, which he takes it is in accordance with the law an' the facts, an' the prisoner bein' an Injun shows that we all are fair-minded gents in this yere camp. That's all, gents. You are discharged. The barkeep can now open up an' do business," said the court with great dignity and much relief.

"Hold on, jedge!" interposed Parson Bill quickly.

"Have you got anything more to submit?"

"I have, sir."

"And what is it?"

"There has been murder done. My client has been proved innocent, but at the same time Dead Shot Jackson has been proved guilty."

"But, great—" roared out Jackson.

"And I urge that he be arraigned for the wanton and unprovoked murder of an Indian squaw—unnamed," went on Parson Bill with great severity.

"Why, you never—would you bring a white man to trial jest for killin' an Injun?" asked the Doc in unbounded amazement.

"That's just what I would do," returned Parson Bill emphatically.

Strange to say, something in the courage of the man and his decision for justice, his purpose to give fair treatment even to an Indian, touched the hearts of the assemblage. Their expressions of approval were unmistakable. Dead Shot Jackson realized it at once and to the full. In the temper in which those men were, they might even try him and lynch him. He was certainly guilty, and though he had still a number of friends and followers, they kept discreetly in the background now. His only hope was in immediate flight. He acted with astonishing quickness. He snatched his revolver from the table, incidentally picking up the judge's also. Leveling them at the crowd, he calmly remarked that he would send anybody that attempted to stop him after the squaw. Before any one could grasp him, he backed out of the door, jumped on his horse, and galloped away.

He had too good a start and was too well mounted to make pursuit worth while. Besides, after reflection, most of those present were glad that he had got away. The woman was only an Indian, after all, and really Indians did not count. Although Old Four Eyes and Parson Bill urged it, no pursuit was undertaken. After the excitement had quieted down a little, the barkeeper reopened the bar. One of the miners lifted little Olaf up on it and said:

"Here's the little yeller-haired kid that dared to defy the terror of the camp! Gents, the likker's on me; fill up your glasses, an', barkeep, git the boy somethin' light an' tender, fit for a kid."

"There ain't nothing fit for no kid in this establishment, I takes it," said Parson Bill, frowning and relapsing into the vernacular now the trial was over.

"Which I takes it that you don't refer in a personal way to the goods sold in this yere place," retorted the barkeeper, leaning over the bar and returning the frown with interest.

"Not at all; but no likker ain't fit for kids."

"Well, I have some light wine which I keeps for ladies especial," said the barkeeper, "an' it ain't a-goin' to hurt him."

He proceeded to fill a glass, which he thrust into little Olaf's hands, while amid uproarious laughter the others proceeded to charge their own glasses with more fiery and potent spirit.

The boy appeared to be very much troubled at the unusual situation in which he so suddenly found himself.

"Don't be frightened, sonny," said the barkeeper reassuringly. "They don't mean you no harm; they're only goin' to drink your health. They're proud of your pluck an' what you did."

"Men," pleaded Parson Bill, "don't do this."

"Shet up!" said the man who was treating; "you had your say at the trial. Give us a chance for ourn. Here's to the health of the little Norwegian."

"I should think," said the boy solemnly when he could be heard over the uproar, "that you would not want to be drinking with a dead man lying outside, and on Sunday, too. As for me, I thank you very kindly, but my mother said for me never to touch it." He set the glass down gently on the top of a case full of cigars. "And I won't do it," he added decisively.

"Well!" began the man who was treating the crowd, "if that ain't the rummiest go I ever heard."

"Gents," said the barkeeper, "this'll be on the house. As the kid says, it's Sunday an' there's a dead man outside. The Black Pup will remain shet up till after the funeral, which I suggests takes place at two o'clock this afternoon precisely. We'd ought to bury Bud Wallace proper in an hour, an' them that can't hold their thirst till that time kin replenish their private stock now. I follers the kid's example. Here goes my drink."

To the amazement of everybody, he poured the contents of his own glass on

FLOWERS TO THE DEAD

BY MARGARET E. SANGSTER, JR.

DECORATION DAY, day of flags, and flowers, and green, grass-covered graves. Decoration Day, the time of sobs nd tears, of prayers, and memories, nd smiles. Decoration Day!

It comes only once a year, this brave oliday, on the boundary line between lay and June, spring and summer-me. Schools give a holiday and banks lose. Business is shut up, and the ired workingman hangs a flag out ver his porch, and rests. Old soldiers, ottering on canes, soldiers bent and hite-headed, waiting for the last taps" to be sounded, get out their uits of blue or gray, covered with arnished gold lace and brass buttons, nd hobble to the cemetery to lay a reath on some comrade's last rest-ng-place.

It is a beautiful thing to think of a ation celebrating a day—setting it part from all others—for the purpose f honoring the nation's heroes.

I was sitting in a trolley car when lady entered—a woman no longer ery young, with a pale, sorrowful ace. She wore expensive black, and er two carefully gloved hands held a uge dewy mass of roses. Like an asis in a desert they filled the dusty ity air with sweetness and color. In little while a small newsboy dragged imself up the step and presented a rimy transfer to the conductor.

"I found it," he confided loudly to a nan seated near the door. Then he ramped down the aisle, and climbed p on the seat next to the lady.

"Them flow'rs are swell," he told her n a soft, wondering tone of voice. "I ever saw any like 'em before." Rev-rently he touched the nearest blossom vith moist, grimy fingers.

The lady moved down on the seat, utting several feet of space between erself and the small intruder.

"Don't touch them!" she ordered rossly.

Several blocks farther on she got ut, her arms full of her fragrant bur-len. With halting footsteps and tear-illed eyes, she turned in at a great narble-columned cemetery gate. She was taking her roses to lay on the rave of some loved dead one. I was orry for the woman; but I could not elp thinking of the little newsboy. He was very much alive, and a single lower would have meant paradise to im.

I know a girl who had a very dear friend—a friend who meant more to her than I could possibly put into words. One day, the friend died and left her plunged in grief. A year after, the dead girl's birthday came around, and the day before the anniversary I happened to meet my friend on the street. We went to tea together. I did not speak of the absent one, but suddenly, as we sat quietly gazing out of the window, the girl began to talk.

"Margaret," she said, "something has been bothering me. I want to ask you if I'm doing right."

"Perhaps I won't help any. I'm not so good at advice—but go on."

"You see, it's this way," she told me. "To-morrow is Alice's birthday—the first birthday when we haven't been together for ten years. I had earned five dollars—it seemed more personal that way—and I was going to buy flowers for her grave. I was just on my way to the florist to order them when I met a woman I know—a woman who used to wash for us. Margaret, you should have seen her. Her eyes were large and black and her cheeks were perfectly hollow. I asked her what was the matter, and she said she was hungry. Hungry? She was starving! And so were the three children that belonged to her! Well, I told her that I would find some work for her to-day, and then I gave her all the money I had. It was only after she had left me that I remembered Alice's flowers—I can't get them now. Do you think that she'll mind—very much?"

"Mind?" I groped blindly for words. "Mind?" Of course not! She would be glad and thankful if she only knew."

Do you think so too, friends of mine?

One day this week I felt rather blue and unhappy. It was a dark, gloomy day, with a biting wind coming around the bleak corners and a heavy rain that fell drenchingly to the ground—a steady downpour of big splashing drops. Somehow the world inside my office seemed very lonely and gray. I had a headache, my work had been going badly and I was rather discouraged. When the mail came in—a big package of letters to be opened—I was not much cheered. But my special guardian angel was on duty that day. When I cut the first envelope, I found a plain little letter, written in pencil on cheap paper, by an unknown lady, old enough to be my grandmother. But the words, lightly written in an old-fashioned hand, fell across my heart like a ray of golden sunshine, through the grayness of the rain.

"Dear Friend," read the letter, "I have been seeing your pieces in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD for some time, and I made up my mind to write to you. Some people believe in keeping their kind words and their flowers and their love until a person is dead. But I don't. I want you to know, right now, that you've cheered me up lots of times, and that I like your stories and that I like you."

Now, I don't want you to think that I am disapproving of Decoration Day. The world is stupid enough and matter-of-fact enough to forget easily the heroes who lie in our cemeteries. But we should consider the living, too. Let us place roses over the little green mounds, but don't let us overlook the pleading child-hands that are stretched out for their sweetness. While we honor the memory of those beautiful spirits that have passed from us, let us not forget the living, breathing souls that need our help.

It is not necessary to save all the flowers, the kind words and the kisses until lips and hearts and minds are cold and dead.

THE GREAT REPUBLIC

LORD of a people once oppressed,
God of the men of Lexington;
Father of those who stood each test,
That Freedom's battle might be won:
Out of the hearts which dare to die,
Out of the lands beyond the sea,
Out of their gloom the shackled cry
For liberty—for liberty!

Master of those who gained the fight,
Guide of the hosts at El Caney;
Friend of the flag that waved for right
At dawn upon Manila Bay:
Wherever souls are scourged as slaves,
Wherever kings are tyrannous;
Wherever States approach their graves,
They look to us—they look to us!

God of the Israelites of old,
Father of Him they crucified;
Giver of mercies manifold,
Hope of a nation balance-tried:
If we shall point the upward way,
If we shall lead, as seems thy will;
If we shall end the despot's sway,
Thy guidance still—thy guidance still!

LOCATING THE KINGDOM OF GOD*

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON BY DR. AND MRS. WILBUR F. CRAFTS

THE kingdom of George V is England; the kingdom of Victor Immanuel, Italy; of Constantine, Greece; of Wilhelmina, Holland; but where is the kingdom of God? An aged Christian was trying to tell where it is: he laid his hands one over the other upon his heart and said: "It is something here," and then pointing to the sky and looking upward, he added "and it is something there." This is not at all the idea those proud Jewish leaders, called Pharisees, had of the kingdom of God. They thought that when the Messiah (Christ) should come from heaven he would bring more than royal pomp with him, and that he would set up a kingdom that would far outshine in splendor and power any kingdom in the world. They confidently expected that they themselves would rank as ambassadors to that kingdom because they were so punctilious in all religious observances, even going beyond the requirements given by God himself through Moses. And so the Pharisees were disappointed in Jesus when they saw him going about as a wayfaring man, a friend of sinners, healing their diseases and forgiving their sins. Instead of a throne, Jesus announced that he had "not where to lay his head."

But the Pharisees thought that there might be a turn of affairs if Jesus was indeed the expected Messiah and that he would yet reveal his glory. One day a group of Pharisees asked Jesus, "When cometh the kingdom of God?" And Jesus answered: "It cometh not with observation" (great show). "Believe not those who say 'It is here,' or 'it is there'; for behold, the kingdom of God is within you." They exclaimed to each other: "He is not the Messiah, we must look for another." And that note has been handed down through all the centuries by the chosen people of God to whom the Messiah was promised.

When the Pharisees turned themselves away Jesus had something to say to his disciples, Peter, James and John and the others, about the kingdom of God. He said it should be known in every part of the world, and he compared it with the lightning that sometimes makes the whole sky bright. So shall the Son of Man be in his day. His kingdom shall be a world kingdom. The promise of God is: "I shall give thee the heathen for thine inheritance and the uttermost parts of the earth for thy possession." (Ps. 2: 8.)

[illegible]

Did the disciples understand Jesus' sayings about the kingdom of God? Jesus certainly tried to make it plain to them. They were not to see him assume the ways of a king, instead they would see him suffer and be rejected of men, as they did in his trials before the high priest and Herod and Pilate, and in his death upon the cross. People were going to go on in their ordinal ways of living, just as they had done in the times of Noah and of Lot. And death was to come drenching those who lived and worked together. How then should the disciples know that the kingdom of God was to come, and why did Jesus teach them to pray: "Thy kingdom come." Because "the kingdom of God is within you"—in the hearts of all who love and serve him.

"Something here and something there." The saying reminds us of the rainbow. It is featured in the sky by the rain drops falling "here" with the light of God "up there" shining through them. We may take the rainbow as an emblem of the kingdom of God, and with its beautiful colors we may compare the graces which appear in the lives of those who have given their allegiance to the kingdom. Connect with the seven colors seven graces of the Christian life: Love, joy, peace, long-suffering, gentleness, goodness, faith.

Love. Every little child as soon as it can talk should be taught this simple rhyme:

Little deeds of kindness,
Little words of love,
Make this world an Eden
Like the heaven above.

Depend upon it, it will be put into action in childhood, youth and old age.

It has been said: It is not the deed we do, but it is the love in the heart of the deed that the Lord is looking for in those who belong to his kingdom.

Joy. Dan Crawford, the missionary, home in England on a furlough, was asked by a cabinet minister what had impressed him most when he came back to civilization after nearly twenty-five years in the long grass of Africa. He replied the biggest change he saw was "the loss of the English smile." "Nothing on four legs ever smiled," he added. "The smile is the flag of the soul."

The Japanese have seven gods of happiness. They are grouped together on a boat, a jolly-looking crew: one is fishing, and has a fine fish on his hook; another is fanning himself; a third is meditating; a fourth is pleased with some object which he has in his hand; a fifth is examining a box of treasures; a sixth is playing on an instrument of music; a seventh is dancing. Contrast with these the "Seven Secrets of Happiness" as given by Dr. James Mudge:

1. Happy are they that give themselves away to make others happy.
2. Happy are they that are content with little.
3. Happy are they that make soft replies.
4. Happy are they that speak always the truth.
5. Happy are they that hate iniquity.
6. Happy are they that love the unlovely.
7. Happy are they that become nothing (in their own estimation).

Peace. When our government was experimenting with submarine torpedo boats, one boat and crew were kept submerged for twenty-four hours without once coming to the surface. During that time there had been a severe storm, but when the boat was raised, it was found that none of the crew knew anything about the storm! And so if we are hid with Christ we shall have peace in our souls no matter how hard the winds of adversity blow.

[illegible]

Long-Suffering. Here is a proverb that comes to us from a missionary field: "Ashes always fly back in the faces of those who fling them." The best way is not to throw any ashes, such as uncharitable remarks, censure, stinging reparks, slander, etc. Try to overlook faults, and pray that it may be better farther on.

Gentleness. The late "Chaplain McCabe" (afterward Bishop McCabe) related the following incident:

[illegible] slightly intoxicated, was speaking everybody with his profanity. Suddenly Dr. Vincent began to sing:

Jesus, lover of my soul,
Let me to thy bosom fly,

When the song ceased, perfect silence reigned. The swearer was rejuvenated. After a time he came to Dr. Vincent, and said:

"Could I see you a moment outside?"

They went out together.

"How came you," said he, "to sing that hymn just now?"

The doctor replied:

"I heard you swearing, and I thought I would let you know there was somebody there who loved the name of Jesus."

"That's very strange," said the man. "My sister when she was dying sang that very hymn, and she made me promise to meet her in heaven. Could you pray for me?"

Down in the snow they knelt together, and the doctor prayed for the penitent man, and asked that he might have grace and strength to keep his vow.

The train came. They were separated, to meet no more, in all probability, till they meet in eternity.

Goodness. According to Lord Bacon there are degrees of goodness: "If a man be gracious and courteous to strangers, it shows he is a citizen of the world, and that his heart is no island cut off from other lands, but a continent that joins to them; if he be compassionate toward the afflictions of others, it shows that his heart is like the noble tree that is wounded itself when it gives the balm; if he easily pardons and remits offenses, it shows that his mind is above injuries; if he be thankful for small benefits, it shows that he weighs men's minds and not their trash; but above all, if he have St. Paul's perfection, that he would wish to be anathema from Christ for the salvation of his brethren, it shows much of a divine nature, and a kind of conformity with Christ himself."

The Old Major's Surprise

MEMORIAL DAY dawned warm and bright; the sun in glory rose, and gilded, till it seemed all fair, this world of joys and woes. In pensive mood the major sat and watched the breaking day; his form was bent, his face was sad, his hair was thin and gray. He gazed off o'er the sunlit slope where fair Mount Auburn lay; we saw him brush away a tear and heard him softly say: "No, boys; I cannot come to-day; the way is far too long; these weak old limbs heed not my will, which bids them to be strong, that I—the last of our brave band—might pay to you once more my earthly tribute e'er I cross to that far distant shore. But younger hands henceforth shall deck your graves with flags and flowers. They'll ne'er forget the boys who died for this great land of ours. So I must watch the children march, and bravely try to smile, that they may never guess the pain that racks my heart the while."

The clock struck ten, as on the porch we helped him to his chair; and o'er his head his time-worn flag we hung with reverent care, and none too soon; for fifes and drums we heard, and tramping feet. Three hundred children, six abreast, came marching down the street, while just ahead, there proudly rolled the school's "Memorial float," by four large snow-white horses drawn—a flag-trimmed floral boat. It stopped; two stalwart youths approached, and with the tenderest care, they bore off to the waiting float the major in his chair. "Good sir," they cried, "think you that we could celebrate this day, or think to march to yonder hill, and you not lead the way? Not while you're brave and strong at heart, with brain that's stronger still, shall we put in place one wreath or flag unguided by your will!"

Down the shady street the float rolled on with even, stately grace, but the charm of it all was the happy light on the dear old major's face!

the floor. One or two men followed his example, and finally the whole crowd did the same thing. One man there was who tried to drink his, but Parson Bill took it out of his hand, and remarked:

"There ain't no man goin' to take no drink at present."

And the wonder of it was that his action was not resented by the gentleman whose personal tastes were thus summarily interfered with in order to make the action of the camp unanimous.

CHAPTER VI

NEVER before had both saloons in Cañon Creek closed down twice in one Sunday. The Black Pup set the pace, as is often the case, for its elderly progenitor, the Red Dog. How far the presence of little Olaf Tryggvesson was responsible for the closing few thought to inquire, but that his share in it was not little was, of course, evident to the thoughtful.

There had been funerals a-plenty in Cañon Creek. Battle and murder and sudden death were no strangers to its streets. The ready weapon was often out. Life was cheap. To some degree there had been a thinning out of desperate characters by continuous, almost wholesale, assassination; and so long as the "gun men" confined their efforts to their own class there was more or less indifference to their gun play among the more law-abiding of the lawless town. But when the supply of these human targets began to get low and unequal to the demand, the desperadoes and bullies began to acquire the habit of shooting up the other more or less inoffensive citizens. It was felt that this was trespassing on good nature and that the practice had to be stopped. An example had to be made of somebody, and a generally understood warning had been sent forth that promiscuous and unprovoked shooting was not hereafter to be looked upon with favor in Cañon Creek. That it would not be tolerated, in fact. This was a great step toward law, order, and reform!

With the same idea had come a determination to change the method of disposing of the deceased. Instead of being buried, as it were, with the burial of an ass, without lament of any kind for the departed, it had been decided that funerals should hereafter be conducted with more form and decency. To be sure, the reform was outward and visible, rather than inward and spiritual, but there must always be some prompting of conscience even for an outward show of conformation to a rightful usage.

Bud Wallace had been one of the bad men, but not one of the worst men. It was the influence of Dead Shot Jackson which had done so much to drag Wallace down. Out of his cups the dead man had been generous, openhanded, and genial; in them—the reverse. Well, he was out of his cups now forever. Once a man was dead, Cañon Creek remembered the good in him and tried to forget the evil. They all recollected that it was Sunday, too. There never had happened to be an occasion for a funeral on Sunday before, and they were thus the more predisposed to quietness and even a rude form of godliness.

The plot on the hillside set apart for a graveyard already boasted of quite a tenancy. Most of them had been buried as hastily as possible. The funeral of Bud Wallace was by way of being a function. A grave was dug, expert miners doing that work rapidly. Great bunches of wild flowers were gathered. The grave was lined with them and the heaped-up earth covered with them. A long packing box had been sawed and nailed into the rude semblance of a coffin and the body of the dead man safely placed therein. His loaded revolver had been prudently placed close to his hand in the coffin, for, as one of the men sagely remarked:

" 'Tain't never safe for a gent to be without his gun in these parts an' you never can tell when he might need it elsewheres."

There was no real irreverence in the thought. It was the habit and custom of the times.

At the hour appointed for the funeral, the saloons closed their doors as agreed upon, and the entire population of the town—many men, a few sorry women, one or two dogs, and a solitary child—took up the line of march down the straggling street to the pine-shadowed section of the hill where the dead were laid to rest. Old Four Eyes was marshal and Parson Bill had been asked to conduct the service. He had demurred at first, but had finally agreed, with some misgiving, after having been vigorously urged thereto. Old Four Eyes marched at the head of the procession, preceding the coffin; Parson Bill, holding the hand of little Olaf, trudged after. Then came the women, and last of all, the men of the camp. It was a short journey and soon ended.

The coffin was lowered gently by means of ropes, and the men drew back and uncovered, staring at Parson Bill expectantly. This man had had a good education back East. He had been a decent sort of a chap once, and, compared with his surroundings, was a decent sort of a chap yet. But he was in no sense a religious man. He had never felt the power of God's touch. The Gospels were closed books to him. To him Jesus Christ was simply a name—a convenient expletive, lightly used. The extraordinary position in which he found himself and the unusual duty devolved upon him, would have confused even a man devoted to Christ. Still, he had accepted the task, and he realized that he had to do something. Nervously he cleared his throat and finally spoke, deliberately using the vernacular of Cañon Creek.

"Ladies and gents," he began, "which I'm unaccustomed to this duty an' only tries it 'cause you all insists an' 'cause there ain't nobody else who's willin' to tackle the job; an' 'cause it don't seem right that we should bury a human bein' jest like a dog, which ain't saying that some dogs can't give some humans cards and spades an' discount 'em. Though Bud Wallace wasn't that kind. You all knowed him; you knowed that he was free, open-handed, an' generous. You knowed that he never went back on a pal or a friend; that as long as you needed anything you got your share of what he had, or you got it all, so far as he was concerned. When he was in likker it was different. For the matter of that, it's different with the most of us when we're in likker. Dead Shot Jackson had a bad influence on Bud Wallace, as he has on most anybody, an' you all sees this is what he come to. Poor Bud wasn't what you call a strong character an' p'r'aps his end wan't so much his fault as 'twas Jackson's an' ourn. We ain't goin' to jedge him too harsh, I 'lows. He played the game, lost, an' cashed in. We don't know much about God in Cañon Creek, but we believes that he does the fair thing for everybody, an' I makes no doubt that Bud Wallace'll git kind treatment an' every kind of allowance for his youth an' inexperience an' the bad influences that surrounded him which— Gents, I'm that tired from talking out yere in the open air that I— An' yet this yere untimely takin' off of a bright young man had ought to be a lesson to us all, but I doubt if it will. An' may God have mercy on your souls, sez I. I guess that's all I'm equal to on this yere occasion."

Parson Bill wiped his perspiring brow and heaved a deep sigh of relief as he stopped, much abashed but exceedingly thankful that he had got through as well as he had.

"I couldn't wish no better funeral o-ration over me than what we've jest heared. Ain't that so, gents?" said Old Four Eyes, to which the "gents" showed their sentiment by clapping their hands, again not meaning any irreverence, for their faces were as solemn as the occasion warranted.

"Now I asks the ladies," said Old Four Eyes, turning to the women who stood near him, "to sing us a song. You've all heared 'em sing many a time, but never a hymn tune."

The "ladies" stepped forward, and with voices made sweeter by the reminiscences of earlier and happier times, managed to struggle through "There is a Happy Land, Far, Far Away."

They began bravely but ended in quavering and uncertain notes, interrupted by tears. They were bold enough on occasion, but this was not a time for the kind of forwardness to which they were accustomed.

"I guess that's all, gents," said Old Four Eyes solemnly, as their sorry voices died away in the silence.

"Seems to me," urged the man called the Doc tentatively, "we'd ought to have some kind of a prayer said for poor Bud afore we leaves him alone out yere on the hill."

New Questions, List No. 5

[In studying Jeremiah, remember that the sequence of chapters does not correspond to the sequence of events. Messages delivered during the reigns of different kings are often grouped together and in this way events themselves are not stated in the order in which they occurred. This fact is doubtless partly due to the episode referred to in question 5. Before studying Jeremiah read carefully II Kings 22-25 and II Chron. 34-36. Answer each question fully, stating references. All references from book of Jeremiah.]

1. (a) Where did Jeremiah live? (b) What passage indicates that his fellow townsmen did not accept his authority as a prophet? (c) From whom, and why, did he later purchase property there?

2. (a) Between the reigns of what two kings did Jeremiah prophesy? (b) Who was appointed governor after the overthrow of the last king?

3. (a) What did Jehovah do to Jeremiah at the time of his call? (b) What promise was twice repeated? (c) What three figures of speech did Jehovah use in assuring Jeremiah that strength would be given for his work?

4. (a) What foreign nation did Jeremiah declare would overthrow Judah? (b) What foreign king is twice called Jehovah's servant? (c) What advice did the prophet give the king of Judah when the invasion took place?

5. (a) Who was Jeremiah's scribe? (b) How did the king show his contempt for Jeremiah's written prophecy? (c) What did this act necessitate?

6. Find (a) three appeals to "execute justice" (or "judgment"); (b) a passage containing a warning to those who gather riches unjustly; (c) a passage rebuking King Jehoiakim for refusing to follow his father's policy of justice to the poor.

7. (a) What passage tells of Jeremiah's becoming so discouraged that he determined to cease prophesying? (b) In what words does he describe his inability to do so? (c) Where is God's word declared to be like fire and like a hammer?

8. (a) Find two prophecies of the Messiah as "the Branch." (b) How many times and where does the expression occur: "The Lord our righteousness"? (c) What four consecutive chapters foretell Judah's return from captivity? (d) What passages in these chapters promise a "new covenant" and what was this covenant to be?

9. (a) On what occasion did Jeremiah show great courage in the face of a threat of death, and what change took place in the attitude of his threateners? (b) How did Zedekiah show his weakness when Jeremiah was imprisoned? (c) How did he subsequently bring about his deliverance?

10. (a) What choice was given Jeremiah, and by whom, at the time Jerusalem was captured? (b) Where did he decide to live? (c) Where did he go at a later time, with others of the people who refused to obey his counsel?

Correct answers to list No. 4, also the complete Honor Roll for No. 3, will be given in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD next week.

BOTH SIDES OF COLORADO LABOR WAR

the origin of the so-called "mine guards." The largest number employed at any mine did not exceed twenty, and he says "they did not interfere with the strikers unless the latter left their camps to attack the property."

Violence, however, increased, and on October 23 Governor Ammons called out the State militia. Under their protection, many of the strikers returned to work. The troops were frequently attacked, but not a striker was killed or seriously injured. Governor Ammons, having no funds to maintain the militia, began to gradually withdraw them in March last. The strikers' big camp at Ludlow was a mile or two from the cañon in which some of the largest mines were located. There was much underbrush on the ridges, from which small bands of strikers would shoot into the camps. A considerable number of the men in the Ludlow camp were Greeks, Bulgarians and Montenegrins—ex-soldiers of the Balkan War—many being armed with high-power rifles. On April 20, 1914, twelve militiamen, while intercepting some strikers on the ridges, were fired upon and surrounded. They repulsed the strikers, who fell back on their tent colony, continuing to fire. What followed we give in the words of Mr. Osgood: "Before the fight started the troops saw a large number of women and children leave the tent colony and go to an arroyo, where they could be protected from the firing if a fight occurred. In some manner, which can probably never correctly be explained, a fire started in the tent colony. It is possible that the rifle fire of the militia may have set fire to a tent, or that it started from an explosion of ammunition, which was found in large quantities in the private tent of John Lawson, strike leader."

The strikers retreated from the tent colony and when the militia discovered that there were still women and children in the colony, they rushed in at the risk of their lives, under fire of the strikers, and rescued twenty-five women and children, and believed they had rescued all. It was, however, afterwards discovered that a number of women and children who had taken refuge in caves had been smothered to death. It is, of course, possible, he says, that they were smothered by smoke from the fire; but there is ample ground for the belief that they were smothered before the fire started by being crowded into too small a space without sufficient air. No woman or child was killed by the fire of the militia, and but one child was killed in the tent colony, a boy of twelve, who, according to the testimony of his father, was killed by the fire of the strikers.

A thorough investigation recently made by a commission exonerates the militia from any blame or from causing the death of any women and children, and, on the contrary, blames the heartlessness of the strikers, who exposed their families to danger in attacking the militia from their tent colony, where they must have expected their rifle fire would be returned.

The result of this fight was the dispersal of the strikers with considerable loss of life on both sides. They retreated to the hills, where they were reinforced from other camps, and next day they began to attack the mining camp of Delagua, "firing into the houses where there were defenceless women and children." Five company employees were killed and an unknown number of strikers. Nearby mining camps were attacked. Empire mine, near Aguilar, was fired upon; the employees retreated into the mine and the strikers attempted to dynamite the entrance and destroy the ventilating shaft and fan, which would have suffocated the occupants. Again the militiamen were called out, this time by the lieutenant-governor. The strikers proposed a truce, promising to prevent violence, and the lieutenant-governor agreed. The troops observed the truce, remaining in camp, but Mr. Osgood declares the strikers continued their attack on the mines, destroying life and property. He especially emphasizes the claim that "there is abundant evidence that the attack on the militiamen at Ludlow, April 20, and the attacks on the other mines, were planned by the officials of the United Mine Workers, for the purpose of intimidating and driving from the mines, in a final effort to win the strike, the peaceable and unarmed men who were at work."

Regarding Mr. John D. Rockefeller, Jr., President Osgood declares that he is merely a minority stockholder of the Colorado Fuel and Iron Company, and that it is unjust to hold him responsible on the ground that he could have ended the strike had he seen fit. Mr. Rockefeller's company "produces about 30 per cent. of the coal mined in Colorado, and he has no interest in the companies producing the other 70 per cent. and no control over their actions."

With regard to arbitration, Mr. Osgood holds it to be impracticable. "There are 10,000 men at work in the coal mines," he writes, "and less than 2,000 in the strikers' camps. If the strike were called off or settled the companies could not give many of these men employment, as, owing to trade conditions, the present force can produce practically all the coal that can be disposed of. If the companies had work for them it would be criminal to put them at work with the present employees, whom they have been fighting and attempting to kill. There is no justice in urging employers to arbitrate the question of employing, under any conditions, men for whom they have no work and who would be a menace to the lives of the men now working."

founded. We support them most heartily in demanding a fair, just and honorable settlement of all their grievances. We deem the exercise of the right of the Colorado miners to belong to the United Mine Workers of America as inherent and the establishment of a labor union among them as essential to the preservation of peace, the establishment of social justice and a protection against the imposition of unjust conditions in the future. Without the protection of a labor organization, what chances has an individual miner in dealing with powerful financial interests?

"We ask for peace. We will do all within our power to establish permanent peace. We submit that a sensible, honorable and humane way by which this can be established is through a conference of the representatives of both sides, at which a settlement, honorable and just, is brought about."

By Nippon's Lotus Ponds

A CHARMING book about Japan has been written by Rev. Matthias Klein, and issued by Fleming H. Revell Company, New York, entitled, By Nippon's Lotus Ponds. Mr. Klein is a zealous missionary, but in this book he becomes not the propagandist, but a keen observer of the life and spirit of ever fantastic and fascinating Japan. He has the soul of a poet and a strikingly gifted pen. The reader wanders with the missionary through out of the way places, getting the breath of Japan's flowers, hearing its odd speech and observing its mild, strange ways. Another recent Revell book which will interest many Bible students and Christian workers is Jesse Forest Silver's comprehensive review of pre-millennialist teaching, The Lord's Return.

2700 SAXONS Now in Use

When you place an order for your Saxon you buy a tried and proved car. A car that is making good throughout the land. A car that has proven its mettle on the hills of Pittsburgh, Seattle, Kansas City, Boston, Cincinnati. A car that is standing the strains of country driving in Michigan, Wisconsin, Pennsylvania, New England, Colorado, Texas and all the other states.

More than 2,700 Saxons are already in use and we are shipping them at the rate of 75 a day—an unprecedented record for a company in its first year.

A Year's Test in 30 Days

Saxons stand the trying test of owners' use, because long before we put the cars on the market they had received at our hands all the testing we could then devise. But we are still thinking up new tests. At Detroit, a Saxon has just completed a grind of 135 miles a day for thirty consecutive days.

Day in and day out this car has done its daily quota under official observation. It has gone a distance in thirty days of 4,050 miles, equivalent to a year's use in the hands of the average owner.

This Saxon made thirty miles on a gallon of gasoline and two hundred miles on a quart of oil. Think of it—half a cent a mile for fuel. Not a single repair was required throughout the long grind, and all the original tires look good for from 2,000 to 5,000 miles more of service.

Saxons are selling fast. Better see your nearest dealer and arrange for a Saxon ride. Write us to-day for catalog and dealer's name.

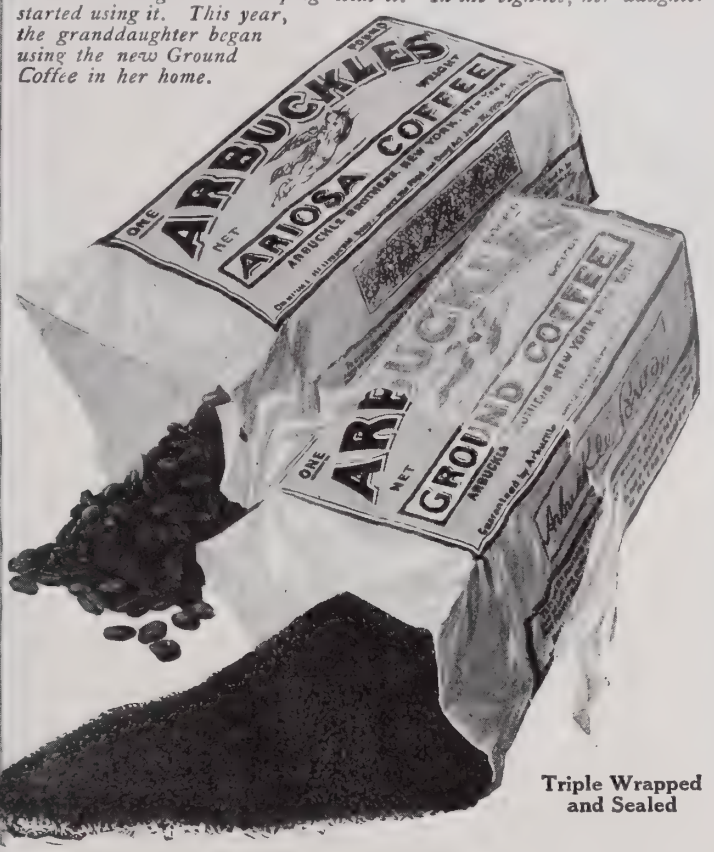
When Arbuckles' Coffee was first put on the market in the sixties, this woman began housekeeping with it. In the eighties, her daughter started using it. This year, the granddaughter began using the new Ground Coffee in her home.



Triple Wrapped and Sealed

In 1867 she began housekeeping with Arbuckles' Coffee

Since then, both her daughter and granddaughter have started housekeeping with it in their homes and are using it today

Why have three generations of this family used Arbuckles' all these years?

Because they like its flavor.

Because they know they can rely upon Arbuckles'—it never disappoints them.

Because they know it is all coffee—all pure, honest coffee.

Because it is always full weight—16 ounces to the pound—and because it comes to them fresh and full strength, protected from moisture and store odors by its specially treated sealed wrapper.

Millions more drink Arbuckles'

All over the country there are millions of other homes in which Arbuckles' is the coffee.

In fact, Arbuckles' Coffee has so many faithful friends that there's more used than all other packaged coffees put together!

And because there is such a vast amount of this coffee used, it is possible to give you more real coffee value for your money than you can get in any other coffee.

Now packaged in ground form

It isn't necessary to ask your grocer to break open a package of Arbuckles' in the whole bean and grind it for you. Arbuckles' Coffee is now put up already ground, packed in a triple wrapped and sealed, moisture-proof wrapper.

If you have not used Arbuckles' lately, order a package from your grocer today. You will quickly realize why it is the most popular coffee of America.

All this time, they have been securing premiums of real value

During all these years, these women have secured articles for themselves and their families by saving the signatures on the Arbuckle packages.

You can get these premiums too.

Notice the ones shown below and how easily you can get any of them your family wants.

Start collecting today; get one of these premiums and see what good value they are. You will be surprised to see how quickly you can get them.

Questions and Answers

R. J. H., Laredo, Texas. Many skeptics have argued with me as to the right of heathen to worship their own gods in their own way. I have repeatedly explained to them that Christ gave the command to preach the Gospel to all lands and to every creature. They maintain that we haven't the right to interfere with foreign worship of any kind.

If you will get your friends to study heathenism, they may come to feel differently about the obligations and work of the missionary. Tell them about the little girl babies in China who are thrown to the dogs to be devoured; tell them about the child-widows of India, condemned to lives of misery because of heathen superstition; tell them about the cruelties and degradations of Mohammedanism. Then ask them if they do not think we should go to them with the message of Jesus to lift them to lives of light and love and joy. If a man is starving it is worse than foolish to say that we have no right to intertere with his starvation. If he is starving and we have food we must give it to him. So we must take the Gospel to those who need it. That is why Christ commanded us to do so. He loves all the people of the world and wants them to receive the gifts of the Gospel. That is our obligation, to bring the needy heathen and the all-sufficient Christ together. "How can they hear without a preacher?" asks Paul. "And how can they preach except they be sent?" This involves the whole church in the obligation to spread the Gospel.

Anxious Inquirer, Claypool, Ind. "God First" is an excellent motto to keep steadily in view in all the relations of life. We think you do well to keep it in view in the home life, where it is so vitally important. With regard to the asking of a blessing at meals, it is a good plan to train the children to do it. We know of families where "grace" is very sweetly sung, and others where the children have been trained to respond promptly to a request to ask the blessing. Ordinarily, the husband, as the head of the household, performs this duty. If he be a Christian he will do it without urging. If not, then the duty devolves upon the wife, whose example may be the means of ultimately winning over the husband.

J. L., Newberg, Ore. "Is it proper in prayer to address Jesus at times and then God the Father?" Did not Jesus teach us to pray, asking the Father in his name for whatever we want?

One of the very greatest arguments for the deity of Jesus is that he allowed people to kneel and worship him. The apostles were horrified when dwellers in pagan cities attempted to worship them, and even the angel who talked with John refused to be worshiped. "See thou do it not," he said. But Jesus accepted worship as his due. He forgave the sins of the man sick with palsy (Matt. 9: 2), and of the woman who came to anoint his feet (Luke 7: 48). Others objected to his exercise of this power, but he would not retract. One of the earliest historical characterizations of Christians was that they offered prayers to Christ as God. This has been done all through the history of Christianity. And the results prove that it is a right thing to do. People ask Jesus for forgiveness and help and receive what they ask for. That was the simple prayer which changed the life of S. H. Hadley: "Lord Jesus, can you help me?" "I and my Father are one," Jesus said. The form of address makes no difference. The ordinary form is to address the Father in Jesus' name. But it is helpful rather than otherwise to vary the form occasionally with a direct address to Christ.

W. L. M., Macon, Ga. The word "Easter" is of Saxon origin, Eastra being the ancient heathen deity to whose honor sacrifices were offered in the springtime. The ancient Jewish festival of the Passover was a springtime festival, and as the Saviour's death and resurrection occurred during the Passover season, they are very appropriately commemorated in the spring. Into the name of Eastra naturally became associated with the Christian festival, and even after another heathen name superseded by Christianity, the name remained and the Christian festival became known throughout the world as the Easter observance.

Reader, Highland, N. Y. There were certain points in the character of Nicodemus which suggest that the man may have ultimately become a true follower of Jesus. He had a good knowledge of the Jewish law of truth, even in the midst of the Saviour's persecution. There is a tradition that, after the resurrection, he became a professed disciple and received baptism at the hands of Peter and John; also that in revenge for his conversion the Jews deprived him of his office, beat him, and drove him out of Jerusalem, and that Gamaliel, his kinsman, sheltered him until his death.

J. C. H., Rochester, N. Y. 1. The expression in Job 19: 26, "Yet in my flesh shall I see God," is corrected in the Revised Version to read, "Yet without my flesh," etc. 2. See John 8: 51; 8: 52; 11: 26 and similar passages. These are in the same spirit as the passage you quote (John 11: 25). The believer does not wait until the life hereafter to begin eternal life; he begins it here and now, and whether in the body or absent from it, he lives in Christ just as surely to-day as he will live in him a thousand years from now.

H. S. S., Roanoke, Va., sends this new version of a child's morning prayer:

Now I rise from rest and sleep,
I pray thee, Lord, my ways to keep.
To make me useful, pure and true,
And cause me thine own will to do,
And this I ask through Jesus, too.

Mrs. J. A. F., Trenton, N. J. The patriotic songs of a nation are, in a sense, sacred. Any attempt to tinker with or change them is naturally resented, and especially any adverse criticism, mocking at the spirit of loyalty to which they give expression. The attacks, some months ago, on "My Country, 'Tis of Thee" naturally aroused much feeling, especially as they came from the Catholic press, which has little sympathy with such religious sentiments as Dr. Smith's great hymn expresses.

W. H. G., Montague, Mo. There are many passages in the Bible which imply degrees of reward and of discipline hereafter. See Matt. 5: 12; 6: 1; 6: 2, 5, 16; Luke 6: 23; 1 Cor. 3: 8. See also the parable of the talents, the famous passage in Dan. 12: 3, describing the glorious reward of the winners of souls, and other passages.

THE YOUNG PEOPLE'S MEETINGS

NOTES ON THE CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR, EPWORTH LEAGUE AND BAPTIST YOUNG PEOPLE'S UNION TOPICS

Pure in Heart*

"BLESSED are the pure in heart, for they shall see God." What does it mean to have a pure heart?

We have read the verse many times, nd have thought wistfully and won- leringly about the promise it contains. Now let us study it deeply and prac- ically, trying to understand what it neans to be pure in heart, to learn whether the promise is meant for us r for some one else, to estimate what he prospects are of having the prom- se fulfilled in our own cases, to under- tand what it means to "see God" in he sense the promise implies.

You have realized many times, par- icularly if you have ever dipped into he study of psychology, that back of very act is a motive. That is, of ourse, every act that is conscious and oluntary. The matter of character ies back in these motives. It is the eason for your doing a thing rather han the act itself that makes the act ood or bad.

For instance, it would seem to be a ad thing to knock a man down. But f a man were killing a child it would e a right thing to knock him down. n the one case the man is knocked own because another hates him or is ngry with him. In the other case he s knocked down to save a child's life. The outward act is the same, but the notive is different, and the moral alue of the act in one case is bad while in the other it is good.

Throughout literature, in the Bible nd in other writings, the heart is poken of as the seat of the motives. Physiologists and psychologists locate hem in the brain, but we do know that esires and emotions seem to have a ery close connection with the heart. At any rate in human language the eart means the place where our affec- ions, our desires, our purposes, our notives dwell.

To have a pure heart, then, is to esire to do right; to speak and act with a pure motive—the motive of indness, helpfulness, obedience to God. That would seem to be a very easonable expectation; and a promise hat our hearts may be made pure ught to be an easy one to accept.

Our bodies often antagonize our real vishes instead of helping them. We esire to be helpful, but our bodies ave independent demands and de- ires, and we must, with strong wills, elped by the Holy Spirit, choose the ind, right, helpful thing rather than what is unworthy and harmful.

Can we not see, then, very clearly, hat this promise of blessing is for us—not for some one else with a tronger will or a more vigorous mind, ut for us, one by one, by name? Jesus id not mock people when he talked to hem. He said very plainly: "Blessed re the pure in heart." He must have neant that any one who would seek his blessing could find it. All the ther classes of people he mentioned as eing eligible for blessing are matter- f-fact enough: The poor in spirit, hey that mourn, the meek, they that unger and thirst after righteousness, he merciful, the peacemakers, the per- ecuted. Some of these classes it might e difficult to get into: the persecuted —some one would have to persecute us efore we would belong there; they hat mourn—some sorrow would have o come to us before we could claim hat; except, of course, as we should nourn for our sins. But the promise f blessing to the pure in heart is open o everybody, and open at once. This s particularly plain since the death of esus on the cross. He opened there a fountain in the house of David, for in and for uncleanness." And the infinite power of the fact of his death can make our hearts pure just as soon as we will by faith accept the cleans- ing.

To see God—that is the particular form the blessing of the pure in heart is to take. And this, too, is a promise which may be fulfilled here without waiting till we reach the "other country." Of course we shall see God more clearly then, with vision all un- dimmed; but we may, if we will, see him here and now. We see him in the person of Jesus, who comes to be our best friend, our closest companion. We see him in the presence of the Holy Spirit, who dwells in our hearts with his power and comfort, who helps us in our work and meets with us when we worship. We see him in others whom we may help, remembering his words that inasmuch as we have done it unto the least of these we have done it unto him.

Safe and Content*

MANY busy people, reading the twenty-third Psalm to-day, in the present intense atmosphere of service and activity, might say that it is a selfish psalm. It has often been pointed out, as a help to our faith in getting the wondrous comfort of it, how many pronouns of the first person it contains. Dividing the psalm into the lines of poetry which form it, you will see that every line has a first per- sonal pronoun: "I," "me," "my," all the way down. "My Shepherd," "my soul," "my head," "my cup," "I shall not want," "I will fear no evil," "I shall dwell forever," "He maketh me to lie down," "he leadeth me," "they comfort me," "goodness and mercy shall follow me."

Well, is the psalm selfish? That de- pends, dear young brother or sister, upon what you are going to do with all these blessings when they come to you. This psalm might be uttered in a very selfish way or it might be uttered with the very highest conceptions of service and self-sacrifice.

Jesus said in his high-priestly prayer: "For their sakes I sanctify myself." It is selfish to seek blessing just that one may be happy now and hereafter. It must be acknowledged that that was a fault of some of the earlier ideas of religion, even the Christian religion. It was not a fault of the Bible, but of those who failed to understand the Bible.

But we shall be worse off than before if we get so interested in service that we shall forget our need of God. "Without me ye can do nothing," Jesus said. And that saying is desperately true. But with him we can do every- thing, as Paul, who said: "I can do all things through Christ who strength- eneth me."

So let us all take this blessed old psalm of security and contentment and throw ourselves into passionate, gal- lant service for others, bearing Christ's own peace in our souls during the tur- moil of our battle against sin, and lead- ing others into the peacefulness and safety we have found in the fold of our eternal Shepherd.

The Story of a Little Chinese Maid

MANY readers of this journal have already taken advantage of our offer and have sent for free copies of the booklet entitled: Little Hai Ieh Tsi (the "Abused Leaf"); a Story of Childhood and its Perils in Heathen China, which The Christian Herald has just issued. All who are interested in sweet and innocent childhood will find this a fascinating story, and especially those who sympathize with the children of China. A postal card addressed to The Christian Herald will bring you free copies of this illustrated booklet. Address, "China Orphans, Christian Herald, Bible House, New York."

If a King's Doctor told you to take Sanatogen—

you would be impressed—for you know that a King's Doctor must be a man of highest professional standing. You would take Sanatogen feeling confident that it would do the things promised; give you fresh vigor, fortify your system as no other tonic could.

Now it is a fact that the private physicians to seven Emperors and Kings, after personal observation of its effects, have endorsed Sanatogen in writing. (See, for instance, the accompanying letters of Dr. Ott and Dr. Kuhn.)

So you see a king's physician might recommend Sanatogen to you, if you could consult him—indeed there are over 19,000 practising physicians who would tell you to take Sanatogen, because they all have written us of its wonderfully beneficent effect, of its power to strengthen the nerves, to help digestion, enrich the blood and generally uplift the system in a natural, lasting manner.

Such are the credentials of Sanatogen—they should, they must convince you that Sanatogen has a service to perform in your case.

Sanatogen is sold by good druggists everywhere in three sizes from $1.00 up.

Dr. Ernest Ott,
Late King Edward's physician, Marienbad, writes: "I have been using Sanatogen for a number of years in my practice with excellent results. These results have been notably good in the case of elderly people when it was desirable to build up the strength, to stimulate bodily functions, and to improve the circulation of the blood."

Dr. Conrad Kuhn,
Physician to the Court of H. I. M., the Emperor of Austria, writes: "I have had the very best results from Sanatogen in the treatment of frail, anæmic children and patients suffering from wasting diseases."

ANSWERED PRAYERS

A HAPPY testimony comes from E. M. S., Somerville, N. J., who writes, thanking God for deliverance from the morphine habit. A reader from Ohio writes: "The great burden of sorrow and anxiety and trouble about which I wrote you several weeks ago (concerning the poor widow and wayward sons) has been partially lifted. The boys have returned, and are at work. We thank the Christian Herald Family for their prayers, and praise God for this, also for answered prayers in improvement of health and other blessings." Mrs. A. L. writes from East Bloomfield, N. Y.: "I am writing to acknowledge answer to prayer in behalf of my little son who was healed after weeks of anxiety."

Mrs. James L. O. writes: "Some time ago I wrote requesting prayer for the healing and conversion of a brother. My brother, who was ill with nervous troubles from which we had little hope of his recovery for months to come, was restored to health in a very short time after I had sent my request for prayers. His recovery seems like a miracle to me, and I cannot thank God enough. I wish to thank the Christian Herald Family for their prayers, and request them to unite with me in praying for my brother's conversion." A. C. B. writes from Bridgeton, N. J., thanking God for answer to prayer in a temperance victory won by the refusal of a judge to issue a desired license.

Acknowledgments of answers to prayer have also been received from:

A Reader, Hillsboro, N. C.; J. B. N., Montville, N. J.; E. E. A., Honesdale, Pa.; J. H. E., New York City, N. Y.; R. E. M., Harmony, N. J.; A Reader, Indiana; L. H., Atlantic City, N. J.; Mrs. W. S. P., Dixon, Calif.; Mrs. B., Sharon, Pa.; Miss M. S.; Kingsley, Mich.; Mrs. C. O., Washingtonville, N. Y.; A. M. A., Keeseville, N. Y.; Mrs. J. M. McL., Wilson Creek, Wash.; S. E. B., Dunellen, N. J.

Requests for Prayer

Mrs. L. L. M. requests prayer for a revival and temperance victory at Thomasville, Ohio; Mrs. A. L. J., for revival in a church at Pulaski, Va.; F. D. McG., for victory of the campaign for Statewide prohibition in Idaho; J. W. W., of Leavenworth, Kan., that he may be victorious in his fight for law enforcement, also that his work in city missions may be successful and that more souls may be won for Christ.

A grieving father, a retired clergyman, requests prayer for the conversion of an erring son, that he may return to his wife and children. A mother asks prayer for her son who was preparing himself for the ministry, but is prevented from continuing his preparation and work by tuberculosis of the eyes. Mrs. H. S. requests prayer for the recovery of a daughter who is a patient in a hospital for the insane. A young lady who is an invalid, suffering greatly from severe nervous and organic trouble, and who has been urged to become a Christian Scientist, wishes prayer that she may be restored to health and strength to take up the duties of life again.

An elderly lady asks prayer for the conversion of her husband, seventy-three years of age, and that he may be delivered from the appetite for strong drink. A reader from Upper Sandusky, Ohio, requests prayer that the son of a friend be delivered from the drink habit and that a daughter of this same mother be relieved of partial blindness and remain contented in her home, which the brother's bad habits make sad and troubled. J. B. and A Reader from Washington, D. C., ask prayer that friends who have been estranged may renew their companionship.

The following friends request prayer for a deeper work of grace, or express in other ways their desires for personal spiritual blessing:

Miss C. A. (to be restored to health and salvation); L. V. W.; M. S. E.; Mrs. Y.; Mrs. K. H.; R. E. M.; G. M. C.; M. E. E.; Miss M. S.; M. H.; Mrs. E. E.; E. J. C.; N. D. S.; Mrs. M. C. L. Romances of Modern Business*

ARNOLD BENNETT, the English novelist, came to America not long ago to look us over. After visiting several of the largest American cities, he gave some interesting impressions to a Chicago newspaper man. Flinging open a window commanding a view of a wide stretch of Chicago's business district, he said: "There is your American romance—there in the large office buildings and marts of trade! The child of the world's nations is leading them!" The British writer got to the heart of this vital, throbbing country. And if we look at our national commercial life as did this noted visitor, we shall find romance, absorbingly interesting stories, on every page of our magazines, not only in the imaginative writings of noted authors, but in the true stories of actual business successes. There are many such romances in the history of American industry. Here is one of them:

The Story of a Fountain Pen

AT THE rear of a news-stand, under the stairway in the old Tribune Building, in lower New York City, a remarkable discovery was made a little less than thirty years ago.

Pausing to make a purchase, the advertising manager of a well-known magazine, by one of those curious turns of chance, first learned of something that was to be of vital interest in the world of invention and was to lighten the work of thousands in many nations.

Back of the news-stand stood a man with a small tray of goods which he was offering for sale. He was a kindly appearing man, slightly under middle age. His stock of merchandise was limited indeed. It contained only a half-dozen articles. But his goods were his own, of his own thought and invention.

This he told the advertising man; and so much did he interest his listener that, after the story had been told and the uses of his product demonstrated, there returned to the magazine office a man with a firm conviction that he had made a tremendous discovery.

The man who displayed his pet invention at the old Tribune Building news-stand was Lewis Edson Waterman, and the article he showed was the Waterman Ideal Fountain Pen.

The story of how these pens became so widely known and of how an enormous industry was developed in a few years is a very significant one. Waterman discovered the way to make a fountain pen; but a magazine advertising man discovered Waterman—and therein lies the story.

That was a little more than twenty-nine years ago. The inventor had confidence in his pen, but no money with which to market it; nor had he any business affiliations or influential friends. To-day, the L. E. Waterman Company estimates that approximately a million and a quarter of their fountain pens are sold annually. Many millions have been sold in practically every country throughout the world.

The inventor had been a schoolmaster in his early manhood; then he became an insurance agent. During these experiences he realized the difficulties that lay in depending on the old-fashioned pen and ink. "Why," thought he, "can I not make a pen with a receptacle for ink and an easy flow?" He worked on the idea and soon had made the first Waterman fountain pen.

Coming to New York in 1880, he was informed that others had had the same idea, that more than two hundred other fountain pens had been patented. He investigated these and found they all had proved unsatisfactory. Learning their deficiencies, he perfected his own pen.

Then came the problem of selling his pens, of letting people know about them. How was he to do it? The inventor, knowing nothing of advertising, could think of no other way than going out and personally peddling his product. This he did, beginning in 1883 and continuing through part of the following year.

It was in 1884 that the Waterman fountain pen came to the attention of the magazine advertising manager. "Let me run a quarter-page advertisement of your pen," he suggested to Mr. Waterman. But the inventor had not the money this would cost. Then the advertising man did an interesting thing: so convinced was he of the commercial possibilities of the fountain pen that he loaned Mr. Waterman the price of the quarter-page advertisement.

This first business announcement of the L. E. Waterman Company appeared in a magazine in November, 1884. Prior to that, Mr. Waterman by personal solicitation had sold about three hundred of his pens. Within a few weeks after the advertisement appeared such a large number of orders had been received that Mr. Waterman negotiated a loan of five thousand dollars, with which to contract for additional advertising and have the pens made and delivered.

The business increased in strides so rapid that it soon became necessary to form a stock company and map out a systematic scheme of manufacturing and distributing the pens. An intelligent campaign of advertising was being carried on in a number of national magazines. In 1888, nine thousand pens were sold; seven years later, the number of orders had reached sixty-three thousand; in 1900, the business reached two hundred and twenty-seven thousand sales; in 1903, the orders had passed the half-million mark, and in 1912 nearly a million and a quarter pens were sold.

And what was the secret of this phenomenal success?

Mr. Frank D. Waterman, president of the L. E. Waterman Company, answering an inquiry as to what advertising had done for their business, with a wave of his hand indicated the entire scope of their industry.

"Any one can see for himself what continuous periodical advertising has done for the L. E. Waterman Company," he said. "The business speaks for itself. The right kind of advertising is the life of trade. You must have the merchandise, of course, and the merchant must back up what appears in his advertisement; but advertising in the proper mediums is the real force of business.

"Advertising to-day is not merely giving publicity to your wares. The merchant to-day through advertising makes a reputation, and he has to live up to it. Advertising is sure fire, if it be of a sincere, convincing, confidence-gaining quality.

"Years ago, people asked the founder of the Waterman Company why he advertised so much in the magazines, and he replied that he couldn't get along without them. He found they paid, and so have I."

This story is interesting from more than one point of view. It has been shown that through the force of national magazine advertising a large industry was created. But there is another side—that of the significance of this creative power to the public at large.

There is a broad, ethical mission in connection with the development of an industry such as the L. E. Waterman Company. Thousands of people are served, office and written work is facilitated, time is saved and life generally made easier and happier for many the world over.

CHURCH AND STATE

Who Financed Huerta?

rom the Western Watchman, St. Louis, May 7, 1914

EVERYBODY is asking the question: "Who is Huerta's adviser?" We have before stated in these columns that Huerta as on the best of terms with the atholic party and was a personal iend of the Archbishop of Mexico ty, with whom he dined regularly ice a week. This brings him in se touch with the personnel of the ostolic legation. Church diplomats e the safest and shrewdest in the rld. Canon law is a safe guide in e intricate defiles of international litics. Who suggested to Huerta at it was illogical and inconsistent demand an apology from one you fuse to recognize? It knocked our ourceful Secretary of State completely off his feet, and he has not d a leg to stand on for a month. t the guarded assent to mediation pressed by the wily Indian is a sterpiece of diplomacy. He has all e machinery of mediation in motion, t no one can say just what he will . He has the whole world guessing. All the great leaders of men since e Christian era began were in close uch with the church, and were ided by her wisdom and her experience.

The Archbishop's Flight

om the New York Times Special, May 13, 1914

VERA CRUZ, May 12.—The Most Rev. sé Mora, archbishop of Mexico, ared here to-day from the capital, companied by the Right Rev. Jesus ria Echavarria, bishop of Saltillo. th are on their way to Rome.

The archbishop told Father Reaney at he was bound for Rome to confer out matters of his archdiocese. It believed in some circles here, however, that the archbishop, who recently d a sharp tilt with President Huerta, s virtually expelled from the capital the dictator.

When asked his opinion of President erta the prelate replied: "So far as church is concerned, Huerta is ither good nor bad."

The archbishop would not criticize y of the political factions, nor ess any decided opinion regarding em, except to indicate that the northn rebels were against the church.

The Church's Loans to Huerta

ra Cruz Despatch in New York Times, May 13

HE alleged determination of Villa to deal severely with the dignitaries the church, and the disfavor with ich rebels regard those who wear robes of the church, are said to ve for a basis the financial assistance which the church has given to Huerta. Early in Huerta's campaigns against the rebels, the church contributed 7,000,000 pesos, and the amount is said now to have reached 20,000,000 pesos. The churchmen are known to have protested against some of the assessments, but were virtually forced to pay.

As to State-Paid Chaplains

THE idea of "R. T." in the article, "State and Church Separate," in your issue of April 22, is exactly to the point. Protestants put up the steps by which the Roman Catholics ascend and take possession of the house. This fact is evidenced by the position now assumed by the Federal Government and many States, in granting public money to pay chaplains for the army and navy, the legislatures and correctional institutions.

The writer has had occasion to investigate conditions along this line in the State of Illinois, and he has found a situation that can only mean one thing ultimately: the complete overthrow of Section 3, Article 8 of our State Constitution, which specifically forbids the payment of the public money for any sectarian purpose whatever.

Where one chaplain used to be employed two are now serving, one a Roman Catholic and one a Protestant, both paid by the State. It will not be long until the Jews will demand a rabbi, the Mormons an elder, the Christian Scientists a reader, all supported by the State. What was formerly recognized as a policy seems now established as a principle, and each succeeding administration is edging up a little more. It is a sad thing to record that the writer knows personally of a Protestant minister who even solicited a politician for the position of "Protestant minister" at a certain State institution.

Rome is quite willing that this condition should exist. It is the system frequently recommended by some of her writers: that the State shall support all religions, as is done in Belgium; and of course Rome, with her compact and superior organization, will control the situation.

Protestants seem to be walking right into the open trap. The only remedy is the one recommended to cure a sheep-killing dog—cut his tail off right back of the ears. Romanism cannot thrive without state support; Protestantism cannot thrive with it, and the sooner we learn this fact the better.

And the Protestant churches too should support representatives in the places mentioned in the same way as they do their missionaries or other welfare workers—out of church funds. Let us indeed "keep church and state separate," not only in theory but in fact.

SERVICE FOR OUR READERS

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD wishes to be of utmost usefulness to its readers. We can not feel that our responsibility ends with providing good literature and art; or that so long as we do not deliberately print advertisements of questionable character, no more can be required of us. Much of our time is given to investigating the integrity, ability and responsibility of the advertisers who use our columns. It is time cheerfully spent in your behalf. Often we have devoted hours of careful research before printing an advertisement only to find in the end that no objection could really be raised. I'll we cannot ask your confidence and take less pains than we do in return.

Then there is your part in this matter of friendly service; if you buy something advertised in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, which you feel has not been a fair return for your money, do not, we beg of you, ever think that it is "too small to bother about." When you do not get a square deal, say so; if not for your own sake, then for the benefit of other readers, and so help us in our earnest endeavor to make THE CHRISTIAN HERALD of the greatest possible service to one and all. Every time you patronize an advertiser in these pages, you help us, by your support of one whose support we need to carry on this work. In return we pledge you our guarantee:

DID THE WORK

Grew Strong on Right Food.

You can't grow strong by merely exercising. You must have food — the kind you can digest and assimilate.

Unless the food you eat is digested it adds to the burden the digestive organs have naturally to carry. This often means a nervous breakdown.

"About a year ago," writes a Mass. lady, "I had quite a serious nervous breakdown caused, as I believed, by overwork and worry. I also suffered untold misery from dyspepsia.

"First I gave up my position, then I tried to find a remedy for my troubles, something that would make we well and strong, something to rest my tired stomach and build up my worn-out nerves and brain.

"I tried one kind of medicine after another, but nothing seemed to help me.

"Finally a friend suggested change of food and recommended Grape-Nuts. With little or no faith in it, I tried a package. That was eight months ago and I have never been without it since.

"Grape-Nuts did the work. It helped me grow strong and well. Grape-Nuts put new life into me, built up my whole system and made another woman of me!"

ANSWERS TO FINANCIAL QUERIES

G. T. I., ONTARIO, CANADA. We do not recommend the 25 per cent. preferred stock of the Silver Foxes and Furs, Limited, of Prince Edward Island, as an investment for conservative people.

M. H., MINNESOTA. All Texas land, except around the gulf coast, requires irrigation. We should not invest in any land, no matter where it is located, unless we have first visited that tract and seen for ourselves just what the land is worth.

R. I., NEW YORK. Sulzberger & Sons Co. 7 per cent. preferred stock is quoted at 91¾ bid, 92¾ asked. We should not sell. American Woolen 7 per cent. preferred at 70 returns about 9.10 per cent. on the amount invested, but must be regarded as a speculation, not an investment.

MRS. A. P. O., NEW JERSEY. The Autopress Company, after a long struggle to keep afloat on a watered capitalization, recently went into the hands of receivers after the institution of an insolvency suit in the United States District Court. The stockholders have no very cheerful outlook. The $10 stock is quoted at 13 cents.

J. W. C., KENTUCKY. Approved first mortgages on city real estate are about the soundest form of 6 per cent. investment we know. There is seldom a default of principal or interest. One Western mortgage firm reports that in over thirty years no patron of the house has lost a cent of his invested money, nor been required to wait a minute for his interest when due.

C. S., NEW YORK. The "bonds" of the real estate company are merely unsecured debentures, promissory notes, based on the company's ownership of city tax liens. The concern's literature puts stress on the safety of tax liens, which is quite true. But we fail to see any connection between the investor and tax liens. To make the investment secure some form of outside trusteeship should be established.

F. H. H., MAINE. Short term corporation note issues paying full 6 per cent. are not plentiful. When such investment opportunities are offered they are sold by bankers quickly. The recently offered three-year 6 per cent. secured gold notes of the West Penn Traction Company are suggested as meeting your requirements for a well protected six per cent. investment. These notes are due March 1, 1917. Dealer's name will be mailed.

J. C. T., TENNESSEE. The laws of Canada governing mortgages are quite as strict, quite as protective, as the laws of the United States. Defaults have practically never been made by Canadian municipalities. This cannot be said of the record of municipal obligations in this country. The Province of Alberta, Dominion of Canada, ten year 4½ per cent. gold debentures are believed to be absolutely sound investment for an "aged woman." The bonds are selling on a 4.80 per cent. basis, not on a 5 per cent. basis as you state.

T. DEW., DELAWARE. Convertible bonds, like other bonds, are direct obligations of the issuing companies, but are seldom secured by any form of direct lien. The essential feature wherein convertible bonds differ from other issues, however, is that they may be exchanged for other securities, usually capital stock of the issuing company, under certain conditions and at specified times. Among the conditions, which are fixed by the terms of issue, are the prices at which the bonds and stock may be taken as a basis for exchange. Generally the bonds are exchangeable at par, while the stock is fixed either at par, or at some other stated price.

REV. M. R., FLORIDA. The convertible feature of the Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul 4½ per cent. debentures (1932) is not changed by the issuance of a $470,000,000 99-year general and refunding mortgage which the Missouri Public Service Commission authorized last November. Moreover, the convertible 4½s, in their original status, were merely unsecured notes but are now given equal security with any new mortgage placed upon the road. The issue now becomes legal investment for trust funds and savings banks and will be the equivalent of a mortgage bond. These bonds give very attractive opportunities for the small investor, for they may be obtained in $100 denomination.

A. E. L., IOWA. (1) Illinois Central is not likely to increase its dividend this year, if reports of current earnings are taken as criterion. (2) We see no reason to prevent Chicago Great Western Railway paying a dividend during the fiscal year which commences July 1, 1914. Last year the road carried over an excess over charges, which might have been made applicable to dividends, of $1,245,039, as against $183,000 the year before.

C. B. H., OHIO. For your $500 investment we suggest a first lien fifteen-year five per cent. sinking fund gold bond of the Springfield (Missouri) Railway and Light Company. Springfield is a growing city of 40,000 population. The company operates over twenty-three miles of street railway within the city and also does the lighting business of the city. A CHRISTIAN HERALD reader may obtain these bonds to yield about 5¼ per cent. The name of the banker will be sent by mail.

MRS. E. D. F., INDIANA. Upon reflection you will see it would be obviously futile for this department to undertake to report on the value of a farm mortgage. One must depend wholly on the responsibility and reputation of the firm offering the mortgages for sale. The firm in question has been in business for more than thirty years and stands well, so we think you will be safe in accepting their representations respecting the mortgages. Farm loans are regarded highly by conservative investors.

C. L. C., MICHIGAN. Read the "big land opening" advertisement again more carefully. You will see a qualifying statement if you read very observingly. The "bureau" doesn't guarantee everybody an "orchard." If, the company qualifies, you don't happen to draw a nut farm you will be given instead a certain number of shares of stock in a company which will operate a big orchard for profit. We wonder what proportion of people responding to the terms set down in the company's advertising will become the actual possessors of land titles!

W. F. W., MASSACHUSETTS. Because a cold storage plant for "fish, food and bait" on Cape Cod pays annual profits of 96 per cent., it doesn't follow that a similar plant on the coast of Newfoundland could become equally profitable, or, in fact profitable at all. The codfish caught in Newfoundland waters are immediately salted for export, while the fisheries at Provincetown and other Cape Cod settlements have an immense trade in fresh fish, and therein lies the difference. We doubt if such a plant on the Newfoundland coast would pay.

F. E. R., CALIFORNIA. The following municipal bonds are legal investment for California savings banks and fully meet your requirements for a sound investment for your $5,000:

City of Long Beach (Calif.), 5 per cent. water bonds at a price to yield 4.85 per cent.

City of Santa Cruz (Calif.), 5 per cent. municipal improvement bonds at a price to yield 4.80 per cent.

City of Richmond (Calif.), 5 per cent improvement bonds at a price to yield 4.80 per cent.

C. E. R., VIRGINIA. The Mutual Reserve was organized under the name of the Mutual Reserve Fund Life Association in 1881 as an assessment company and wrote a very large volume of business on that plan until 1902, when it was reorganized as the Mutual Reserve Life Insurance Company and from that time it wrote only legal reserve business.

The company was badly handicapped by the assessment business remaining on its books, and on February 15, 1908, it was declared insolvent, and was placed in the hands of a receiver for liquidation. We understand that the receivers may still be addressed at 55 Liberty Street, New York City.

The Postal Life Insurance Company, 35 Nassau Street, New York City, entered into a contract with the receivers of the Mutual Reserve which was also approved by the United States District Court, whereby the legal reserve policy-holders of the Mutual Reserve were circularized by the Postal. All those who responded underwent a medical examination, and about $2,500,000 of this business was placed on the Postal's books, and proved profitable to that company.

Five Breakfasts Like This | Five Suppers Like This

All Ten Are Free This Week

Now again we invite you — as once each year — to breakfast and sup with us. Breakfasts for five of you—suppers for five. And all with our compliments—nothing to pay.

Take this coupon to your grocer—that is all. He will give you for it a package of Puffed Wheat—a full-size, 10-cent package. And we will pay him for it.

Don't hesitate. We make this offer only once a year. And you will serve Puffed Grains hundreds of times when you learn their fascinations.

Just a Revelation

You read of Puffed Grains. But cold type can never picture these delightful foods. The first taste always means a revelation, and we want you to have that taste.

'Twill reveal these things to you:

Bubbles of grain, thin-walled and porous, with a taste like toasted nuts.

Airy morsels — dainty, fragile,— ready to melt at a touch of the teeth into almond-flavored granules.

Grains puffed by steam explosion to eight times normal size. Made three times as crisp as crackers and four times as porous as bread.

100,000,000 Explosions

Each of those grains of Wheat or Rice contained 100,000,000 food granules. In Prof. Anderson's process these grains are shot from guns. And each of those granules is exploded from within.

Thus the granules are broken for ease of digestion. By no other method is whole grain ever made wholly digestible.

This Coupon Pays

This coupon pays for a package of Puffed Wheat. Go get it. Serve with our compliments.

Serve in the morning with sugar and cream, or mixed with any fruit. For supper serve like crackers floating in bowls of milk.

Use like nut meats in home candy making or as garnish for ice cream. Or heat the grains in butter and let the children eat them dry, like peanuts, when at play.

Then you will realize what Prof. Anderson did for you when he invented Puffed Wheat and Puffed Rice. Simply cut out this coupon, lay it aside and present it when you go to the store.

"THE TORN HAT"

From the painting oy Thomas Sully in the Museum of Fine Arts, Boston, Mass.

If you have not developed your own favorite methods of using Ivory Soap for the cleansing of delicate summer apparel, the following tested directions will be of interest:

Laces and Embroideries

Shave half of a small cake of Ivory Soap into a half-gallon glass jar. Fill jar half full of boiling water, screw on lid and shake until soap is dissolved. Soak lace or embroidery in clear, cold water for a few minutes, then put in the jar and shake until clean. If a colored lace, rinse in three clear waters. If white, set the jar on a piece of wood in a kettle half full of boiling water and boil for fifteen minutes. Rinse in two clear waters, then in blue water. Lay lace flat between Turkish towels and pat dry. Shape and pin to a clean cloth on an ironing board. Do not iron.

Lawns, Organdies, Batistes, Etc.

Wash in warm, weak Ivory Soap suds to which salt has been added. Also put salt in hard water for rinsing and rinse twice. Make smooth, thin starch and put this in last rinse water with a pinch of powdered alum.

Fine Linens

Make a thick lather with Ivory Soap in warm soft water. Soak the piece in the lather and rub spots gently with the hands. Rinse in several warm waters until there is no trace of soap. Then rinse once in boiling water and follow immediately with a rinsing in as cold water as you can obtain. Hang in sun but iron without sprinkling before the linen is entirely dry.

White Silk Gloves

Wet thoroughly in cold water, rub gently with Ivory Soap and pat in the hands. Rinse in clear, cold water and dry in a dark room. It is best to wash white silk gloves at night.

White Shoes

With an old tooth brush rub Ivory Soap Paste (see directions inside wrapper) into the surface thoroughly but not roughly. Let it dry fifteen or twenty minutes. Then brush with a stiff brush.

IT FLOATS

For laundry purposes ask for the laundry size of Ivory Soap.

COPYRIGHT 1914 BY THE PROCTER & GAMBLE CO CINCINNATI

FROM hat to shoes, there is no part of a summer outfit which cannot be kept like new with Ivory Soap. Delicate trimmings, fine embroideries, hand-made laces, shimmering silks, sheer dress goods, exquisite lingerie, white footwear — all yield to its gentle cleansing without the slightest loss of their original beauty.

MEXICO PEACE CONFERENCE IN SESSION

TWO forces, or indeed three, threaten the early downfall of General Huerta. These are the Revolutionists, the Peace Conference at Niagara Falls, Ont., and the administration at Washington. At the time THE CHRISTIAN HERALD goes to press, it is currently believed that General Huerta has anticipated the result of the overwhelming odds against him by announcing his intention to resign office, in the event that his delegates to the conference so recommend. That his elimination is a condition which the conference must consider is also understood. For the Revolutionists, General Villa is known to be dominated by the purpose to overthrow Huerta, and rebel victories on the field of war bear out Villa's confident boast of soon occupying the Mexican capital. In preparation for any contingency, the United States Government continues to work unceasingly for a peaceful solution of the entire Mexican trouble, at the same time perfecting plans for any necessary use of the nation's armed forces.

On May 20 the Peace Conference convened in the Clifton Hotel at Niagara Falls. The American delegates are Justice Joseph Rucker Lamar of the Supreme Court, a native of Georgia, and Frederick William Lehmann, ex-solicitor-general of the United States, of Missouri, whose birthplace was Prussia, both men of national standing. The delegates appointed by General Huerta representing the de facto government in Mexico are Señores Rabasa, Rodriguez and Elguero. Acting as mediators in this conference are the representatives of the three South American countries, Domicio da Gama from Brazil, Romulo S. Naon from Argentina, and from Chile, Eduardo Suarez Mujica.

The Mexican delegates were entertained in Washington by the Spanish Minister Señor Riano on May 16, the American delegates attending the reception, and passed through New York on their way to Canada May 18. They have consistently declined all courtesies offered by the United States Government. The party, which included, besides secretaries, several ladies, members of the delegates' families, were objects of much interest and made an excellent impression by their bearing and diplomatic treatment of all inquiries concerning their mission. They were entirely non-committal on rumors as to their authorization to present Huerta's resignation at the conference, and on other points; but the press stated on what was said to be reliable authority that the Mexican delegates would insist upon knowing what were the plans of the United States in case of the resignation of Huerta; also, who would be acceptable as provisional president; and if the United States would procure the co-operation of the Constitutionalists and the termination of the revolution without the taking of Mexico City.

It was claimed that Huerta would attempt to name conditions precedent to his resignation, including a voice in selecting his successor, the arrangement of a loan of several hundred million dollars to Mexico, and the right to Mexico to use Magdalena Bay for naval purposes at an annual rental. It cannot be definitely stated, however, in advance of the actual meeting of the delegates, just what points will be discussed.

The attitude of General Carranza as chief of the Constitutionalists is the principal disturbing factor as the conference opens. He is reported as standing firmly on the right and ability of the Constitutionalists to adjust Mexico's internal problems and pacify her people. He refuses to consider the co-operation of the United States or any other government in that work, and declares that the Constitutionalists will not recognize the conference nor its findings, especially any recommendation as to a successor of General Huerta. Continued successes of the rebel arms would probably strengthen any such attitude, and to that extent might embarrass the conference. Each day sees some readjustment of all the factors in the problem, and at the present time "nothing," in words attributed to Huerta himself, "is positively determined." It is certain, however, that much depends upon the outcome of the pending battle at Saltillo.

The taking of Tampico, important as that was, was but preliminary to the still greater battle pending at Saltillo to the north. There was heavy loss of life when Gonzalez drove Zaragoza from Tampico. The Federals are said to have blown up their barracks and committed other depredations as they retired, and to have destroyed bridges on the line of retreat. The rebels took control of the city, but did not occupy it in force, preferring to follow fast after the fleeing Federals. The latter were making for the town of San Luis Potosi on the line of the railroad straight to the west. Gonzalez was able to out-maneuver them and coop them up in a small town east of Potosi. He then prepared to co-operate with Villa in the great attack on Saltillo, at which place the Federals who were defeated at Torreon have made their stand.

Villa claimed to have upwards of 20,000 men for operations against Saltillo, which is defended by perhaps half that number. Both sides are well armed, though rumors allege a serious shortage of ammunition in both camps, but chiefly among the Constitutionalists. If true, this may be a deciding factor against the latter. A decisive defeat of the rebels at this stage might prove disastrous to their cause, as it is claimed that Huerta has held in reserve the flower of his forces at Mexico City, not having been willing to weaken his defenses there by sending relief to northern towns. Preliminary engagements between Federals and rebels in the outlying sections about Saltillo indicate that some reinforcements have been received by the Federals, and that the issue of the real battle cannot be confidently prophesied.

The rebel leader Zapata, who is holding his bandits in check with difficulty to the south of Mexico City, may refuse to wait for Villa's approach and take the capital on his own initiative. There have been reports of a panicky apprehension of such an event, but for the present they rest in the category of gossip. Other bands are operating in a desultory way in different sections. The rebels include a biplane in their military equipment, and have already done some deadly work with bombs dropped from mid-air. Mazatlan, which is garisoned by Federals, was recently bombarded to some extent from aloft, several casualties resulting.

AMERICAN AND MEXICAN PEACE DELEGATES AT SPANISH LEGATION RECEPTION

COURT HOUSE PARK IN TEXAS' CLEANEST TOWN

MAYOR SPANGLER OF BONHAM AND A CLEAN-UP CREW

CLEANING UP A STATE

BY LOUISE E. DEW

IN THE vigorous two-year campaign recently ended, in which eighty towns competed for the honor of being designated the cleanest one in the Lone Star State, Texas ended the scourges that have devastated it from earliest times, made good health contagious, and proved that there is a relation between dirt and the death-rate.

The State was just recovering from an epidemic of meningitis, which had carried off thousands of people and cost the State a fortune, when Dr. M. M. Carrick, State quarantine officer, induced every one, from the prominent citizen to the humblest pickaninny, to join the cleaning-up campaign. He had whole towns swatting flies and carrying on tin-can brigades. "Make good health contagious" became the slogan of the State, and "Clean-up Kid" badges were worn by the children who enforced both law and order. And there was always the incentive of the $1,000 prize which Colonel Frank P. Holland, a Lone Star State pioneer, had generously offered through the doctor to the town or city that would prove itself the cleanest at the end of the campaign. Civic crusaders all over the big State took up the work. Ministers preached civic hygiene from their pulpits; schools taught it; clubs promoted it; newspapers printed reams about it; city officials enacted laws providing for it; good women worked for it, and insisted on laws enforcing cleanliness. School children lived up to their clean-up badges, and piled tin cans, swatted flies, and impaled street refuse on their sharpened sticks, laying the latter, like sheaves, before the city fathers for their reward.

Dr. Carrick went from town to town preaching cleanliness and health. Not only did he preach, but he personally inspected the stores, factories and public buildings. If back rooms of groceries, bakeries and other food dispensaries were dirty or badly ventilated, if dogs and cats were found sleeping on flour barrels, if there were open containers for flies to alight upon, the doctor firmly intimated that it would be wise to correct such conditions if the proprietors did not wish to be boycotted by the housekeepers of the town.

Dr. Carrick insists that the success of the clean-up campaign was largely due to the co-operation of the women of the State. The women of each town entered in the contest, organized themselves into clean-up community clubs, not only to preach the gospel of sanitation, but to enforce it. The first step was to take account of the status of their own homes, for as the doctor pointedly remarked in one of his health talks:

"What will it profit you as individuals if you save the whole city from disease and lose your own child? Cleanliness, like charity, should begin at home."

"Pride," said he, "usually keeps the front yard clean; common sense should keep the back yard so. In many of the eighty towns the chief reason for complaint existed between the back door and the alley fence. Uncovered garbage receptacles, or garbage dumped on the ground to be scattered by stray cats and dogs, afforded banquets for myriads of flies bred in piles of stable refuse. That is why I urged the women to commence in their own homes."

Housekeepers' committees made inspections wherever application was made. A white list was published weekly, in the local paper, of the names of those storekeepers whose premises were kept in sanitary condition. At first some of the merchants we indignant, but they soon fell into line. Each town wa divided into sections with a prominent man in charg —usually about every four square blocks. Blanl were prepared with which every residence wa scored. There was no discrimination. But few too offense at criticisms. Those who did object to suc inspection, and who were indifferent to the sugge tions made by the Clean-up Committee, had notic served upon them by the marshal. In Oklahom where they are a trifle more arbitrary in their metl ods, they took possession of a man who refused t follow such suggestions, and exhibited him abou town in a cage as "the man who wouldn't clean up. Such methods did not become necessary in Texa.

As an aid in the campaign, leading stores di played models of sanitary garbage pails, rubbis fire cages in which waste can be burned witho being removed, sanitary receptacles for waste i parks and school grounds. The effect of publicit was also tried. On comparing one section of a tow or city with another, competitive interest was in mediately aroused.

The contest was divided into three classes—c 5,000 and not more than 12,500 population; of 2,50 and not more than 5,000 population; of 1,200 an not more than 2,500 population. Of these Bonha was the winner in Class A, Gonzales in Class B an McGregor in Class C. In each case the prize mone was used to improve and beautify the town. A Bonham, for example, the city park was beautifie It took just two years to clean up Texas, durin which time Dr. Carrick personally inspected ever town entered in the contest.

MEXICAN PEACE CONFERENCE IN SESSION

Vera Cruz remains quiet under American occupation. General Funston has observed Clean-up Day, 300 American soldiers, armed with pails and brooms and shovels, making a thorough job of the matter. In seventeen hours, according to reports, the city was clear of puddles, refuse and all other unsanitary accumulations of the years, and was then placed under sanitation laws which astonished the natives but have already won their outspoken approval.

The hospital ship Solace reached the Brooklyn navy yard on May 14, bringing 102 sick and wounded men who had fought at Vera Cruz. These men gave out the first stories of the taking of Vera Cruz told here by participants, and their account made it clear that the American forces were given a task of extreme peril. The young fellows who were brought down by the bullets of the Mexican snipers were often occupying isolated positions in the streets. In all cases characteristic bravery was displayed, and it is evident that Americans avoided all unnecessary killing of the Mexicans.

The preliminary session of the Peace Conference is declared to be auspicious. The Brazilian envoy Da Gama welcomed the delegates with the following significant address delivered in English:

"The mediators extend to you a sincere welcome and trust that we shall not part until your hopes have been realized. Your hopes are undoubtedly the same which encouraged us to undertake this work of international sympathy, born of the ardent desire that the serene progress of civilization in America be not interrupted by the disastrous violences of a war between sister nations.

"Many and varied are the thoughts which agitate our minds at this dramatic moment of our political life, but dominating all, as an imperative call of American sentiment, duty impels us not to spare any effort to discover and elucidate the causes of the Mexican conflict. It was with this end in view and in order to ascertain the sources of the evil and provide a speedy remedy that we invited you, gentlemen, to attend this peace conference, held in this hospitable and friendly land which, although under the flag of a powerful European empire, entertains and stands for sentiments of the purest Americanism.

"Delegates of the United States of America, delegates of the United States of Mexico, we are in need of your enlightenment in order to be able to arrive at a solution of the conflict which threatens the harmony between your nations with destruction. It is apparent that we are working for you in the first place, when we offered you our services as mediators in the present conflict, and there is no doubt of the fact that you will derive the principal benefit from any good results of our work.

"But as an ultimate and more important consequence than a mere solution of a contention between nations, whose differences are not due t antagonistic results, we must throw such light upo this conference as will show it in history as an ex pression of the sentiments of that human solidarit which, not content with enjoying peace in solitud seeks to extend its benefits to all.

"This is the sentiment which prompted our tende of good offices to the United States and to Mexic which sustained our spirit when almost overcom by the difficulties which beset our path and which gentlemen, with your aid and with the aid of you governments, we hope to be able to overcome. I we succeed in doing so we shall have affirmed by striking example the never-to-be-forgotten lesso that even in the midst of the turmoil of battle an the unchained tempests of hate and conflicting am bitions, above all this tumult, will be heard the clea and persuasive voice of reason counseling the sac rifice of persons in favor of the collective interest of the people and spreading the gospel of peace an justice."

The conferences began at 3.30 Wednesday after noon, May 20. An air of hopefulness prevailed The address of welcome was interpreted by out siders as indicating that the Mexican delegate consider themselves as representing all of Mexic and not alone the Huerta government, and also a presaging the ultimate elimination of Huerta an all presidential aspirants of whatever party whos elevation would incite factional strife.

A SPRINGTIME TOUR IN JAPAN

BY MATTHIAS KLEIN

"WHICH path leads to yon august temple?" I asked. "Just honorably deign to ascend the broader one, please," came the answer from a homely-faced but kind-earted farmer, who with his little, chubby wife, ith her shaven eyebrows and black-painted teeth, as working in his garden patch. My goal was a ountainous village discernible through the trees, ear one of our Awaji stations.

Damp ocean breezes strike hills and mountains, it in the narrow gorges the warming sunrays seem neutralize all the severity of wind and weather. almy is the air and tranquil is the scenery. On nd on I climb, ascending tier upon tier of rec-ngular and many-shaped terraces, all buttressed ith stone or sod. Patches of luxuriant barley are rced to a speedy harvest; the breath of spring is the air. Pink cherry, plum and pear blossoms, terspersed with the crimson rosettes of the amellia, the groves of large-leaved and fruitful quat trees, with tall, straight palms and crooked ine and other evergreen, entrance the traveler, as e traverses the path which leads beside a streamlet hat is plunging onward to the sea. Looking down the lower end of the gorge, as luxurious as a heatfield in May, the rich plumes of evergreen amboo are tossed by the wind.

Those thatched huts, those gray huts, what cozi-ess and charm linger about them! A veritable aradise, you would think; but there are also un-leasantnesses. "This lovely Sicilian climate!" the ewcomer exclaims; but alas! ere long he may find most enervating and nerve-racking; while the atives, but for the Western customs more or less troduced, need neither hat nor parasol to protect heir bristle-covered, sun-browned heads.

Up to the temple, amidst the festive throng, I ave come to distribute Gospel tracts. The courts re lined with booths; quack medicine peddlers make peeches, and in order to hold the crowds now and hen shoot off fire-works or perform showy tricks ith keen-bladed swords or mammoth tops. In the enter of the yard near a stone laver where the wor-hipers wash their hands ere they pray, stands a ig saké tub, into which the people cast their sacri-cial rice and the not at all clean-looking coppers. n a side building a number of scribes are busy with he native brushes, writing congratulatory notes nd also prayers for the eager buyers. In a small, ell-lighted structure that stands beside a flight of tone steps, about six or eight hard-faced elderly riests, squatted on mats in a circle, hold a con-lave, while the chubby and not over-bright looking colytes loiter about the hallway.

But the path of duty also led me to other places. While calling at a little "general utility" store, a larion-voiced female came rushing in and ordered bunch of rice paper. Like many of the Japanese women, she evidently cared little if the whole neighborhood knew what she was about. She was purchasing the paper for a present, and ordered the drooping-eyed, stolid-looking young clerk to prepare it for that purpose. To make it ever so simple, he at least must tie it up with the indispensable little red-and-gold cord and write on its face some appropriate sentiment; what, however, he did not know. "Write 'Congratulations,'" she retorted in a high-keyed manner; "no, 'Felicitations.'" The young fellow finally decided to write the former, though this evidently put his scholastic abilities to a test which found them wanting, for many Japanese themselves are not well versed in writing Chinese script. So he dashed into the next room to consult the young lady of the house; then, still unassisted, he made a bee-line for another older personage, who, snatching the ink-brush out of his stubby fingers, with a few strokes deftly wrote the character on the palm of his hand, which the clerk then copied on the rice paper, and with a breath of relief handed it to the customer.

It was toward evening when a slovenly-looking fellow with a traveling restaurant landed on the street corner, rang a little bell and announced to all that the evening repast was now in readiness. Many of the poor people nowadays find it hard to buy a morsel of rice or even barley, and as a last resort turn to this "macaroni" restaurant, where they are able to get a meal for one or two cents. I wondered if this man got his supply from the manufacturer whom I saw kneading the dough on a straw mat with his feet, not a great distance away.

Dipping ball after ball of this "macaroni" into boiling water, and again in succession into separate bowls, the vendor adds a sprinkling of cheap soy and green onion cuttings and sticking into them the crudest kind of chopsticks, presents them to his miscellaneous crowd of customers. Sturdy coolies leave their cart shafts, haggard women release loads of boxes and bundles from their backs, precious children sorely in need of handkerchiefs and staggering under the heavy load of an often unwearied younger brother or sister, aged from two weeks to three or four years—all hollow-chested on account of excessive toil and their constant stooping posture, with great rapidity bolt down this seething mess. The noisy gulpings and much gurgling and sucking in of the breath which so distress a Westerner may be excused by the fact that in their minds it only shows a polite appreciation of their food.

A ten-mile tramp finally landed me at a cozy mission chapel. A goodly crowd of unusually bright and clean-faced boys and girls, ranging in age from ten to fifteen, sat with precision and respect in long rows facing the Christian teacher. Never has the writer seen a similar crowd that loved the church or Sunday school better. And a marvel it is, for only seven or eight months before were Christian services begun at this town; since which time, with but few exceptions, the drawing power of the Gospel has held their unswerving devotion. This evening's service was strictly theirs. They sang the hymns with vim and gladness. The first address on "Seek ye the Lord while he may be found," seemed to go home to every heart, and the native evangelist tactfully and with much earnestness followed with pleadings and exhortations, after which it seemed there was nothing to do but to pray. Of course, the speakers prayed, but imagine a crowd of such fine young people praying to Jesus the Saviour, while in every one of their homes in this town of about five thousand, their parents relentlessly turn their eyes morning and evening to the shelf of family gods, which these youths declare up and down to be worthless objects! Remember, these prayed in unison, being urged to trust the Saviour fully, and a number were moved to tears.

Does the reader find time to pray for Japan? Then may we ask him to strike his hardest blows in behalf of the Sunday schools. At this chapel in Awaji the "Sun of Righteousness was arising with healing in his wings," while just six feet across the narrow street it was yet Egyptian darkness. There, in a Buddhist temple, priest and people, amidst well-timed hand-clapping, prostrated themselves before gods of stone, and the noise of clanging bells and rattling drums broke hideously upon the night air.

Being still eight miles from home, I hired a jinrikisha. The runner, an old man, did not advance very rapidly, and being chilly, I the more readily took cognizance of the fact. Coming to a safe place where there were no onlookers I called a halt, and alighting from the cart insisted on the old man exchanging places for a while. He broke out in a roar of laughter, and at first positively refused. For a foreigner, though by many considered a barbarian, to honor him in such a way was, in Japan, an unheard-of proceeding. But explaining that, being chilly, I wished to do this for the sake of the exercise, he finally yielded, and, doubtless for the first time, was paid for riding in his own cart. I also had another reason for this episode. I, for once, wished to taste a little of the sensations of these jinrikisha men who can keep up a sort of trot for from five to ten miles without intermission. There are six hundred of these human horses on Awaji Island alone. I started up with a brisk trot, the old fellow chuckling and laughing with such glee that the fishermen in the shallow sea waters below could well share in his merriment. I did not stay in the shafts long; cold and sleepiness had forsaken me, and ere long I landed safely at home.

FIVE POINTS MISSION TO GO

ONE of the best known Gospel landmarks of New York is about to be swept away before the never-ceasing march of odern progress. The old Five Points ission will shortly be razed to make oom for a section of a civic center, hich will include a new courthouse.

Five Points, one of the oldest sec-ons of New York, received its name rom five streets which there opened nto a square. All were the haunts of class which included criminals of very description.

In the center of the area into which he Five Points opened was a triangu-ar space surrounded by a wooden aling, which in later years was alled "Paradise Park." On the south ide, opposite this little park, stood a uilding known as the Old Brewery, hich had been erected in 1792. In 837 it was turned into a tenement, nd soon gained a bad pre-eminence as ne of the vilest of human rookeries. n the north side of it extended a pas-ageway known as "Murderers' Al-ey," and one of the courts was styled he "Den of Thieves." In all, it oused three hundred human beings.

The immoral and unsanitary condi-ion of the locality moved the hearts of hristian men and women, especially he latter, and the Ladies' Home Mis-ionary Society of the Methodist piscopal Church determined to take ction. In 1848 they secured a room t the corner of Little Water and Cross Streets for a Sabbath school. It had a capacity of two hundred. The first Sabbath it was filled. Neglected childhood, hardened, reckless humanity encased in filth and rags were there. Through the power of grace a great work was to be accomplished. In 1849, a missionary was appointed to labor among the outcasts of the locality. In the following year the bishop sent the Rev. J. Luckey, an ex-chaplain of Sing Sing, to take up the work. He and his devoted wife penetrated the dark alleys and explored every den of Cow Bay and the Old Brewery; they had a winning smile, a word of cheer and a helping hand for all, and the inhabitants were attracted to them. Much encouraged, the good women looked around for a suitable building, and at last the Old Brewery itself was selected. Within six months $13,000 was in hand, and the Old Brewery was purchased. By the middle of December, 1852, the demolition of the infamous building began. On its site, on the 27th of the following January, the cornerstone of the new mission building was laid.

Within ten years after the new mission was established Five Points was metamorphosed from a cesspool of sin to a home of morality and respectability. It ceased to be a byword to express vice in its worst forms, and though the name never changed, it came to signify a place of reformation where erring souls had been brought to the cross. Christian worship was established and seed sown which fructified a thousandfold up to the present time, and produced such a harvest of souls that the very name of Five Points is now enshrined in countless hearts.

The mission continued to extend its influence. In 1894 the present commodious six-story brick structure was erected at a cost of $100,000. This building, too, will soon be a thing of the past, but what it stood for will not pass away, and the work it accomplished will not be forgotten.

THE SOUL'S YESTERDAYS

*A SERMON BY REV. DR. NEWELL DWIGHT HILLIS

TEXTS: "Let the dead bury their dead." Matt. 8: 22. "Forgetting the things that are behind." Phil. 3: 13

TO THE very end of his career, tradition says, Paul observed the anniversary of Stephen's murder. Each year his sense of personal responsibility for that crime grew with his ever-enriching manhood. In retrospect, Stephen seemed the one outstanding man of the church in Jerusalem, and the mother church never recovered from that fiery persecution of Paul's. To have stood by and kept the garments of the murderers, and consented to the crime, meant a personal share in the murder. Henceforth Paul's yesterday held the memory of intolerance, cruelty and crime. The past brought distress and torment. Instead of being a place of refuge, a tower into which he could retreat from present disasters, it became a wound that would not heal, a tomb full of ghastly recollections.

To a sensitive man, in such hours, it must have seemed as if paradise was behind him. There are two kinds of cells—one built of stone in Sing Sing and one built out of past deeds, whose jailor is Memory, whose ruler is Conscience. No man can look joyfully forward, who cannot look peacefully back. For the state yesterday holds the beginnings of liberty and the battle of flags, crimsoned with the blood of heroes. Yesterday holds the beginnings of the fine arts and the sciences and the struggles of noble souls toward ideal beauty and perfect truth. Yesterday holds the beginnings of all tools, of all laws, of all liberties, and the greatness of to-day comes down out of many exalted yesterdays as rivers from lofty mountains. But yesterday also holds the seeds of sin, the crimes of intolerance and bigotry, the treachery of traitors betraying their country, the dishonor of leaders who sinned against their ideals; and all such yesterdays pour forth evil influences, as swamps exhale miasma and poisonous gases. That life alone is great that has behind it a multitude of noble memories; that has in front of it aspirations, true and brave and beautiful.

Cemeteries of the Mind

Consider the duty, the necessity and the difficulty that a nation has in forgetting the things that are past. If we could take the wings of the morning and journey around the earth, we should return with the reflection that a spirit of restlessness and discontent lies upon all the nations of the world. God is abroad, disturbing the people by new aspirations.

Consider the duty and difficulty of the city's burial of yesterday's mistakes and municipal sins. Paris had its problem, and an emperor plowed new streets and avenues through the city, tearing down thousands of houses, and the increase in values replenished the treasury. San Francisco had her problems after the earthquake, and Chicago after the fire, but there are some cities that have suffered so grievously through neglect and misrule and want of foresight on the part of the rulers that the result has been more terrible than either fire or earthquake. It is hard to pay the penalty of the municipal blunders of yesterday. But the new generation will find a way out. Come soon or late, every obstacle will be removed, and every form of ugliness obliterated. Old architecture, old railways, old buildings will be turned into places of beauty, ugliness into order, and our cities made true cities of God. This dream of an ideal city should sustain us through all discouragements and lend us strength to overthrow every obstacle.

Individuals often find it hard to bury the past. Many a man has had Paul's experience, in that memory was a clog, a torment and a hindrance. Here is the man who betrayed honor in his youth, soiled his good name, lost his position. That one sin has held him down. Here is the man who refused knowledge, who was a truant from school, who was charmed by the glitter of gold, and at thirty finds that his strongest faculty was in the line of a profession, and discovers that it is too late, and that the golden opportunity has been thrown away forever. Here is the woman who was self-willed, and went against the counsel of parent and friend, and made a foolish marriage, and finds herself allied to one from whose habits and temperament with its vulgarity and coarseness every instinct revolts, but she has given hostages to fortune and childhood, and the blunder cannot be retrieved.

And here are the men who have sinned against the body, and have drained away the precious nerve liquors, and have wakened up at forty to find themselves at the end of their career, with days that are bitter and nights that are anguish. Open the biography of Heinrich Heine, who finds that the dead cannot bury the dead, and that he cannot forget the things that are past, because his "mattress grave" forbids. One morning he received news that the citizens of a German city had celebrated his birthday, singing his songs, and drinking toasts to his honor. How bitter are his words: "What does it boot me that my health is drunk in the best wines in golden goblets at banquets, when I, myself, cut off from all the pleasures of the world, can only moisten my lips with thin gruel? What does it boot me that young men and maidens crown my marble bust with laurels, while the withered hands of an old woman rub cantharides on my real head, behind my ears? What does it boot me that all the roses of Shiraz glow, and give their scent so tenderly for me? Shiraz is two thousand miles away from the rue d'Amsterdam, where in the wearisome loneliness of my sickroom I have nothing to smell but the perfumes of warmed napkins. Ah, God's mockery weighs heavy upon me. The great Author of the universe, the Aristophanes of heaven, wished to show the little so-called Aristophanes of the earth what wretched little jests are his weightiest sarcasms in comparison with his own. How pitifully I lag behind him in humor, and in making of colossal jokes! Humbly do I acknowledge his superiority, and I bow before him to the dust. All too short is the way of man's pilgrimage, and at the end of it lies the inexorable grave. Would I were dead! O Sorrow, thy name is Heinrich Heine."

A Spiritual House-Cleaning

Verily every sin is a seed, big with its coming harvest of plenty. Whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he reap. The good man who overworks, and exhausts his nervous forces, must pay the penalty with anguish and sleepless nights. Nature will not allow a man to forget some things that are past.

But there is a sinful use of the past with its mistakes. Any brooding on yesterday's blunders that works toward morbidness and destroys health is a sin against God and man's own soul. Nature forgives sin, for when the boy cuts his finger through carelessness, Nature starts her recuperative forces and heals the wound. Men forgive mistakes and sins—for that is the very basis of the sympathy of father and mother and teacher in their nurture of children. Society forgives blunders, for many a man who has an exalted position in politics has lived down the yesterdays of his youth. God forgives sins, casting them into the depths of the sea, and flinging man's transgressions behind his back. What God hath forgiven, man should forget. Why thrust a pole down into the abyss where God has buried your sin, to drag up by its locks some drowned transgression? That man who touched a spring in the wall and found a skeleton hidden there, by accident discovered an event that had taken place a generation before.

And why should you make chambers for every skeleton, and by retrospection brood upon each blunder, and weep over each mistake and sin? All this injures aspiration as a frost blights young corn. This morbidness cuts the very nerve of character. No wise man saves his old shoes, o puts away his old garments, or treasures the par ing of the nails. No wise housewife but clears th attic and the garret once a year, lest the cast-of articles become food for moths and a center fo disease and contagion. The city has scavengers t cleanse its streets and fling away all remnants o food and daily life. Every man should from tim to time cleanse his memory, as the farmer cleanse the spring and fountain, flinging away the leave and mud that have slowly collected in the wate that supports the daily life. For God's throne i mercy, sympathy and love, and he is faithful an just to forgive man's sins, to rid each Saul of hi fetter and to lend each Paul strength for the mor row's task.

Reaching Forth

A right use of the past rebukes vanity and conceit, and stimulates man to new activities and ambitions. One of the great perils of life for youth i the overworking of ambition and futurity. The youth drifts on, under the delusion that what he hopes to do is already done. Many a boy plans t read a book, but it does not mean that you have mastered a volume because you have bought it. To-morrow the youth will earn and save and invest; to-morrow the merchant will make his will, and dedicate his money to service. To-morrow the citizen will become a patriot, and fight evil in politics. To-morrow the old wrong should be righted and restitution made; meanwhile, the days are dissolving like snowflakes in a river, and, lo, nothing is done. The cure of this overworking of hope is a wise looking back to yesterday, with its emptiness, its neglect, and its failure. Should you sit down before your past, as you sit before a familiar friend, conceit would be impossible. Yesterday holds no ground of self-glorification. He who contrasts what he did yesterday with what he hopes to-morrow will repent of vanity in dust and ashes.

The measure of personal worth is not in the ambitions for the future, but in the actual deeds of the past. Memory holds the scales of justice, that reveal the real weight of character. He who has no multitude of rich yesterdays and is always looking toward brilliant to-morrows is living on mist and moonshine. A hundred summers and winters unite to build the Charter Oak. Many, many rivulets and streams lie back of the Mississippi with its flats. Ten thousand battlefields are behind your father's flag. Innumerable apostles, martyrs, and missionaries, uniting their toil, achieved this great force called the Christian Church. And the great soul who has come through all the thunder of life's battle, and stands forth with right of character, has accumulated this treasure through many and wonderful days, thought by thought, deed by deed, prayer by prayer, here denial and there self-sacrifice, until the ten thousand minute fidelities have lent majesty to a great soul.

Over in Holland there is a sunken village. Through some flaw in the crust the earth sank, until the cottages with their red tiles and the little church with its steeple disappeared beneath the sea. Some forty years ago a southeast wind blew for a full week and piled the Atlantic up on the shores of Labrador, and the water on the shores of Holland was ever lower and lower. One day, when some tidal wave perhaps had moved west, at the ebb, men saw the red tile of the submerged cottages, and the steeple of the lost church, for, lo, the sea had given up its dead. Most wondrous of all, on the sand, a fisherman picked up a golden cup set with gems.

Memory, too, is a sea that gives up her dead. The past is gone, but not lost. All noble deeds shall have their resurrection, and every kindly service shall return with quadruple treasure. He who gives his best treasure unto God will find that God will give it back again multiplied tenfold.

DAILY MEDITATION

FOR EVERY DAY IN THE YEAR, BASED ON THE WORDS OF JESUS

BY PROFESSOR W. H. T. DAU

SUNDAY, June 7. Matthew 6: 9. "After this manner therefore pray ye." The Lord's Prayer has justly been accepted by Christians throughout the world and in all generations of the New Testament church as the pattern of a prayer that God loves to hear, not only because of the divine Author who taught it men, but also because of the spirit that breathes from it and the profound truths with which it is replete. In the address, it assigns to the praying person the standing he has with God, and in the conclusion it lifts him to sublime adoration of the majesty of God. It starts out like the lisping of a child and rings out in a grand panegyric. Between the humble beginning and the magnificent ending are the seven petitions. These take in every divine and human interest. They embrace man's physical and spiritual wants. Many words could be made, and have been made, about each detail of the contents of this prayer, but nothing essential could be added to its matter. It covers everything. "After this manner pray ye." This means: "Let your prayers be constituted like this." It does not mean that we must not pray any other prayer; still less does it mean that we are to make a superstitious use of this prayer and count each repetition of it as so much merit which we accumulate with God on the credit side of our account with him. We love this prayer because it is probably the first long prayer that we were taught, because it reminds us of so many things we are apt to forget, and because it forms such a beautiful climax to every other prayer that we may address to God.

MONDAY, June 8. Matthew 6: 9. "Our Father which art in heaven." God, to whom Christ teaches us to pray, is not some dread, unapproachable tyrant or stern and cruel judge, like the terrible gods of the heathen; but he is our heavenly Parent, to whom we may speak "with all boldness and confidence, as children speak to their dear father." This form of address contains a sweet and urgent invitation not to be afraid to come and speak to God and pour out our hearts to him. He is, however, different from our earthly fathers in wisdom, power, and goodness. Our earthly parents often do not understand us, nor can they always help us. But our Father in heaven is "able to do exceeding abundantly above all that we ask or think." He has millions of other children besides us, and we remember them also when we say "our" Father; and we are glad that we can thus use this prayer as a token of that invisible bond which binds all believers in Christ in one great brotherhood.

TUESDAY, June 9. Matthew 6: 9. "Hallowed be thy name." We do not know anything about God except by the revelation he has made of himself. He has taught us how to think and speak of and to him, of his great attributes and wonderful works. The name of God is to us every manifestation we have of him. That these manifestations may be treated with reverence by men, is our chief concern in this prayer. We cannot make God's name holy. His name is and will forever remain holy despite the blasphemy and profanity of men. Those who speak irreverently of God, who pervert his Word, which is the greatest revelation he has made of himself—by false teaching, or who lead unholy lives while adorning themselves with the honorable title of his followers, do not harm God but themselves and their fellow men. When we pray this petition, we confess our inability to overcome by our own strength, and to root out in this world, every irreverent use of the name, the revelation, the ordinances to which God has attached his holy name, and we pray God to govern affairs in this world so that we may always have him placed before us by reverent and true teachers, and that we may think, speak, act and regulate our whole life by the remembrance of his holy name and Word.

WEDNESDAY, June 10. Matthew 6: 10. "Thy kingdom come." God has set up his kingdom, his overlordship in the created universe which he rules with his omnipotent power. But God desires also to set up a rule of grace in the hearts of men. Through the blessed Gospel of Christ, he sends forth his Spirit, and invites men to come to him with their sins and sorrows, to repent and believe the Gospel, that he may rule them by the sweet influences of his converting and sanctifying grace, form them into a kingdom of grace here in this wicked world, and finally lead them into his glorious kingdom. That this work may be duly accomplished on earth, that missionaries may go forth with the tidings of salvation, that men may accept those tidings and lead godly lives, in accordance with their faith in those tidings, here in time and hereafter in eternity—that is the concern which we express in this petition. This "kingdom" comes indeed without our prayer, of itself. God provides the word of his grace and preachers of that word, and leads men to believe the word without any human co-operation. But we pray in this petition that the kingdom may come and continue to come to us and all who have it not, and that it may abide with us until God ushers in the kingdom everlasting.

THURSDAY, June 11. Matthew 6: 10. "Thy will be done in earth, as it is in heaven." Through the manifestations which God has made of himself, and particularly through setting up his kingdom in men's hearts, we understand that God has a gracious and kind purpose concerning us. What God teaches us to believe, what he asks us to do, and what he causes or permits us to suffer, all show his gracious will and purpose. The realization of God's good and gracious will goes on without let or hindrance among the saints and angels in heaven, who rejoice to "do his commandments, hearkening unto the voice of his word." But serious obstacles arise against the realization of this will where sin reigns. The devil, worldly men, and even the flesh of believers have a will of their own which is opposed to the will of God. These forces will that God's name shall not be hallowed and his kingdom not come to men. Now, God will enact his will in spite of this opposition. Our prayer will not prompt him to do it. But our prayer shows our personal interest in his will: we would like to see it fully carried out in us and in our lives. "Thy will be done!" Oh, how often have we been reminded that this prayer is the prayer that suits our condition best.

FRIDAY, June 12. Matthew 6: 11. "Give us this day our daily bread." To the three petitions which deal with the great spiritual interests in our lives the Lord has added a petition for our daily bread. This term "bread" includes all that we need to support our body and natural life, all the materials for our physical and social well-being, all the elements that contribute to our health, success in business, peace and happiness on earth. We ask these as a gift from our Father in heaven. He gives them indeed without our prayer even to the wicked. By praying for them we acknowledge our dependence upon him. We recognize that it is not our strong arms, our professional skill, our wisdom, foresight, experience, our rising early and retiring late, but only the blessing which he bestows on our labors that procures for us meat and drink, clothing and shoes, house and home, fields and cattle, faithful servants, trustworthy employees, good weather, conditions of peace in the community and prosperity. God makes these secondary causes work together for our good; and when he permits them to fail, he is able to provide for our wants also without these ordinary means. In times of famine, drought, war, and pestilence, his providence has often supplied extraordinary means for men's support and their protection. Let us ask a blessing on his gifts whenever we sit down to meat, and let us break the bread, which he has given us above our need, to the hungry, for whom we have also prayed in this petition.

SATURDAY, June 13. Matthew 6: 12. "And forgive us our debts, as we forgive our debtors." Our sins are called "debts," inasmuch as we do not give either God or our fellow men their due when we commit them. Sinning, we come short of the glory of God, and fall behind in everything good. We daily sin much, and our debt is great. It is necessary that we remember this fact when we approach God; for we are worthy of none of the things for which we pray. We deserve nothing but punishment. We ask God in this prayer that in his mercy, and for the sake of Him who taught us this prayer, he would not look upon our sins, nor on their account deny our prayer. We acknowledge that it is only by his forgiving grace that we have standing with God. And when our relation to God is thus adjusted by mercy, we will endeavor, by that same grace that canceled our debts, to be forgiving to those who sin against us. This is the only petition in the Lord's Prayer to which we add a vow. This vow expresses, not a condition which we undertake to fulfil and thereby secure God's forgiveness, but a promise that our lives shall correspond to our faith, and a declaration that we desire to be able to forgive others as God has forgiven us.

A TRILOGY OF PERSONAL MENTION

Religious Parade

A GREAT religious parade took place in Scranton, Pa., on April 18. It preceded the closing day of a seven weeks' vangelical campaign by the Rev. Wiam A. Sunday, during which 700,000 ttended the tabernacle specially rected for the revival, and 17,000 onfessed Christ. The parade was onceived by the business men of the ty and was developed in a few days' me, bringing into line probably over irty thousand men who required just ree hours of marching to pass the eviewing stand.

Rev. Mr. Sunday, with the mayor, arched at the head of the line, followed by city and county officials, policemen and firemen, autos with the G. A. R. men, delegates from professions and crafts, clubs, high school boys, Bible classes; industrial delegations with banners and bands came from mills, factories, mines, railroads. Presidents, directors and managers marched with employees. Miners direct from their grimy toil marched with lamps burning in their caps.

A Bishop and a University

Taylor University, at Upland, Ind., is celebrating the occasion of the ninety-third anniversary of the birth of Bishop William Taylor, after whom the university is named. Bishop Taylor was born on May 2, 1821. He was one of the fiery apostles of evangelical Christianity in the far West during the times of the "forty-niners," and other early settlers of California, and later preached his Gospel of a full salvation in the dark continent, where he founded a great work. He was the first missionary bishop of Africa appointed by the Methodists. Among the natives he was known as "The Flaming Torch," or "The Fire Stick." He also labored, with his unquenchable zeal, in Australia, South America and India. Bishop Taylor was greatly interested in Taylor University. He labored and prayed for the institution, and his spirit still inspires its work.

Rev. Dr. Clark in Spain

A cablegram from Barcelona, Spain, stated that the greatest Protestant meeting ever held in Spain, with more than 4,000 present, was addressed by Rev. Francis E. Clark, president of the World's Christian Endeavor Union, on Sunday, May 3. The corporation of Barcelona granted the use of the Fine Arts Palace, a concession absolutely without precedent in the history of Spanish Protestantism. Dr. Clark will address conventions in Madrid, Valencia, Zaragoza and Bilbao, and later in France and England.

June-Tide Religion

MAY, with its varied program of chills and warmth, bright blossoms and cold rains, sunshine and threatened frost, its "promises" which the beloved Riley so "'bominates," has gone at length, and we are "knee-deep in June." But June weather, while it brings delight to mind and body, sometimes has a tendency to take the rose back into May or April, or even March and February. As the weather grows warm one's spiritual ardor and zeal are apt to grow cold. Summer rest and summer pleasures and summer weather may make spiritual tasks irksome. What can we do at summer's threshold to make sure that its end shall find us farther ahead, not set back on the spiritual road, with a happy record of faithful service for the sunny weeks passed?

Well, considering what religion really is, summer ought to be a help to it, not a hindrance. Religion is a thing of joy; so is summer. Religion is a thing of beauty; so is summer. Religion is a thing of fragrance; so is summer. Religion has genial warmth; so has summer. Religion bears fruits and ripens harvests; so does summer.

O world, as God has made it, all is beauty.
And knowing this is love, and love is duty.

After all, our religion is apt to be a bit too stern. We forget the simplicity of trust, the sweetness of forgiveness, the fragrance of the divine blessing.

If our love were but more simple,
We should take him at his word;
And our lives would be all sunshine
In the sweetness of our Lord.

We shall bear our trials better and do our work better, winter and summer alike, if we remember that "his banner over us is love." Our work consists chiefly in telling others of the joys that he has brought us. This is the testimony that will win the world and lead it to substitute Christ's ways for its own. Thus shall the coldness and harshness of sin and hate and greed disappear, and over the world shall steal the sweet warmth of human fellowship and the fragrance of a love divine.

After Huerta—What?

SHOULD the optimistic announcement prove well founded that Huerta, having taken sober second thought, has authorized the Mexican delegates to present his resignation to the International Mediation Conference at Niagara Falls, Ontario, if they deem it advisable for the welfare of Mexico, a very important stage will have been reached in the work of the conferees. In considering the question of Huerta's probable successor, it is regarded as a fair presumption that the choice for provisional president would fall not upon any of the military leaders who are now at the front of affairs, but rather upon some able and representative Mexican statesman who has not been personally identified with either side, but whose record would appeal to the confidence of the country.

Very significant was the closing passage in the eloquent and masterly address of Senhor da Gama, the Brazilian ambassador, which many will interpret as pointing to the dictator; but even with the elimination of Huerta achieved, there will still remain the important problem of pacification and of the establishment of a government that shall assure recognition of the rights of the Mexican people, and the carrying out of such reforms as will secure those rights permanently. While our own government cannot undertake this work itself without intervention, it can and will give every assistance that may be rendered in an advisory capacity toward that end. Representative government in Mexico would be a new experiment, and in the very nature of things it is not to be expected to immediately follow the passing of the present crisis. Free elections, the untrammeled choice of a national assembly, land reform legislation, just tax laws—all these can only be reached after the best elements in the republic have patriotically combined for that purpose.

Meanwhile, it is quite within the probabilities that we shall be compelled to keep a considerable force, both naval and military, in service until such a time as withdrawal would be justified by improved conditions. This policy will be made clear to the mediators, coupled with the disclaimer of any desire to dictate or needlessly interfere with the duties of the Mexican people themselves. It has fallen to us to see this thing through, and it can be done, and we believe will be done, without friction. Certainly, war is not to be thought of, and now it seems more remote than ever. When order is restored and affairs are sufficiently under the control of the duly constituted authorities, then, having fulfilled our pacific and friendly mission, and having given official recognition to the new government, our battleships can weigh anchor and Mexico can once more be mistress of every foot of her own dominion. This is the hope our government cherishes, and we trust it may be fully realized in the near future.

The Return of Roosevelt

HE HAS come back to us, weak and enfeebled with his long sojourn in the tropical jungle, but, let us hope, good for many years yet. The wilderness hardships and privations, the starvation diet, the slow, wasting fever, the daily and hourly hand-to-hand battle with danger—all these have told upon him; but it would take more than these to quench that bold spirit. The colonel is a good many pounds lighter than when he left us; but he is none the worse for it, and besides, he has got more real enjoyable adventure out of his trip than any other explorer could possibly have done. "The traveler who is without observation," says Saadi, "is a bird without wings." Our explorer, though wingless, has a powerfully keen perception, which he never fails to use to advantage. All are glad to welcome him back again. Differ with him as we may in politics or on any other subject, Roosevelt's sturdy Americanism, his indomitable pluck, and his utter disregard of consequences when he feels that he is right, have won him admiration such as few men enjoy. Sagamore Hill, the metropolis, the nation, acclaim his return and congratulate him on his gallant conquest of the secret of the wilderness which he has put on the map. He has written his autograph high up on the pillar of fame, and he may yet inscribe it even higher.

The Convicted Dynamiters

BY THE middle of June, the nineteen labor leaders who were convicted and sentenced in the dynamite trials, having exhausted their term of liberty, will be compelled to surrender to the warden of the Federal prison at Leavenworth, or submit to incarceration in the Illinois penitentiary. Their trial and the startling evidence then adduced which led to their conviction are still fresh in the public mind. Through the lenity of the court, they were granted time to straighten out their personal affairs before going to jail to serve their respective terms, ranging from one to six years. Now their only hope lies in the possibility of a presidential pardon, and a petition bearing half a million signatures has been sent to President Wilson, pleading for the exercise of executive clemency. That there could by any possibility be so many persons in this country who approve of these crimes, must come as a shocking surprise to most people. The crimes of which these nineteen men were found guilty, after all the machinery of the law had been employed in their behalf to escape punishment, are described in a single paragraph of an Associated Press despatch:

The history of the dynamiting cases dates back to August 10, 1905, when the International Association of Bridge and Structural Iron Workers declared a strike against the American Bridge Company. Bridges and buildings erected by "open shop" concerns were dynamited. There were nearly 100 instances of such violence previous to 1911.

It remains to be seen whether the President will take the view that crimes of such character and magnitude should be condoned. Such a course, to many minds, would seem like an absolute travesty of justice.

The Balkan Horrors Inquiry

THAT war lets loose the worst passions known to the human heart, and that the so-called "Christian nations," no less than the heathen, are subject to outbursts of savagism, is made very clear in the report of the Commission of Inquiry of the Carnegie Peace Endowment into the massacres and atrocities attending and following the Balkan War of 1912-1913. This commission—an international body and wholly free from personal prejudices—spent many months traveling long distances and hearing the testimony of a large number of witnesses. Evidence was abundant that shocking atrocities had been committed by the nominally Christian nations on Moslem non-combatants in Macedonia, which surpassed in sheer barbarity the outrages those nations committed against each other.

Priests and members of church councils, it is said, urged on, if indeed they did not share in, those terrible deeds, in which even women and children were not spared. The Greek charges of inhumanity on the part of the Bulgars were found to be exaggerated; yet in the judgment of the commission there remained "a heavy indictment which rested on incontestable evidence." Regular troops "went mad with the blood lust." Villages which offered no opposition were made scenes of death and suffering. Numerous letters, written by Greek soldiers, in which the writers boasted of barbarities, were secured by the committee. The report goes on to say:

The Turkish war and the war of the allies constituted a ghastly chapter of horrors. Both among the regular troops and the irregular bands which accompanied the armies, there were many of low, criminal and even bestial type, with no human feeling and no care for civilized standards, who were ready at all times to do atrocious deeds. When a band of soldiers or comitadjis, either under orders or, as was many times the case, under the impulse of hatred, greed and lust, surrounded and attacked a village, the very doors of hell seemed to be opened. No language can describe the tortures and griefs which followed. Repeated instances of death by fright of girls and young children attest the horror of the orgy of crime which was enacted. In one house in Doxato, to which fifty persons had fled for safety, all but one little girl, Chrisanthe Audom, were slaughtered like beasts in the shambles. In the same town a well-to-do family of thirteen owned and occupied one of the best houses. After extorting £3,000 from the head of the family on the promise that they would be spared, the soldiers proceeded to kill them all. These are typical instances.

What is the duty of the civilized nations toward the Balkans? the commission asks. First of all, it declares, they should cease to exploit the Balkan nations for gain. They should encourage them to make arbitration treaties and insist on their keeping them. And those great nations themselves should set a good example, by seeking judicial settlement of all international disputes. It is evident that the commission regards the case of the Balkans as a disgrace to civilization and one which proves that "the Christian can be more cruel even than the Turk."

Survived Shocking Shipwreck

THE United States revenue cutter Seneca hurried into Halifax, N. S., on the night of May 17, having on board five men, the victims of a most harrowing disaster. The five ere the last of those who left the ill-fated Columan on the night of May 3 in an effort to escape e frightful consequences of a fire and explosion oard ship at sea. Eleven others were in the same at when she left the side of the doomed ship, but, arved and buffeted in the boat for fourteen days, ey had died and their bodies had been thrown to the sea. The survivors were speechless and nconscious and would have perished in a very w hours. In time they were all nursed back to mparative strength. They told one of the most rrible of all the terrible stories of the seas. The olumbian, running between Antwerp and New ork, by fire and explosion was wrecked when 150 iles south of Sable Island. She was sighted first the North German Lloyd ship Seydlitz. The unarder Franconia picked up one of the Columan's lifeboats containing fourteen of her crew. he next day the steamship Manattan picked up another lifeboat ith the captain and thirteen more f the crew, and then, two weeks fter, the third boat, given up for st, with the five poor perishing men, as found by the Seneca. Terrible s are wrecks on the ocean, they are ot so much so as the shipwreck of ie soul. And beautiful as is the escue of the wrecked mariners, much ore so is the rescue of those spiritally shipwrecked:

Holding faith, and a good conscience; hich some having put away concerning ith have made shipwreck. (I Tim. 1: 19.)

Demoralizing Literature

R. CHESTER S. LORD, the distinguished editor, in an address efore the Editorial Association of Hartford, made some wholesome remarks on the moral dangers of odern journalism and literature. Our discussions are on the everasting sex question; many of our lays have excited public indignaion; some of our picture shows have een suppressed by the police. Our ances have been denounced by the hurch and by the few old-fashoned mothers who remain, and the ame mothers have proclaimed gainst the clothing of the women s being demoralizing. Nine-tenths f the novels now written are soalled sex novels, in which sex relaions are described and discussed vith a freedom that would not have een tolerated fifty years ago, and hat must then have excluded them rom public libraries and homes. The three novels by British writers hat attracted most attention during he winter were conspicuous examples of this modrn literature. The best seller in America was an ttack on religion and an indirect plea for Socialsm." Mr. Lord puts half the blame on the people vhose ideals have been lowered, and who are so ncessant in their demands for the injurious papers nd books. He contrasts present conditions with he high standards and cleanly literature of fifty ears ago.

Whatsoever things are true, whatsoever things are honest, whatsoever things are of good report; if there be any virtue, if here be any praise, think on these things. (Phil. 4: 8.)

Portrait of Celebrated Organist

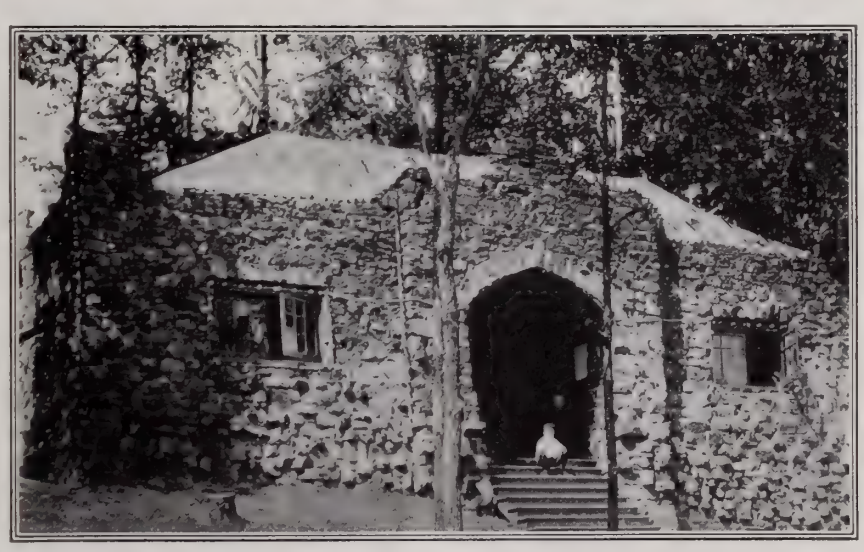
ON APRIL 29 there was unveiled in St. Stephen's Church, Philadelphia, the sculptured face of Professor David Dupple-Wood, who was one of he greatest organists in the country. He was aid to have been the best interpreter of Bach n America. He was blind. At the age of three he ost his sight, and at five his mother took him by anal boat from Pittsburg to Philadelphia, where he was taught literature and music. God pulled lown the curtains over the eyes of Homer to give o the world the ablest epic poet the world has ever known. Milton was blind that he might the more readily see divine things. God pulled down the curtains over the eyes of Dr. Wood that he might the more easily and certainly be shut in with melody and song. His example was so encouraging and his teaching so complete that it is said that three-fourths of the organists of Philadelphia are either his pupils or the pupils of those whom he taught. At least nine blind musicians preside at church organs in Philadelphia. Dr. Wood saw with eyes other than those of clay. His spiritual vision penetrated to the Source of all harmony—

Blessed are the pure in heart, for they shall see God. (Matt. 5: 8.)

Captives Crucified

ONE of the most shocking tragedies of recent years was reported from Durazzo, Albania, dated May 5. This is the message: "Two hundred and fifty Mohammedan Albanians, captured by the Epirote invaders at Hermova, were crucified in the Orthodox church in Kodra, according to information received by the Albanian Government. The Epirotes afterward set fire to the church, and allowed the bodies to burn." If the report be true, the massacre was none the less diabolical because the victims belonged to a sect that has long used the knife as an instrument of religious conquest. The only perfect man who ever lived, and God combined, was nailed to a cross. Ministers may preach on science, literature, art, sociology, the questions of the day, but there is only one message the true Christian minister has been given to deliver, and that is the preaching of a crucified Christ. He can cure every evil; he can bring to the human heart and race all the good that they can hope for in this life and the next. Fortunately the majority of the ministers of all denominations deep down in their souls have this loyalty to a crucified Christ, and lovingly preach a salvation in him. They share the spirit of the apostle when he said:

For I determined not to know anything among you, save Jesus Christ, and him crucified. (I Cor. 2: 2.)



HOUSE BUILT OF COAL

ONE of the most curious exhibits at the recent Appalachian Exposition held at Knoxville, Tenn., was a building constructed entirely of Tennessee-Kentucky domestic black coal, put together with black cement. The building, which is 25 by 50 feet in size, has two rooms, with an open court or passageway running clear through the center. The interior, like the exterior, is finished entirely of coal. The building cost $2,500, and it is expected that it will last at least fifteen years. At night a large sign, in form like an open grate fire, illuminates this striking exhibit of one of our principal industries. The production of coal is one of the most important industries of the nation. We have wool and cotton and flax for clothing; wheat and corn and meat for food; and wood, coal, and oil for fuel. The authorities report that the domestic grades of hard coal are about normal for this period of the year, but the steam sizes are beginning to crowd the storage bins, and individuals are offering substantial discounts to keep these grades moving. The demand generally is centering on stove coal. Bituminous stocks are large in every direction, while contract consumers are holding producers down to minimum deliveries. From the earliest time men have built houses of straw, wood, clay, stone and metal. Men have built the house of character out of all kinds of material. In such building this caution is justly given: "Let every man take heed how he buildeth thereupon." (I Cor. 3: 10.)

Norway's Centennial Celebration

NORWAY has just celebrated the one hundredth anniversary of its independence in a significant manner. On one of the days forty thousand school children bearing the national flag paraded before the royal palace in the morning, while the military and civil procession in the afternoon included 3,000 Americans who carried the Stars and Stripes. The Americans were warmly cheered by the enormous crowds which lined the route. Many of them had arrived by the steamer St. Louis just in time to join the parade which was headed by the Decorah College band from Decorah, Iowa. King Haakon gave a special audience to the American delegation. They were introduced by the American minister, Albert G. Schmedemann, and all of them with the women of their families were invited by the king to attend a banquet at the palace. Another day the royal family, the American delegates and the Norwegian officials went to Trondhjem to attend the services of the cathedral of Trondhjem, which is the most imposing church in Norway. So the Norwegians, splendid in their ability, education, and industry, like the rest of the Scandinavians, recognized God as the Founder of their nation and Christ as its Civilizer and Saviour. The Hebrews set up memorial stones in the celebration of their divine deliverance from their enemies, and their entrance into the promised land as a nation.

Then shall ye answer them, that the waters of Jordan were cut off before the ark of the covenant of the Lord; and these stones shall be for a memorial unto the children of Israel forever. (Joshua 4: 7.)

Picture-Mutilator Sentenced

MARY ANSELL, a super-militant suffragette, who hacked and seriously damaged a portrait of the Duke of Wellington which hung in the Royal Academy, was sentenced to six months' imprisonment the day following her deed as she pleaded guilty in the London Sessions. The portrait was considered one of the finest works of the late Sir Hubert von Herkomer, who died a few weeks ago. Miss Ansell did her contemptible work with a hatchet, and when arrested she sent a message to the Women's Social and Political Union asserting that her deed was a protest against the present status of British women, for which militancy is the only remedy, concluding: "I have done this deed deliberately, and rejoice that I have not failed in my duty." How the judgment could be so false, and the conscience, especially of a woman, so perverted, it is difficult to understand. The woman suffrage cause in America is making phenomenal progress because the advocates are sane and womanly in their action. The cause in England has been put back a generation possibly by the mobbing, house-burning, picture-cutting policy that has been followed. The cutting of this picture was a stab at the intellect and the heart of the nation. Highest art belongs to the mental and even spiritual realm. Christ taught that there were things above the material most valuable:

Man shall not live by bread alone, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God. (Matt. 4: 4.)

Panama Canal Practically Opened

WHILE we are arranging for a great celebration of the Panama Canal opening at San Francisco next year, the papers give us the quiet information that the big canal is now open, and that the first barges of freight were actually passed from the Pacific to the Atlantic and the Atlantic to the Pacific through it the other day. By the midsummer it is now believed the waterway will be ready for steamships to pass through. What cause of congratulations to any one who had any part in it that the miracle has been accomplished, that the dream of the ages has been realized. Cortez first saw the possibility of a canal connecting the two oceans, but his idea that it should be cut through the Isthmus of Tehuantepec was unpractical. For four hundred years the world dreamed, until American enterprise, ability and money caused the dream to come true. It is God's plan to facilitate trade and spread his Gospel and fulfil this prophecy:

He shall have dominion also from sea to sea, and from the river unto the ends of the earth. (Ps. 72: 8.)

A REMARKABLE PHOTOGRAPH SHOWING THE DELEGATES FROM THREE THOUSAND LUTHERAN

TRIENNIAL SYNODICA

FROM May 6 to 16 the triennial convention of the Evangelical Lutheran Synod of Missouri, Ohio, and other States was in session at St. Luke's Church, Chicago. This synod is by far the largest of Lutheran bodies in America, having a membership of upward of 500,000 communicants. It is federated with the Wisconsin, Minnesota, Michigan, Nebraska and Slavonian Synods into the Synodical Conference, which is the largest Protestant church organization in America, numbering well over 700,000 communicant members.

Six hundred and nine delegates, representing 3,000 congregations in the United States, Canada, South America, Australia and India, responded to the opening roll call. Rev. F. Pfotenhauer, the president, formally opened the convention. In his address, with striking simplicity and force, he set forth the fundamental principles by which the deliberations of the synod must be guided. He dwelt on the growing sentiment amongst Lutheran laymen for the union of all Lutheran bodies in America, and emphasized the fact that the basis of union must ever be a clear and full confession of the teachings of the Bible, while a spirit of Christian comity must prevail in adjusting differences in temporary arrangements and local policies.

The election of officers for the next triennium brought the following result: Rev. Ferdinand Pfotenhauer, of Chicago, was re-elected president by an overwhelming majority. Rev. J. Mueller, of Fort Wayne, was elected first vice-president; Rev. P. Brand of Pittsburg, Pa., second vice-president; Rev. H. Speckhardt of Saginaw, Mich., fourth vice-president; Rev. J. Hilgendorf of Cheyenne, Wyoming, third vice-president. Rev. R. D. Biedermann of Indianapolis, Ind., was re-elected secretary; Rev. E. Seuel, St. Louis, treasurer.

A number of sessions were given over to the discussion of the home mission fields. The needs and opportunities of the Northwest were strongly urged. At present the synod has over 250 men active in the missionary work of that section, aside from the men at established congregations, while 670 are active in the entire home mission field of 1,600 stations. Rev. C. Dietz of Milwaukee, Wis., chairman of the Home Mission Board, drew a graphic picture of the tremendous opportunities for energetic church extension work in the opening of the Northwest. To illustrate the zeal and self-sacrificing spirit among the missionaries, he stated that they had unanimously refused an increase in salary in order that the work might not suffer for want of men. The convention voted an appropriation of $150,000 for home mission purposes and strongly endorsed a vigorous policy of extension. At the same time the board was empowered to give a substantial increase in salary to the men in the field. Attention was called to the fact that numbers of Lutherans in the army and navy are practically unprovided for, and the board was urged to gather data and devise means to supply their spiritual needs.

Rev. J. Kellerbauer, of India, was present in behalf of the India mission. The Missouri Synod at present has twenty missionaries in the India field, assisted by ten native helpers. The convention decided to appoint a superintendent of schools to take over the management and extension of the rapidly increasing Christian schools in charge of the mission, and to provide for the training of native missionaries. The Rev. H. Hamann of Luther Chapel, New York, was chosen for the post.

While no representative had come from South America to lay its needs before the convention, a very striking exhibition of photographs, sketches and statistical tables had been arranged, setting forth the detail of the synodical mission work, especially in Brazil. The convention voted to extend the work into Panama.

The consideration of the foreign mission work was concluded with the establishment of a mission among the Maoris in New Zealand, which Rev. Tapunga, a native graduate of the Lutheran Seminary at Springfield, Ill., was asked to begin. The convention sent greetings to all the various mission fields. The total appropriations for foreign missions were $150,000.

RELIGIOUS INTOLERANCE IN SPAIN

THE Christian Endeavorers of the local Union of Barcelona, Spain, which consists of some ten societies, taking occasion of the visit of Dr. and Mrs. Francis E. Clark to their city, secured the use of the Palacio de Bellas Artes, the largest and finest hall in the city, a hall which accommodates more than four thousand people.

This aroused the wrath of the Carlists, the extreme Catholic party, especially as the alcalde, or mayor, had given the use of the hall to the Endeavorers free of charge. The archbishop tried to forbid the meeting, and the governor of Catalonia begged the mayor to rescind his permission, but he would not yield.

Then the Catholic party threatened a serious riot and even bloodshed. Upon this the mayor, when the day of the meeting arrived, called out all the police and civic guards, more than five hundred men, mounted and unmounted, to guard all the approaches to the hall. Moreover, every suspicious character was searched at the door, and forty-eight pistols were taken away from scores who were not allowed to enter.

The hall was crowded with the Endeavorers and their sympathizers. More than four thousand were present, and many stood throughout the exercises, which were most interesting and were concluded without interruption. It was by far the largest and most notable Protestant meeting ever held in Spain, for, until recently, Protestants have been obliged to worship in obscure places, and the law has forbidden them to have a church door on an important street.

After the meeting, an unexploded bomb was found in the hall, and while the meeting was going on, an attempt was made to burn down a Protestant church in another part of the city.

The mayor and chief of police did everything to protect the Protestants, and sent a squad of police and plain-clothes men to escort Dr. and Mrs. Clark all the way to their lodgings at the American Girls' College, some five miles from the hall.

Since the meeting, the papers all over Spain have been full of the incident; the republican papers denouncing the intolerance of the Catholic party, and applauding the mayor and the police, while the Carlist or rabid Catholic papers threaten worse things still for the Protestants.

Excitement is intense in many places, and undoubtedly the incident will go far to promote religious freedom, or at least a larger tolerance.

AMONG THE WORKERS

—[illegible] three [illegible] trained in this institution, [illegible] under the direction of the different denominational missionary [illegible].

—The [illegible] Evangelist Thomas Eddy Thomas of Muncie, Ind., during three weeks of [illegible] in Cleveland, Ohio, made such an impression there that when he and his outfit were to be driven seventeen miles away, [illegible] proposed that a delegation [illegible] meetings. As a result [illegible] chartered a special [illegible] and attended the meetings in the neighboring town. The enthusiasm which has been created by Mr. Thomas' work is said to find expression in practical every-day Christianity as well as in such an encouraging form as this.

—A new feature in revival campaigns was introduced by members of the Biederwolf evangelistic party in Ironton, Ohio, where they are now working. It was termed "Visitation Day," and the whole day was spent by them in visiting the sick and shut-ins. The program at each home visited was made up of special songs, a prayer by Dr. Biederwolf and the presentation of a beautiful carnation to each one visited. The homes visited were among all classes, from the rich to the poorest.

—The men of the Bowery Mission, as many as could be packed into the hall, recently were entertained by Miss E. Eleanor Patterson, in a program of song, assisted by Roland Edmund Meyer, violinist, and William Parson, pianist. Miss Patterson is an accomplished American contralto, and her work aroused the men to the highest pitch of enthusiastic appreciation. Such a testimonial at the Bowery Mission is worth while, since these men know good music and how to enjoy it, mediocre talent in the way of entertainment has no chance at the Bowery Mission, where even the greatest artists have gladly given their services. Miss Patterson is now numbered among the mission's most popular friends, and the men's good wishes go with her on her tour in different States.

EN SESSIONS OF THE ENTHUSIASTIC SYNODICAL CONVENTION AT CHICAGO, MAY 6-16, 1914

UTHERAN CONVENTION

Less time was spent on the mission among foreign-speaking peoples in the United States. The Missouri Synod at present works in the Lettish, Slavonian, Finnish, Esthonian, Lithuanian, Yiddish, Polish and Persian languages, and has twenty-five missionaries in the field, whose stations extend from the New England States to the western part of Canada. Fifty thousand dollars were placed at the disposal of this mission. The total appropriations for all missions was $350,000. A sum of $150,000 was provided for church extension purposes and $100,000 for disabled ministers.

Appropriations were made for greater facilities at the various seminaries, normal schools, and colleges to provide for the increasing number of students. The total appropriation for this purpose was $200,000, divided among fourteen institutions. It was decided to add one year to the college course at Fort Wayne, Ind. For some time the sentiment had been growing to extend the college course, and to place the whole educational work on a higher level of scholarship. This is the first indication of definite action in that direction.

A matter of vital importance for the future of the Lutheran Church in America came up in the plan for union of the Missouri Synod with the Michigan, Minnesota, Nebraska and Wisconsin Synods. At present these bodies are affiliated in the Synodical Conference and no doctrinal differences divide them. The proposed plan is to bring them together in one organization. The movement began in Milwaukee and is distinctly a laymen's movement. If the plan goes through the new organization will have a communicant membership of close to 800,000 and 3,000 pastors, and will be by far the largest Protestant organization in America. The convention enthusiastically endorsed the plan and empowered the president to appoint a committee to go over the matter in detail, meet with representatives of the other bodies, and give a full report at the next convention. The convention gave a very hearty expression to its desire to have every effort expended to bring this about, as the most fitting way to commemorate the 400th anniversary of the Reformation in 1917.

The committee appointed at the last convention to draw up suggestions for the coming Reformation anniversary brought in its report. The convention endorsed the suggestion of giving the widest publicity through magazines and lectures and it voted to create a special fund.

After the regular sessions on Monday a special meeting was called to consider the possibility of giving wider publicity to the Lutheran Church in America. It was stated that comparatively little is known, even among educated people, of the Lutheran Church. To meet this condition the American Lutheran Publicity Bureau was formed, which proposes to give the widest publicity to the principles and teachings of the Lutheran Church.

During the morning sessions the venerable Dr. F. Pieper delivered a series of lectures on the Lutheran doctrine of the church. Dr. Pieper was for many years president of the synod, as well as president of the Lutheran Theological Seminary at St. Louis, Mo., the largest theological seminary in the country. As he is, perhaps, the foremost Lutheran theologian in America to-day, his lectures were followed with intense interest.

On Sunday afternoon, the 10th, the 50th anniversary of the Normal School, now located at River Forest, was celebrated. Fully 30,000 people crowded the grounds and took part in the services. The Rev. H. Eckhardt of Pittsburg, Pa.; Rev. William Schoenfeld, of New York City, and Prof. Wessel delivered the English address, while Rev. P. Brand, Rev. H. Speckhardt and Rev. H. Daib spoke in German.

On Monday evening, the 11th, a service was held in the interest of the Deaf-mute Mission at St. Luke's Church. Ten deaf-mute missionaries, stationed at various parts of the country, presented different aspects of their work to an audience that overflowed the church.

The communion service of the convention was held on Thursday evening. On Saturday noon the convention adjourned, to meet at Milwaukee in 1917.

A LITTLE ANGEL OF THE MOUNTAINS

BY CYRUS TOWNSEND BRADY

CHAPTER VII—Continued

"THAT'S a good suggestion," said the master of ceremonies; "Parson Bill, I guess it's up to you."

"No, not me," returned the big miner in sudden alarm. "I couldn't possibly do it, gents."

"Try the kid," suggested a voice from the crowd.

"Young feller, kin you make a prayer?" asked Old Four Eyes, quick to accept the suggestion.

Little Olaf shrank back, but Parson Bill, who had resumed his hold on the boy's hand, led him forward.

"I done my part, now you do yours," he urged.

It was a hard place for the little fellow. He was almost as much frightened as he had been at the trial.

"Go ahead, kid."

"You kin do it."

"Spit it out, lad," came from here and there in the group of men.

There was kindness and inspiration in their encouraging words.

"I don't know any prayer, 'cept—"

"Say any you know; I guess God'll understand. You don't have to be partikler with him," said Old Four Eyes encouragingly.

"All right, sir," said the boy, summoning his courage. "But I always pray on my knees. Won't you all please kneel down, too, if I've got to do it?"

"I'll shoot the head off the last man up, if there's any lingerin'," ferociously said Parson Bill, getting down laboriously on his knees and drawing his revolver at the same time.

Whether it was the threat or the influence which had the effect was not clear, but the whole company instantly followed his example. Olaf was very nervous. In his nervousness he naturally resorted to his own language, and in the accents and words of his mother tongue, he said the Lord's Prayer and "Now I Lay Me Down to Sleep." When he had finished these he looked up at his mentor.

"Say, kid," said Old Four Eyes gravely from his kneeling position by the lad's side, "we've no doubt that them's good prayers, an' jest as intell'gible to God as any others, but we're American citizens an' we'd like to have you say jest a few things we kin understand, too; if you kin, that is."

"Please, dear God," faltered the boy, "don't be too hard on this poor dead man and on all the rest of us, for Jesus Christ's sake. Amen," he went on after painful hesitation.

"Can't you say any more?" asked Parson Bill.

The lad shook his head.

"Just say anything. It sounds awful good to us," he continued amid nods of approval from everybody.

In desperation the boy put up his hands again. Then to their great astonishment the miners heard him say solemnly and with a quaint accent—the alphabet!

"A, B, C, D—" so the little fellow ran on, the letters dropping falteringly from his lips.

He said them all through, and when he pronounced the last one, he closed his extraordinary prayer with another "amen"; and with the remark that God would know how to make the letters into words, which was certainly indisputable, he rose to his feet. It was unanimously voted by the miners that no better prayers had ever been said than those they had been listening to, nor by sweeter lips. Then they filled in the grave, and to indicate that this was really a Christian burial, thrust into the mound a rude cross consisting of two hastily nailed together pieces of packing box. Upon it some one had rudely scrawled the name of him who lay beneath.

The warning in the life and death of Bud Wallace which had been pointed out in the words of Parson Bill lingered for a little time in the memory of those who heard it. But by evening it was either forgot or those who remembered it sedulously sought to drown out its recollection. The Red Dog and The Black Pup were as full as ever, and Cañon Creek prepared for its next week's labor by going to bed drunk, just as before. But yet not quite as before. Some good seed had been sown.

To the statement that the town went to bed drunk as usual, one exception must be made. Parson Bill, upon whom Fate or Providence had devolved the temporary guardianship of little Olaf, felt it hardly in consonance with his new dignity to desert his young charge so astonishingly thrust upon him. For the rest of the day, at least, and by the exercise of a self-denial difficult for the untempted and uninitiated to comprehend, he had kept away from The Red Dog, and had spent the remainder of the afternoon in the woods with the little lad, learning from him all the details of his checkered and eventful life.

It would be untrue to say that Parson Bill had been entirely satisfied with his occupation. In spite of the approval of his better nature, his soul lusted for the drinking vessels of the camp, as did Israel of old for the flesh

The Return of Colonel Roosevelt

COLONEL THEODORE ROOSEVELT reached home May 19 from his extensive explorations in South America, during which he not only made large collections of natural history objects, and discovered a tribe of Indians, but also discovered a hitherto unknown river 1,000 miles in length, whose existence is now a matter of more or less academic debate among scientists, though any doubt expressed is of the accuracy of Colonel Roosevelt's observations and not of his sincerity. He is prepared to substantiate his claims, however. In the course of his adventures Colonel Roosevelt was frequently in serious peril, and as the result of one wound and of sickness he was considerably weakened and had lost in weight. He was in high spirits, however, and full to the point of overflowing with the wonders of his trip, but managed to contain himself. He went direct from the ship upon which he arrived to Oyster Bay by special tug. Promptly the next day the colonel resumed his place in editorial and political affairs.

Royalty Visiting Round

THE popular king and queen of Denmark are on a social trip to various courts, and their visit to England was the occasion for an imposing spectacle and some press freedom of speech concerning alleged failure to draw up a proper program of arrangements, the latter resulting in the same embarrassment to England's "company" that would light upon any American family who might arrive at a relative's with more trunks than the spare room would hold, and a servant who hadn't been expected. However, royalty are well bred, and only the press was really perturbed over the amusing miscalculations.

Unveiling of the Barry Statue

AT THE impressive ceremonies attending the unveiling of the memorial statue to Commodore John Barry—often called the Father of the American Navy—at Washington, May 16, President Wilson delivered an address surcharged with condemnation of all efforts to divide the allegiance of American citizens. "No man who thinks first of himself and afterwards of his country can call himself an American," he declared. Reminding his outdoor audience that "John Barry was an Irishman, but his heart crossed the Atlantic with him," the President said, "Some Americans need hyphens in their names because only part of them has come over. But when the whole man has come over, heart and thought and all, the hyphen drops of its own weight out of his name. This man was not an Irish-American; he was an Irishman who became an American. I venture to say if he voted he voted with regard to the questions as they looked on this side of the water and not on the other side; and that is my infallible test of a genuine American, that when he votes or when he acts or when he fights his heart and his thought are not there, but in the center of the emotions and the purpose and the policies of the United States." The Barry statue was erected through the activities of Americans of Irish descent, thousands of whom assembled for the unveiling.

Japan Mourns Empress

ON THE night of May 24 the solemn pageant of a Japanese royal funeral engrossed Tokyo, as the body of the Empress Dowager Haruko, in the great state car drawn by white oxen, was carried through the streets to a shrine in the temple grounds, where occurred the final ceremony in a series held ever since her death, April 11. The city was illuminated by uncountable torches and lanterns, and practically every person of official importance, including representatives of foreign countries, took part in the parade or mingled with the vast throngs of onlookers. The cortège passed over streets thickly laid with sand. Amongst the banners and torches were carried evergreen trees. President Wilson sent a wreath.

To Spy Out the Trade Fields

IN THE legislative, executive and judicial appropriation bill, carrying an appropriation of $31,238,278, reported to the Senate, May 15, the Department of Commerce is authorized to employ a staff of men responsible to the Secretary of Commerce to investigate conditions of foreign trade for the benefit of United States business, an innovation suggested by Secretary Redfield. The effort of the House to reduce mileage allowances has been overruled; the office of examiner of the mint proposed, a new automobile for Vice-President Marshall and one for Speaker Clark allowed and a considerable increase in clerical help in different departments, besides many important items.

Newest "Biggest" Liner

THE biggest trans-Atlantic liner now afloat, the Vaterland, of the Hamburg-American Line, left Cherbourg at six o'clock Friday evening, May 15, on her first trip to New York. The ship is pronounced perfect in every detail, and is fully equipped for comfort and safety, her first-class accommodations being as luxurious as the most modern hotel. The comfort of the crew, especially stokers, is provided for, and in the size of the public rooms, stairways, outside decks, the ship is described as magnificent. The Vaterland can make twenty-six knots an hour, and looms huge among all shipping through which she passes, being 950 feet long, 100 wide and 65 deep, and of 58,000 tonnage. The turbines develop 95,000 horsepower. Lifeboats to the number of 81 plus two motorboats with wireless apparatus are part of the Vaterland's safety equipment. It took a fleet of 25 tugs four hours to warp the gigantic ship into her Hoboken berth May 21.

England's Civil War Cloud

ON THE eve of the third reading of the Irish Home Rule Bill in the House of Commons, which by vote scheduled for May 26 would automatically become law if it passes, Premier Asquith announced that an amending bill would be proposed in the House of Lords, the nature of which he refused to divulge, whereupon opponents of Home Rule began a campaign of disorder to delay matters, causing peremptory suspension of the sitting of the House on May 21. It was expected at that time that calmer conditions would prevail at the next session, May 25.

Putting Out the Fires of Alcohol

INCREASING restrictions upon the sale of vicious drugs and alcoholic drinks in the African and other colonies of England, France and Germany was reported at the recent International Anti-Alcohol Conference in Paris. The trade in these things had gained great headway because of liberties too easily granted in the beginning of colonial development, but absolute governmental prohibition of intoxicating drink now prevails in a wide area in Africa. The zones of prohibition are being extended as rapidly as conditions permit by agreement among the colonizing Powers.

Unearths Priceless Gems

A REMARKABLE find of jewel treasures in the pyramid of Senusert II (3400 B.C.) is credited to Professor Flinders Petrie of the British School of Archeology in Egypt. Fourteen royal tombs were uncovered, and in the burial chamber of a princess was found a sarcophagus which had been rifled. Exploring further Professor Petrie came upon great beads of gold, a diadem, armlets and other objects of wonderful beauty and value embedded in the earth. The report states that the entire collection embraced a large number of objects, besides 100,000 beads of gold and precious stones. The account reads like the most fascinating of treasure-trove stories.

State Despises Its Sovereignty

CONDITIONS in Colorado are bad. The special session of the legislature called May 4 to consider five strike measures, viz.: Militia payment, saloon closing, firearms prohibition, compulsory arbitration and mounted State constabulary, passed the first three only, and adjourned May 16. A mediation committee was appointed, but the positive refusal of the mine-owners to arbitrate tends to defeat attempts at a peaceful settlement. Governor Ammons notified President Wilson of the legislature's intention to adjourn, and requested continued presence of the 1,800 Federal troops now there. He received as stern a rebuke as any of the States ever drew from a President because of the failure to provide fully for the situation. "I cannot conceive that the State is willing to forego her sovereignty or to throw herself entirely upon the government of the United States" was part of the President's telegram. A minority of the legislature telegraphed a regretful admission that the rebuke was deserved. Governor Ammons attempted to justify his course, and the legislature adjourned with the State still dependent for safety from civil war upon Federal troops for the present. The court-martial of the militia and other investigations reveal great lawlessness on the part of the State's soldiers who were on guard in the coal regions. A delegation of citizens with some of the brutally treated women went to Washington to relate the facts.

JESUS LOVING THE UNLOVELY*

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON BY DR. AND MRS. WILBUR F. CRAFTS

THREE kinds of sinners: The Pharisee in the temple who said, "God, I thank thee that I am not as the rest of men, extortioners, unjust, adulterers. . . . I fast twice in the week. I give tithes of all that I get." He was self-righteous and boastful. The publican in the temple, who prayed: "God be merciful to me a sinner!" He was penitent and humble. Zaccheus, the publican in Jericho; he was penitent and desired to make good.

As Jesus went in and out of the temple during his ministry on earth, he frequently saw the first two kinds of sinners. Humanly speaking we should say that the Pharisees were a thorn in the flesh of Jesus. As we read of Jesus' dealings with them, we cannot see that he was ever fretted or annoyed by them, but he was always ready to meet them fairly and squarely and to give them deserved rebuke. He did not cast them off; we read many times that he went to a feast in a Pharisee's house. The second kind of sinners, publicans, were notorious for their cheating, overreaching qualities as tax-collectors, but they were not irretrievably bad, because many publicans came to John for baptism (Luke 3: 12, 13). Also they came to Jesus to hear his words (Luke 15: 1). They sought close intercourse with Jesus. (Matt. 9: 10.) Jesus called a publican to be one of his twelve apostles. (Matt. 9: 9.)

Zaccheus, the chief publican, the "majordomo" of his class, was so curious to see Jesus as he was passing through Jericho, that he climbed into a sycamore tree under which he knew Jesus would walk. Zaccheus saw Jesus, and Jesus saw Zaccheus, and recognized in his curiosity a spark of true seeking. He called to him: "Zaccheus, come down, for to-day I must abide at thy house." And Zaccheus made haste and came down, and received him joyfully. He did not shake hands with Jesus, according to our Western fashion, but he bowed low before him, and the expression "received him joyfully" leads us to think that he may have kissed Jesus on either cheek, according to the Oriental way.

How exasperated were the Pharisees! They were loud in their murmurings. "He is gone to be a guest with a man that is a sinner." What they deemed Jesus' greatest reproach was his highest praise, for he was bearing God's banner of love: "For God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life." (John 3: 16.) That was a memorable visit, the outcome of which was the complete surrender of Zaccheus to the rule of Christ in his life, for not only did he tell Jesus that he proposed to give half of his riches to the poor, but out of the half remaining to restore four times the amount he had unlawfully taken over for himself in collecting taxes. We are not told that Zaccheus thereby made himself a poor man, but undoubtedly he did strip himself of his fortune. We can almost hear him joyfully saying: "This is the best day of my life. How good is it to be unloaded of selfishness and sin!" Zaccheus and all repentant sinners may be thus described: "The happy man was born in the city of Regeneration, in the parish of Repentance, into life. He was educated at the school of Obedience, and now lives in Perseverance Road. He works at the factory of Diligence, and is noted for his large estate in the country of Christian Contentment, and does not do little business of self-denial. He wears the plain attire of Humility, but goes to the court of the Great King, the 'holiest of all,' in a garment called the Robe of Christ's Righteousness. At the close of the day he is found in the valley of Self-Abasement as he reviews its occurrences, and invariably climbs afterward the bright-visioned mountains of Spiritual-Mindedness. He breakfasts every morning on spiritual prayer, and sups every evening on the same; has meat to eat the world knows not of, and his drink is the sincere milk of the Word."

It is our privilege so to live that such things may be said of us.

"But I am not a sinner," said a lady to whom a clergyman tried to talk about becoming a follower of the Lord Jesus Christ. "What do you mean when you declare you are not a sinner?" he asked. She replied: "I mean that I have never done anything wicked or wrong." In fact, she was of good standing in the community where she lived, as one who acted well the proprieties of life. "Do you read your Bible?" "I have no Bible," she replied; "it does not interest me in the least. But I am not disposed to think it is not given of God." The clergyman replied: "The Bible says 'All have sinned, and come short of the glory of God,' and 'If we say we have not sinned we make him a liar.'" (Rom. 3: 22, 23, and I John 1: 10.) She turned pale, as her sin began to loom up before her. The clergyman continued: "The Bible distinctly says that 'Sin is lawlessness.' The Lord Jesus distinctly says the law is embraced in these two sayings: 'Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind,' and 'Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself.' Permit me to ask, have you always loved this way?" "No, I have not," she replied. "Then according to your own confession you are a sinner; and if you have never thus loved God and your neighbor, and you are, as I suppose, about thirty years of age, you have been sinning with every breath, and thus have committed millions of sins, and you are adding to the frightful number every moment you live."

The clergyman went on: "Neither is this all, nor the worst. You have received God's mercies of health and home and love, and have shown no gratitude for them, but worst of all, you have rejected his dear Son who died upon the cross to be your Saviour. Dare you now say in the shadow of that cross, 'I am not a sinner'?" Then she broke down and exclaimed: "I am too great a sinner to be saved." "No," replied the clergyman, "for Jesus himself has said: 'Him that cometh to me, I will in no wise cast out.'" And on that very day that she was willing to reckon herself a sinner, she was "saved by grace."

A missionary in India used the following illustration: "A great and deadly serpent entered into a house, and made its abode in a hole in the wall. The family was greatly alarmed, and the neighbors came running in to see what was the matter. 'A snake, a deadly snake has come here to live! Oh, what shall we do?' they cried. Said one, 'Have the house thoroughly whitewashed.' Said another, 'Have it painted, too, and send for the carpenter to mend doors and windows.' Said a third, 'Send for a Brahman to utter a mantra' ('sacred voice,' in Sanscrit). All this was done, and for a while the family lived in peace. But one night, when all were asleep, the snake came out of its hole, and bit the father, so that he died. Two nights afterward the snake bit the son, and he died also. Brother," said the missionary, "do you know the meaning of this parable? The house is the body; the hole in the inner wall is the heart, and the serpent is sin. All of your daubings and ceremonies are of no avail; you need a remedy for the bite of the serpent, and Christ is the only remedy."

"The Son of man is come to seek and to save that which was lost." (Luke 19: 10.)

The apostle Paul is gazing with wonder on the Son of man coming down from heaven on the ladder of humiliation round by round when he writes: "Christ being equal with God made himself of no reputation, and took upon him the form of a servant, and was made in the likeness of men; and being found in fashion as a man, he humbled himself, and became obedient unto death, even the death of the cross." (Phil. 2: 7, 8.) That ladder speaks of our lostness. It reminds us that we are in the slippery places of temptation and sin, as it brings salvation within our reach. To those who do not recognize their lostness the ladder of salvation can do no good. A person not convinced of being in peril refuses a rescue, and so those who think themselves safe will not receive the Saviour. The Lord Jesus when he was on earth went not merely to the synagogues and temple to speak to those who had interest enough to come; he went out into the streets and lanes of the cities, seeking and saving those who in soul as well as body were poor and maimed and halt and blind. It was not enough that he had provided an open heaven and open temples and synagogues as sheepfolds to which every wandering sheep would be welcome, but he must also seek and save the lost.

And Jesus came to all the world not only to seek and save lost souls, but everything lost through sin: lost innocence of Eden and childhood; lost powers of holy thought and love; lost possibilities of noble manhood; lost hours of the past; lost treasures of every kind which Satan had stolen from us.

The late Bishop Whipple has been called "the nineteenth century apostle to the Indians." He was once visited by a wild chief who asked that a missionary might be sent to his tribe, saying: "I want your religion for my people. You are patient, and you make the trail plain." The mission was planted, the chief became a faithful Christian. Let it be the aim of Sunday school teachers to make "the trail plain" in the teaching of this lesson. Bishop Whipple was called "Straight Tongue" by the Indians, because he always made his message so simple and clear that all understood what he was trying to teach them. Let Sunday school teachers all strive to be "Straight Tongues"!

THE ASCENSION

IN TRIUMPH, over all his foes,
From Olivet our Lord arose.
While anxious eyes beheld his flight,
The clouds received him from their sight.

His work complete—in glory now
The crown is resting on his brow.
No more the thorns—the nails—the spear,
But oh! those marks! we hold them dear.

They tell his love—his matchless love!
The brightest jewel from above.
Forevermore that gem shall shine,
The Saviour's light—the light divine!

In triumph now, at God's right hand,
Enthroned, our Saviour has command.
The mansions of the blest are there,
Prepared beneath his gracious care.

There we at last with him shall dwell,
In perfect peace! and who can tell
The heavenly joys there kept in store
For us to share forevermore?

Extol the Saviour! laud his name!
He saves us from our sin and shame.
Our hope is built on Christ the Lord!

* THE INTERNATIONAL SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON for Sunday, June 14, 1914. The Friend of Sinners. Luke 18: 9-14; 19: 1-10. GOLDEN TEXT: "I came not to call the righteous, but sinners." Mark 2: 17.

Deep Fat Frying with Crisco

Without exception, cooking authorities agree that deep frying not only is more healthful but more economical than shallow frying.

You can fry many foods in deep fat which you now fry in the pan or skillet.

With Crisco there is no smoke in the kitchen because Crisco reaches frying point without smoking. Test for proper heat with a bit of the food you are about to cook. Use plenty of Crisco—about 3 lbs. on an average, so that the heat will not be reduced when the raw food is added bit by bit. There practically is no absorption if plenty of Crisco is used and the temperature kept high. There is a great saving, because of the small amount absorbed and because you may use the same Crisco over and over. In fact, you can fry fish, onions and potatoes all in the same Crisco. Strain out the food particles after each frying.

Potato Croquettes

(Level measurements)

2 pints mashed potatoes
2 eggs
2 tablespoonfuls Crisco
1 tablespoonful chopped parsley
Salt, pepper and red pepper to taste

Mash potatoes by rubbing them through wire sieve with back of wooden spoon; dissolve Crisco, add it to potatoes with 1 of the eggs well beaten and seasonings. Mix and divide into 10 or 12 pieces, form them into neat croquettes, brush over with remaining beaten egg, toss in breadcrumbs, and fry in hot Crisco.

New Cook Book and "Calendar of Dinners"

This new book by Marion Harris Neil, Cookery Editor, Ladies' Home Journal, gives 250 original recipes, is attractively illustrated, and tells many interesting and valuable facts about cooking and food products. It also tells the interesting story of Crisco's discovery and manufacture. It is free. There is also a quality edition of this book containing a total of 615 Neil Recipes and a Calendar of Dinners—365 menus of original and tasty meals. This book is bound in blue and gold cloth. The regular price of this book is twenty-five cents. To those answering this advertisement it will be sent for five 2-cent stamps. In writing for either book, address Dept. A LITTLE ANGEL OF THE MOUNTAINS pots of Egypt. But he fought down the temptation for one day, at least; and even after little Olaf, utterly exhausted by the great events of the last two days, had fallen sound asleep in the shack, Parson Bill still resisted the temptation that so sorely beset him. He flung himself down on the ground with his back to the wall of his house and stared down the street toward the brightly lighted so-called palace of pleasure, but which Parson Bill knew was hell—and fought off the temptation to desert his little friend and repair thither. And he stayed in his place and fought the battle until the lights went out and the graying of the eastern sky told him that dawn was at hand. It was the first of many similar battles to be fought by Parson Bill, in which he was by no means so successful as on this eventful day.

Among those present at Bud Wallace's funeral had been young Blue Wing, the Indian. He had been released after Dead Shot Jackson's flight, his property restored to him, and he had been given the dead man's horse and belongings in a sort of rude attempt at salving his outraged feelings. Duty called him to go at once to look after the bodies of his parents. But he had lingered until he could get speech with the boy.

"You good to me. You my friend," he had said, taking little Olaf's hand and looking down into his bright face.

"I was afraid at first, but now I'm glad I spoke," answered the boy truthfully, not a little proud of his action, indeed.

"You brave boy. I no forget. Some day bimeby Blue Wing help little Yellow Hair," he added as he turned away and went down the trail.

CHAPTER VIII

CANON CREEK practically adopted little Olaf Tryggvesson, to the great good of the camp, although whether or not to the corresponding benefit of the boy did not at first appear. That is not to say that there was any very great or very sudden outward change in the town, but there was a difference. The saloons lost no patronage to speak of. Gambling and other professions of that ilk went on as before. Still there was a difference.

By unanimous consent Parson Bill had assumed the rôle of especial guardian of the boy, and every one had recognized his peculiar fitness for the position — that is, comparatively speaking. In the country of the blind, the one-eyed are kings, and Parson Bill was Canon Creek's best. "Our one best bet!" they would have phrased it, perhaps. Certainly he was the least unfit. At any rate, he took the "kid," as he was universally called, under his charge.

The few books that circulated in the Colorado mining town were not of such a character as to commend themselves, even to the most careless or indifferent judge, as fit for the young; nor were the illustrated papers affected by those of the citizens who read, desirable objects for perusal by extreme youth and innocence.

The education of little Olaf, that is, the education one gets from books, was entirely neglected, therefore; but the education which results from roaming the hills; from contact with Nature; from the contagious uplift of the great mountain range; the infectious chatter of merry brooks, and softly whispering pines in summer wind—these were all his.

Like the most of the citizens, Parson Bill was a prospector and miner in a desultory way, sometimes relieving these pursuits by hunting and fishing. The other fellows usually worked in couples, but Parson Bill had no partner except the lad. Together they roamed the hills. While reticent enough with his fellows, the man freely opened such treasures as his mind held to his youthful companion. The two talked often together, going to and fro between shack and ridge on their gold-hunting errand, or wandering with gun or rod by brook and wood, or resting in the long lazy noon hour while they discussed their simple luncheon. For all Parson Bill's command of language, his education in the more solid branches of learning had been of a rudimentary character. The days of acquirement were far behind him, for Parson Bill had well passed middle age. His life had been spent in hard places, while the fine edge of his intelligence had been blunted and nicked by the base uses to which it had been put. It was a question, too, whether it could ever be sharpened to keenness again.

There was one subject which these two never discussed, and that was religion. Little Olaf had a boy's timidity and shyness about approaching such a subject, but his timidity and shyness were as nothing compared to that of the man. Indeed, the first time they bunked together—the boy in a smaller makeshift bed which Bill had knocked together against the opposite side of the house—Parson Bill saw the lad get down on his knees for his nightly prayers, and the sight had affected him so greatly as to impel him to get up and go outside. When he came back, the praying was over and his small partner was safely tucked beneath the covers. He was wide awake, however, that night, and he observed with astonishment that his big friend said no prayers, but tumbled himself unceremoniously into his bunk when he was ready.

"Parson Bill," began the lad doubtfully, at last, "don't you say your prayers at night?"

"No!" snorted Bill uneasily, not much liking the inquisitorial session which he saw was impending, but scarcely seeing how to avoid it.

"Why not?"

"What'd be the use? God's got no ears for a low-down chap like me."

"But if you said them—"

"He wouldn't hear me, kid. The prayers of the likes of me don't count much with God, I guess."

"But he hears me. Miss Grace said so."

"Who is Miss Grace, an' how does she know?"

"Miss Grace was the mission teacher where I went, back in New York, and she knows everything."

"Just so," said Bill. "Well, I ain't never met her an' I reckon if I did she'd say I was about right."

"I'll ask God to hear your prayers, Bill, if you'd like me to," said the boy, after a moment's reflection.

"Don't trouble, sonny," said Bill. "I ain't worth it an' it wouldn't be no use no ways."

Now Olaf had a great admiration for the big miner and a corresponding respect for his judgment. Parson Bill must surely be right, and yet—

"Well, then, if you won't say them, I won't," returned the boy with a sudden flash of inspiration.

"Lookee here, kid, that won't do at all," said Bill sternly, sitting up in his bunk and shaking his big fist at the lad. "I may be as bad as they make 'em—"

"You're not as bad as Dead Shot Jackson, are you?" interrupted the other.

"Well, no, not quite as bad as him, I guess; but what I was goin' to say was this—I know what's what, an' if I ketch you goin' to bed without sayin' your prayers, I'll take some of the hide off you. I'd hate to do it, but as I'm your gardeen, self-app'inted an' endorsed by the camp, I sometimes have to go agin' my own feelin's. Every time you don't say your prayers at night you gits a lickin' for keeps; you understand that, don't you?"

Parson Bill's idea of the religious duties of parents and guardians was by no means an unusual one, it appeared. The boy laughed, not at all afraid of the threat. "You wouldn't

Questions and Answers

J. V. B., Rotterdam, Holland. 1. Are we able to work out our own salvation? 2. If so, what about predestination? 3. Does a minister preach the Gospel partially and one-sidedly if he speaks only of the love of Christ?

1. The answer to J. L. F. in the Mail-Bag of May 20 gave some suggestions as to the soul's need of Christ, and the way in which he helps us. After we have received salvation by faith we can "work out" our own destiny and gain our own rewards by the use we make of the grace God gives us. Even before conversion we must ourselves, through the workings of his Spirit, approach Christ, confess our sins, ask his pardon and his gift of life, and completely trust him. That is our part. His part is to forgive and save us. After conversion we become "workers together with God"; he co-operates with us, giving us his power to be used in our work for him. 2. Predestination is a subject so full of complexity and has given rise to such bitter controversy that it is unwise to discuss it here. Theologians find it impossible to agree about it, and the subject in actual preaching has largely been dropped. Calvinists and Arminians unite now in announcing that "Whosoever will may come." 3. It is, of course, unwise to omit from our preaching references to the justice of God and Christ's insistence upon the obligations of the moral law. We must emphasize sin and its dreadful consequences, not only in the next life but as revealed so hideously in this life. But, after all, the great, dominant note should be the love of Christ. It was love that led him to come to earth; love that led him to lay down his life, and the great soul-winners are those who are great lovers of souls. "The Son of man is come to seek and to save that which was lost." "God commendeth his love toward us in that while we were yet sinners Christ died for us." This is the message that leads men to yield their hearts to him.

A suggestion: Readers communicating with the Mail-Bag, the Bible Study or any other department of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD will find it convenient for themselves and for others to remember the form used in writing Scripture references. The order is this: Name of book; number of chapter, followed by a colon (:); number of verse. For example: I Thes. 5: 23. If several verses are included in the passage the numbers of the verses should be separated by commas. For example: I Thes. 5: 16, 19, 22. If several consecutive verses are indicated the first and last numbers should be connected by a hyphen. For example: I Thes. 5: 16-24. If the passage extends from one chapter to another a dash should connect the first and last references: I Thes. 4: 13—5: 8. If a number of references are given one after the other they should be separated by semicolons.

I. W., Dallas, Ore. 1. Where in the Bible is Sunday called the Lord's Day? 2. Are the Lord's day and the day of the Lord the same?

1. The term is used in Rev. 1: 10. It is understood from other New Testament passages that this was Sunday and that it was the custom of the early Christians to meet and worship on this day. See John 20: 19, 26 (eight days means one week, according to the Hebrew method of counting, which included both the first and last days); Acts 20: 7; I Cor. 16: 2. 2. No. The "day of the Lord" means the day of our Lord's return.

S. R. K., Viola, Kan. The story of the importunate widow related in Luke 18 is a parable which is designed to follow as a continuation of the subject treated in the previous chapter—the coming of the Son of man, which, however long it might be delayed, should yet be the theme of our prayers and our hopes. Commentators on the parable hold that the Christian Church is represented as a widow, desolate, oppressed and defenseless, and exposed to all manner of indignities and wrongs from which the Judge of all can alone set her speedily free. Her incessant crying, even when he seems to have turned a heedless ear, shows her faith, and ultimately produces the desired result.

J., Keokuk, Iowa. To believe the views stated in your letter would be fatalism. God has made man a reasoning and responsible being, with the power to discern between right and wrong, although that power may be greater in some than in others. Discussion as to the nature and extent of the volition associated with every act would be endless. Training, environment, opportunity—all exercise an influence in determining that for which a person is morally responsible. All we know is that we are conscious, some to a greater, others to a lesser extent, of this power of free uncontrolled choice of action. Some have contended that even such a "freedom of choice" may itself be controlled or regulated by a law which reigns within the very will itself. But leaving all argument aside, the best authorities take the clear and unmistakable language of both the Old Testament and New Testament as justifying the claim of individual moral responsbility. "Come now, and let us reason together, saith the Lord. Though your sins be as scarlet, they shall be white as snow." The great mass of Bible evidence which recognizes human volition and responsibility is familiar to Bible readers.

Anxious, Wallula, Wash. It is a good rule to abstain from any amusement concerning which you have serious doubts. We are told to avoid "even the appearance of evil." There are so many amusements that are unobjectionable, that one need hardly suffer the loss of those that are undesirable for many reasons. You should make it a matter of conscience. At the same time, you should try not to deprive your children of that reasonable enjoyment which belongs to youth and which, if it be not granted freely, is liable to be taken surreptitiously.

P. B., Wilton, Wis. Auricular confession was unknown in the early Christian Church. The usual form of confessing sins was before the congregation. Sozomen, an early Greek writer and authority on church history, says that auricular confession was introduced in the Eastern Church in the fifth century. Pope Leo (about the same period) discouraged public and enjoined private confession. There was no law on the subject, however, in the Roman Church until the Lateran Council of 1215, which decreed private confession.

L. M. M., New Haven, Conn. The "Dark Day" occurred on May 19, 1780, and was marked by phenomena which were visible throughout New England. The greatest alarm prevailed in a number of States. For fifteen hours the land seemed wrapped in a dense atmosphere. Beginning at about 10.30 A.M., the sun and sky were hidden; all labor ceased; cattle and fowl went to stall and roost; frequent thunder increased the general terror; all business was suspended; the State legislature of Connecticut kept at its work by using candles.

Eads Bridge. N. W. Merrill of San Diego, Calif., writes that Eads Bridge is the second one built across the river, the railroad bridge at Rock Island antedating it by twenty years (1854). The bridge, he says, is not a suspension, but a steel tubular bridge. The foundations of the abutments were from 150 to 200 feet deep. The spans measure a little over 500 feet. Our correspondent lived in St. Louis while the bridge was being erected.

THE YOUNG PEOPLE'S MEETINGS

NOTES ON THE CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR, EPWORTH LEAGUE AND BAPTIST YOUNG PEOPLE'S UNION TOPICS

Employers and Employees*

THERE is no more important and insistent economic question before the public to-day than the question of the employer and the employee. We are to approach the problem as Christians.

It is necessary in studying the words of all the Scriptures to keep in mind the setting of time and place in which they were uttered or written. Failure to do this has sometimes resulted in terrible failure to understand God's final and highest purposes. For instance, all through the years when the horrible custom of chattel slavery was admitted, there were religious people who seemed to prove from the Bible that slavery was an institution founded by God himself, and sanctioned up through the very latest messages of the New Testament. The very words we are studying for our Scripture lesson do not refer actually to the problem of employer and employee, but of master and slave. The word translated "servant" is that dreadful word slave—bondslave. One of the books of the New Testament is a letter written by Paul, urging a master to take back kindly a fugitive slave whom the apostle had urged to return. But the fact that Paul believed in slavery in the first century does not at all prove that he would believe in it in the eighteenth or nineteenth.

So it is not right to take these words which Paul spoke to slaves and masters in the first century and say that that is precisely the message he would give to employer and employee if he could speak to us in the twentieth century. For instance, he would not say: "Employees, obey, in all things, your employers," for some employers are very unjust. And such a command as this would have blocked all progress on the part of the laborers throughout the centuries. But his words, "Masters, give unto your servants that which is just and equal," are just as appropriate and binding now as then. It is when employers disobey this command that the employees have the right to revolt. Within the bounds of justice, employees must obey. That is, they must carry out the terms of their contract. When they engage their services to an employer they must abide by the rules of the establishment, carrying out their employers' directions and serving them faithfully and well. Whatever readjustments may finally be made in the whole matter, present contracts must be carried out faithfully on both sides, except as by mutual understanding and agreement those contracts are changed.

In three great respects the message of Paul stands to-day firm and sound. First, his plea for justice. All that the Bible has to say about love is based on the still more fundamental idea of justice. It is this fact which makes it so offensive to every honest and self-respecting soul to observe a man who has amassed great fortunes through oppression, injustice, and cruelty, try to square himself with God and humanity by making philanthropic and charitable gifts out of money which, by all the laws of real justice, has never actually belonged to him at all. So there can be no permanent agreement, satisfactory to God and man, between employer and employee until a just basis of payments has been established by which the worker gets a reasonable share of the profits of his toil. There are some tremendous and scathing passages throughout the Bible which thunder forth wrath and doom upon the man who is unjust and oppressive to those with whom he deals, many of them referring specifically to his dealings with those whom he has engaged to do his work. Read carefully James 5: 1-4; Prov. 22: 22, 23; Isa. 3: 3-15; Jer. 22: 13.

Paul's second great plea, not expressed definitely in this paragraph from his letter to the Colossians, but breathing through all his writings, is for love. It is strange that people are so slow to realize that this magic gift and secret of Christ and his followers will solve every problem of human relations. Sooner or later society must come to realize that the only sane and truly profitable way of life is through helpfulness, not antagonism; through the supplying of needs, not the making of profits; through co-operation, not competition. That was the plan of Jesus; it is the only plan that will work out to ultimate satisfaction.

The third point Paul makes, though it is really his first point, for he puts it first through all his teaching, is his insistence upon the recognition of God. Notice how in every sentence here the chief thought is of God. He is the only true foundation and source both of justice and of love. Servants, be obedient, serving not to please men, but "fearing God." "Whatsoever ye do, do it from the heart, as to the Lord, and not unto men." Your real reward will come from him, for "ye serve the Lord Christ." Masters, remember: "Ye also have a Master in heaven."

Prepared Men*

WHAT advice can be given to our young people who are eager to get the best possible training for their work? Our Scripture references are rather terrifying. They would imply that Greek and Hebrew are necessary for successful soul-winning. But when we have accepted this theory along comes a man like D. L. Moody or General Booth or S. H. Hadley or "Billy" Sunday and absolutely proves that the prescribed course of training for the ministry is, at least in some cases, altogether unnecessary.

Jesus said plainly: "One thing is needful." That needful thing is communion with Him. It used to be pointed out in this connection that the apostles were unlearned men; then it was remembered that for nearly three years they had "been with Jesus." This was preparation enough.

Much education is merely experimenting. Educators have been experimenting for centuries on the best way to train young people for life, and they have not found out yet. Do not be discouraged if the advantages of a university education are denied you. Even if you go to college you must in the last analysis educate yourself. Many self-satisfied young persons stalk forth with their fresh diplomas more ignorant of real life than a newsboy or an office boy.

All real education consists of just three things—or you can, as a matter of fact, cut it down to two: learning about God, and learning about people. We might add learning about yourself, but as you study other people you will understand yourself.

To prepare for Christian work get near to Christ. Nothing can take the place of that. Get close to people. Understand them; like them. Read history, literature, philosophy, economics, missions, the newspaper, so as to understand people and know what they are longing for. Then lead all the people you can reach to the Christ whom you have found. That preparation and that work will make your life worth while.

BEFORE AND AFTER

BY MARGARET E. SANGSTER, JR.

A GREAT many otherwise intelligent and inquiring people buy a magazine, and after having read the fiction in it, ow it away. They never even nce at the advertising section, and skipping it they pass over a great l that is helpful and interesting. ey miss recent inventions, and some the best illustrations in the paper, l all sorts of nice things to eat. But I am getting away from my ry.

I didn't begin to tell you all the d things that you miss when you p over the advertisements. I began sk you if you have ever seen a cer- n kind of advertisement for the get- n variety of medicine. There will two pictures, side by side. The pic- e of a woman fat enough to com- nd almost any salary in a three- g circus, and the picture of a ng lady with large, dreamy eyes, utifully arranged hair, and a ph-like figure. Under the two pic- es there is usually a title like this:

"BEFORE AND AFTER TAKING"

Somehow this impossible, rather y title brings up just the topic I nt to tell about. For I want to w you some of the letters that tell ut my girls before and after tak- a dose of Money-Makers' Club. Do letters bore you? I hope not; anyway, I fully intend showing m to you. You see, I think you like m as much as I do, and I like them much that every new letter seems e a call from a very near and dear end. Here are some of the letters. This is my first message from a le girl in a Western town. She ites rather carefully:

'DEAR FRIEND: Please send me the ney-Makers' Club booklet. It may help at all, and I may not even be erested in it; but I would like to it. I graduate from school this ne and I want to earn my own com- ncement dress."

I sent her the booklet and these are o of her other notes. I could not w all that she has sent me:

'I am very much interested in your klet," the first one said. "And I pe I am going to make good at it. vill write later and tell you all about —shall I say?—success."

This is the third and last letter that vill show you from her. It is rather ferent from the other two:

'I am so happy and excited," she ote me gleefully, "and my dress and ppers and gloves are all ready for aduation. The dress is white with broad sash and tiny rosebuds, and e slippers and gloves are white, too. m so proud and glad that I earned m myself. I wish that every girl school could know about the club."

Several weeks ago, I received a let- from an older woman. It was a gic little letter from a very sad tle lady, and it ran rather tearfully this vein:

"I am very poor—sometimes it is en hard for me to find money for a mp or a small loaf of bread! I nder if there is any way that I can ke some money. I want to sub- ibe to your paper. I always used but I cannot even do that now."

I puzzled a few moments over this ter, and then, taking a chance, I nt her a Money-Makers' Club book- . Then I waited. Two weeks later ad a reply.

"My dearest friend," it began, en- siastically. "Thank you so much r introducing the Money-Makers' ub to me. It has helped me a great al already, and it is going to help great deal more. The work is easy r me, and the profits are marvelous. w can I thank you enough?" She ded her letter abruptly, but down rther, nestling at the bottom of the ge, I saw a small postscript.

"Just now," it whispered happily, "my first CHRISTIAN HERALD arrived. I made the money to subscribe to it."

The next letter that I am going to show you is from a married woman with three children. She was just a bit doubtful in her mind and the fluttering little letter shows her feelings very plainly:

"Do you know," she confided to me, "I am almost afraid to write to you? You see, I am not in any real need of money; but I would like just a tiny bit for pretty things that I cannot afford to buy. I suppose that the club will be no actual help to me. My time is pretty well taken up with my children, but I would like to see the booklet anyway. Perhaps I am committing a blunder in asking to join it—for I am no longer a girl; but I feel that you will understand."

Of course, I sent her the booklet, overruling all her objections, and not long afterwards I received a graceful little note of acknowledgment.

"The club is fine!" it began, "and I have already begun being a member in earnest. I was puzzled before, because a Money-Makers' Club seemed somehow ridiculous; but now I understand that it is possible to have such a thing. Yesterday I bought myself a silk shirtwaist that I have long wanted, with my first profits."

Here are three "before and after taking" letters. I hope that they have interested you a little bit in my pen-and-ink friends and in my club. But I do not want to misrepresent anything. These are just three among hundreds of letters; and of course some of the girls are not so enthusiastic. Some of them (a very few this time) do not even care to join. But when you realize that ninety-nine out of every hundred letters are full of praise, you may be sure that there is something in it to interest you.

And now, last of all, I want to say something I have said before. There is room in the Money-Makers' Club for every one who wants to join. I have grandmothers and grandchildren on my books, children just out of kindergarten and grown-ups just graduating from the school of life. I have happy girls who write on thick, engraved stationery and girls who send in scribbled notes on wrapping paper. I have many girls who are working hard—and love it. But I have plenty of places left for you and your friends. Write in for our booklet and read it. And I am sure that one dose of our club will make you very glad that you are a member.

PSALM XXIII

SHEPHERD of earth's wayward race,
Lead me till at length I stand,
Through the riches of thy grace,
Safe within the Fatherland.

Choose my way and guide my feet
Daily in the paths of right,
That I may by waters sweet
Rest at evening in thy sight.

If I wander, Lord, restore;
Suffer not my soul to roam;
I would learn to love thee more:
On thy shoulder bring me home.

When at night the shadows fall,
Closer still my faith would cling;
Where my Shepherd drank the gall,
There my heart would crown him king.

Full supply I cannot lack,
For my table now is spread
Where my foes had turned me back,
But for grace upon my head.

Surely mercy fills my cup,
Nor can I thy goodness tell;
For the Love that bade me sup,
Brings me home with him to dwell.

The Howard Watch

THE predominance of the HOWARD Watch among yachting men illustrates some interesting conditions in American business and professional life.

There is in this country no exclusively yachting class as such. Practically every American yachtsman is a man of affairs, who finds his greatest relaxation on the water, and who takes his HOWARD Watch with him when he goes abroad.

The thing that makes him a yachtsman and an American disposes him to like the HOWARD Watch—with its fine traditions, its trim, racy lines, and its way of showing its clean American heels to the talent of the watch-making world.

The wonderful character of the HOWARD Watch is that it meets men of so many different kinds and occupations on their own ground. Men in commerce, in the technical industries, in the professions, in official life.

A HOWARD Watch is always worth what you pay for it.

The price of each watch is fixed at the factory and a printed ticket attached — from the 17-jewel (double roller) in a Crescent Extra or Boss Extra gold-filled case at $40, to the 23-jewel in 18K gold case at $170— and the EDWARD HOWARD model at $350.

Not every jeweler can sell you a HOWARD Watch. Find the HOWARD jeweler in your town and talk to him. He is a good man to know.

Admiral Sigsbee has written a little book, "The Log of the HOWARD Watch," giving the record of his own HOWARD in the U. S. Navy. You'll enjoy it. Drop us a post card, Dept. W, and we'll send you a copy.

DUTCH BULBS

From Now Until July 1st —Not Later

Hyacinths, Tulips, Narcissi, Crocus, etc., for a small outlay of time and money, an abundance of flowers in the house from Christmas until Easter, and in the garden, from earliest Spring until the middle of May. Bulbs are grown almost exclusively in Holland in enormous quantities, and sold at very low prices. Usually they cost double before reaching you.

We are having an unusually large assortment of varieties this season, and a large amount, due to superior growing conditions, will be obtainable at a low price in this country, and have a much larger list of varieties to select from.

Our orders are placed and paid for in Holland, and are shipped to our customers immediately upon their arrival in the best possible condition.

If you wish to take advantage of our very low prices, we must have your order not later than July 1st, as we expect Bulbs to arrive soon. They should be planted in cold after October, the earlier the better. (Bulbs are received from new contributors.) For prices on smaller quantities see our import price list, the most comprehensive catalogue of Bulbs published, may be had for the asking.

hurt me, Parson Bill, no matter what I did," he said confidently, "and I'm not going to stop saying my prayers. I was just pretendin' to see what you'd say. My mother taught me first, my father said for me to keep it up, and Miss Grace, too. But I'm not saying them because I'm afraid of a licking if I don't."

"I know you ain't," said Bill. "I just want you to keep on sayin' 'em. I don't reckon there's anybody in this town sayin' prayers 'cept you, an' it kind a makes us feel agreeable an' comfortable like to know that somebody's doin' it."

"But if I do it, why can't you?" persisted the boy.

"That's differ'nt, I tell you. Now shet up an' go to sleep," was the decisive answer.

The subject interested little Olaf. He essayed to return to it again on other occasions, but the big miner thereafter cut him short, and refused to be drawn into any religious discussions of any sort, and the matter was perforce finally dropped until a more convenient season should arrive.

Then, too, after the novelty of the boy's presence wore off, Parson Bill began to find it a bit irksome at times. He took to slipping away after supper, leaving Olaf to his own devices. The lad felt these absences keenly. He had no boys to play with, and while he was on agreeable speaking terms with all the men in the camp, and would have been with the women, only Parson Bill sternly drew the line, really his only comrade was the big miner himself. Sometimes he would sit outside of the cabin and stare down at the lighted saloon where he knew Bill was, and the tears would come into his eyes. He was a very lonely little boy indeed. He prayed harder than ever for Bill's conversion, but God did not seem to hear, and his faith began to waver. Sometimes it is passing hard to believe alone.

One night the boy remained up until quite late before going to bed. Parson Bill was periodically subject to strange fits of moodiness and melancholy, which usually ended in a frightful debauch. Little Olaf had come to recognize this fact. Sometimes when Bill went down to the village he came home before he was very drunk, at a reasonably early hour. This night the boy instinctively realized that trouble was certain to come.

He waited longingly for Bill, but that worthy did not return. He went to bed finally, but sleep did not come for some time, and when it did, it was troubled. After a while he woke up. He slipped on his few clothes—it was summer and his toilet was not elaborate—and went out into the night. He had no idea what time it was, but it was evidently late. There wasn't a light anywhere except in the two saloons. Parson Bill had not come back. The boy recollected suddenly that it was Saturday night. He decided upon a bold step. He would go down and find his friend. No sooner did the thought come to him than he put it into execution. He started down the long street as fast as his little legs could carry him.

The Black Pup was nearest Bill's cabin. This was not Bill's favorite saloon, but to make sure the boy stopped, pushed open the door, and went in.

Operations were in full blast, and everything was running at a high pressure. He was not noticed at first, but so soon as he was recognized he was greeted with uproarous outbursts of welcome, intermingled with many invitations to come in and have a drink and a bite to eat.

The Latest "Military Mass"

New York Tribune, May 18, 1914

WASHINGTON, May 17.—Fully fifteen thousand persons gathered about the base of the Washington Monument this morning for the military field mass celebrated annually under the auspices of the District of Columbia Spanish War Veterans in memory of those who lost their lives in the war with Spain.

An improvised altar, in front of which sat a group of Catholic prelates, was sheltered by a flag-decked pavilion. On one side was another pavilion in which was a mixed choir of 150 voices. Another stand was filled with men prominent in public life. Grouped in front of the semi-circle were delegations from the Knights of Columbus, the Ancient Order of Hibernians, the Catholic Knights of America and other societies.

The Rev. Father J. R. Meagher, O. P., delivered the sermon. Monsignor William T. Russell, of St. Patrick's Church, was in general charge, and the Rev. Eugene de L. McDonnell, S. J., pastor of St. Aloysius's Church, was celebrant. The Rev. George Savage, of Holy Cross College, Brookland, acted as deacon.

Father Meagher, referring to the Mexican situation in his sermon, lauded the President as "a patriot whose name should not be second to the soldiers who fought for their country for his efforts at this critical juncture to insure peace."

Huerta and the Pope

From New York Tribune, May 20

VERA CRUZ, May 19.—Archbishop Mora y del Rio was driven out of Mexico by Provisional President Huerta, according to information reaching here to-day. The archbishop, the story says, sought an interview with General Huerta, which was at first refused, but later accorded on the representation that the churchman had a communication from the Pope.

The communication, it is stated, proved to be a suggestion that General Huerta resign. The president appeared to take this advice dispassionately, making no reply. On the following day, however, a messenger went to the archbishop with a warning from Huerta that he would do well to leave the country.

A Beautiful Gift

FROM a friend of missions, who desires her name to remain undisclosed, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD recently received this letter:

Enclosed find draft for $400 on Girard National Bank, Philadelphia. $50 of said gift I wish to give Miss Anna E. Hall for her mission work in Garraway Mission, Cape Palmas, Africa. The remaining $250 please give to five different leper missions, $50 to each. I will leave the selection to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. Whatever selection you will make will, I am sure, go to a needy and suffering people. In acknowledging receipt please do not give my name in full. It is not much that I am giving. Would only be too glad to have it more if I were able, but as I do not give for the name of it, just for the good it will do, I prefer my name not published. Thanking you for your kindness in distributing these gifts, I remain, etc.

With the donor's approval, the money was applied as follows:

Miss Mary Reed, Chanda, Heights, India Leper Mission	$50 00
Jerusalem Leper Mission	50 00
Bethesda Leper Home, Paramaribo, Dutch Guiana, S. A.	50 00
Dr. R. M. Wilson, Kwangju, Korea	50 00
Indo Leper Mission, care of Mr. Lecroy, 105 Raymond Street, Cambridge, Mass.	50 00
Miss Anna E. Hall, Garraway Mission, Cape Palmas, Africa	50 00
	$400 00

On receipt of the acknowledgments from the missionaries, they will be forwarded to the donor, who will thus have the satisfaction of having done a good work without seeking worldly applause.

HER MOTHER-IN-LAW

Proved a Wise, Good Friend.

A young woman out in Ia. found a wise good friend in her mother-in-law, joke notwithstanding. She writes:

"I was greatly troubled with my stomach, complexion was blotchy and yellow. After meals I often suffered sharp pain and would have to lie down. My mother often told me it was the coffee I drank a meals. But when I'd quit coffee I'd have a severe headache.

"While visiting my mother-in-law remarked that she always made such good coffee, and asked her to tell me how. She laughed and told me it was easy to make good 'coffee' when you use Postum.

"I began to use Postum as soon as I got home, and now we have the same good 'coffee' (Postum) every day, and I have no more trouble. Indigestion is a thing of the past, and my complexion has cleared up beautifully.

"My grandmother suffered a great deal with her stomach. Her doctor told her to leave off coffee. She then took tea, but that was just as bad.

"She finally was induced to try Postum which she has used for over a year. She traveled during the winter over the greater part of Iowa, visiting, something she had not been able to do for years. She says she owes her present good health to Postum."

Name given by the Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich. Read "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs.

Postum now comes in two forms.

Regular Postum—must be well boiled. 15c and 25c packages.

Instant Postum—is a soluble powder. A teaspoonful dissolves quickly in a cup of hot water and, with cream and sugar, makes a delicious beverage instantly. 30c and 50c tins.

The cost per cup of both kinds is about the same.

"There's a Reason" for Postum.

C. L. H., New York. What is the average or normal size allowed by the better class of Americans or Europeans for a normal story of massive proportions?

From what we can learn it would be impossible to state any figure which would be really satisfactory. Ernest Lapierre, Camden, Ontario. Did the people of Old Testament times have the Holy Spirit working with or did they have nothing more than the Mosaic law?

While there were half-blind cases, like the prophets of persons who seemed to have the Holy Spirit to guide and inspire them in Old Testament times, He left no one. That is one of the great differences between the old dispensation and the new. We are living now in the dispensation of the Holy Spirit when every believer may possess him as Sanctifier and Guide. But even now, Christians who believe that they have special guidance from the Holy Spirit should submit that guidance to the written Word and to the sanctified judgment of the church of Christ as a group of Christian friends. Failure to do this often results in harmful fanaticism.

J. H. T., Rose Creek, Minn. 1. There has been much controversy concerning the identity of "Darius the Mede" referred to by Daniel. Xenophon holds him to have been a son of Darius Astyages "known to the Greeks under a different name." Another view is that Astyages and Cyaxares, Ward & Co. to have been names indicating supreme rulership, and not a personal appellation. A third conclusion held by some eminent students of ancient history is that Darius was really governor of Gubaru who being popularly known as prefect reached a long during Cyrus' absence, and assumed the royal authority under the name of Darius. 2. Rev. Charles P. T. Cheney died in Montreal January 6, 1909. 3. We have no information on the other question.

W. R. C., Fernan, Idaho. I am greatly interested in Gen. 6: 1-4 and if I understand aright the original word Nephilim, "giants," there is interpreted as equivalent to "sons of God." Gen. 6: 1-4, is used only these times in the Bible. In Job 1: 6 and 2: 1 it is very certain that "sons of God" mention "angels." I would be very pleased if you could get the opinion of some eminent Hebrew scholar on these four verses, Gen. 6: 1-4.

The translation has been answered by a number of scholars. W. Hayward, LL.D., in Talbot, Gen. 6: 1-4 forms the antithesis to the glory of the Flood. All these days connected the translation of a word, whatever it was originally or later it is most plain. The latter scriptures state the consequences of natural procedures to sound judgment. The latter is not a scientific treatise. Its purpose is religious and moral. Its aim is to [illegible] the sense of God to man, and to [illegible] natural phenomena being controlled by God not in harmony with divine justice. Russia before robbing the mass of the Greek Holy Writ sets forth the universal corruption which justified the destruction of the human race with the exception of one family. A New Flag

THIS is to announce that we have secured a new flag for our readers, of the same size (6 feet long by 4 feet wide) as the flag we have been using. It is made by the Dunkards of Pennsylvania, and you may be sure that it is well made. The stripes are double-stitched to one another. This is really one of the biggest values in flags we have been able to offer. You should have one for Flag Day.

With this Flag goes FREE a beautiful Portfolio (11 by 16 inches, in Colors) of the Panama Canal.

Here is your chance to own a Large American Flag, like the one shown in this picture. Not a little hand-flag, but a large-sized "Old Glory," six feet long by four feet wide—bigger than the top of your dining-room table! Real red, white and blue, and guaranteed not to fade, run or shrink, no matter what the weather.

Here is your chance to possess a beautiful Portfolio in colors of the Panama Canal, the eighth wonder of the world.

The first ships are about to steam through the canal, which is fully described in this Portfolio, which contains a full descriptive History of the Canal, Photographs of the most important points, Colored Maps of the Canal Zone, Diagrams showing the Changes in Ocean Steamship Routes, Map of the United States in Colors, a Map of the World in Colors, and eight Photographs depicting the Main Buildings, Grounds, and Bird's-eye View of the great Panama-Pacific International Exposition.

The Portfolio will give you a comprehensive idea of just what the Panama Canal means to the world at large.

The Flag you will use for every holiday for years to come—in public and private socables, in the schoolhouse, in the church and in the home.

We will send the Large American Flag, described above, together with the Panama Canal Portfolio and The Christian Herald for one year—ALL for Only $2

OR*—YOU MAY SECURE THE FLAG AND PORTFOLIO FREE!

To any old subscriber who will send us One NEW Eight Months Subscription to The Christian Herald (remitting $1.00 with order), we will send the Large American Flag and the Panama Portfolio FREE and kindliness. Instead, they gave way to unbridled lust, to indulge which they resorted to violence. 'They saw that the daughters of men (i. e., the common folk) were fair, and they took (i. e., by force) whomsoever they chose.' This abuse of power was punished by the destruction of the race. 'The Eternal said My spirit shall not abide in man forever.' The Hebrew word may mean 'abide as a sword in a sheath'; or it may mean 'contend with man'—the higher with the lower nature—the spirit of heaven with the body formed of dust and its instincts, of the earth, earthy; or it may mean 'My spirit shall not rule in man.' The struggle is too severe. 'Since he is but flesh, his days shall be one hundred and twenty years. On account of the moral infirmity incident to human nature, time will be given for repentance. If the opportunity is not taken, destruction will follow the respite. Nephilim literally means 'the fallen.' On the principle of lucus a non lucendo, the term refers to the men of gigantic stature who existed in ancient times. They were the 'sons of God,' the mighty men who yielded to licentious passions. The children of these illegitimate unions were also for some generations, Nephilim of gigantic stature, famed for their physical and mental development, but morally degenerate. They were the renowned heroes of old—the mighty warriors, like the berserkers of the northern sagas."

Mrs. W. C., Ridgway, Pa. 1. Herod was a titular appellation and was borne by several rulers. The Herod of Jesus' infancy (Matt. 2) died while the Holy Family was in Egypt (See verse 19.) 2. The passage in Luke 13: 30 is interpreted as meaning that God, who looks at the hearts of men, will prefer in honor in the future life many who in this life have been held in little regard, but who have served him faithfully, while others who have been highly thought of among men will be shown to be less worthy.

K. Van S., Newton, Iowa. The passage in 1 Cor. 1: 25 is better understood by reading carefully the preceding seven verses. Paul here took the preaching of the Cross, which he held to be the "wisdom of God," and contrasted it with the "wisdom of words," or the eloquence with which the world's great orators dispute. Those worldly-wise ones, he reminded the Corinthians, regarded the preaching of the Cross as foolishness; yet what seems to the world weakness and foolishness is really the highest wisdom. Thus, as Paul expresses it, the "foolishness" of God is wiser than all the wisdom of the world.

The authorship of the Pentateuch is still a theme for disputants, although the claim of Mosaic authorship has never been successfully controverted. It is undeniable, however, that the last chapter of Deuteronomy must have been added by another hand. 3. There is little profit in taking up unprovable and irrefutable subjects, and the Mail-Bag therefore prefers to let such themes alone. Its space limitations make this compulsory.

For many years, the effort has been made by a certain class of scientists to prove the existence of the "missing link" which would establish man's descent from the brutes. Up to the present time they have been unsuccessful. The sketch you enclose is purely imaginary, the work of an artist who had no model and who did his best with his brush to bolster up the Darwinian theory.

PANAMA CANAL ZONE HIGHWAY BETWEEN COROZAL AND PEDRO MIGUEL

THE GOSPEL ON THE ISTHMUS

I. FOLLOWING THE FLAG TO PANAMA

BY J. MACKLIN BEATTIE

ANCON, CANAL ZONE

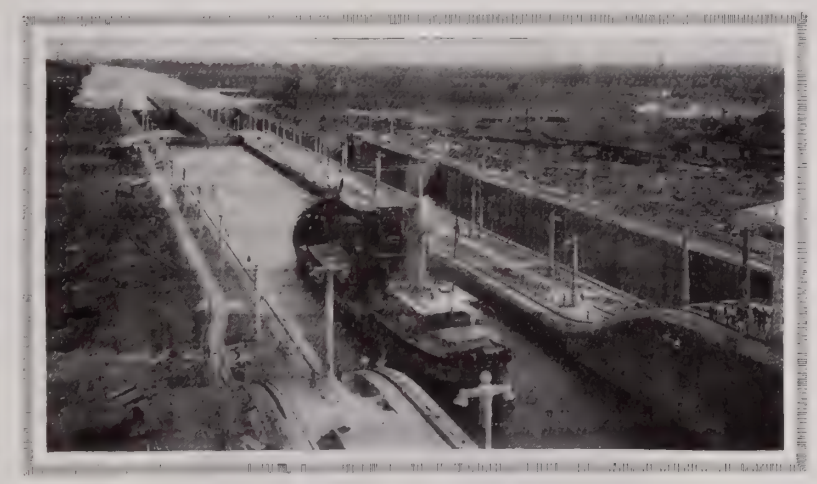
WHEN on November 12, 1913, the services of the ministers of the Gospel who had been maintained to minister to the religious needs of the American forces employed on the Panama Canal were terminated, it was thought that church work among the aliens on the Isthmus would languish and perhaps die out altogether. But it has ever been true that on American soil the Bible follows the flag, and the religious work planted by and for the people had been too deeply rooted to be easily overturned after six years or more of active, healthy life.

Ministers who were engaged in denominational work under their foreign mission boards were notified that they should continue at their stations. These include the Methodists, Wesleyan Methodists and Baptists. The clergy of the Episcopal Church, which has had control of the Panama Mission since its transfer from the Anglican Church in 1909, received orders from the bishop in charge, Right Rev. Albion W. Knight, vice-chancellor of the University of the South, to remain in charge of their parishes until it was decided what should be the future of the Panama Mission. The Episcopal Church has missions at Gatun, Empire, Culebra and Paraiso in charge of negro clergymen, and, in addition, there are churches at Ancon and at Colon, the latter being the oldest established parish, outside the Catholic Church, on the Isthmus. Christ Church building, a beautiful little stone structure in the late Gothic style, is already a veteran, having been erected in 1867 for the purpose of ministering to the large forces of West Indians employed in the construction of the Panama Railroad. These people largely owe allegiance to the established church of England. The parish has always been a large one; there are more than four hundred communicants, besides a small number of English and Americans who regularly attend services. It is the present aim of the white portion of the congregation to equip and furnish this beautiful church for a permanent memorial of the residence of the American people in the Isthmus.

The Baptist mission work is conducted by three white missionary ministers. There are mission stations at Colon, Gatun, Culebra, Cucuracha, Frijoles and Chorrillo in the interior of Panama. A splendid church is situated at Culebra, where week-day services are held as well as regular Sunday meetings. There is a large Sunday school.

Methodist mission work has thriven in Panama City. The "Seawall Church" is the Methodist center of religious and social activity. The mission school founded in 1907 is growing and a new mission hall, in a congested district, is crowded several nights each week. At the last visit of Bishop Homer C. Stuntz to this mission a plan was discussed for the establishment of a girls' school.

Another well-established mission is that of the Wesleyan Methodist Church, the second oldest religious Protestant work planted in Panama. Two white ministers are in charge. They have a fine concrete church in the city of Panama, and an adequate building with schoolroom attached in Colon. Active and growing Sunday school and young people's societies are in connection with this work.



GATUN LOCKS, LOOKING NORTH. ATLANTIC ENTRANCE IN DISTANCE

In the various canal-builders' villages, there had been organized various forms of Christian effort under the title of Christian Leagues. These leagues, which enjoyed the co-operation and support of the United States Government and the American people, carried on the religious work of the villages for more than six years. Ministers recommended by their executive councils to the Canal Commission were given the preference in appointment. The league paid an additional sum to the regular salary of the minister. The center of this undenominational work in Cristobal was the Union Church. On the dismissal of the commission chaplains, this church initiated a movement to unite the people of the Canal Zone in a central organization for permanent non-sectarian religious effort. An organization was effected in January, 1914, under the title of the "Union Church of the Canal Zone." The church is non-sectarian. Its activities embrace the entire zone, and it is independent of any conference or organizing body. Membership is independent of church affiliation elsewhere. The chief purpose of the new church is to hold together the Americans in the Canal Zone who desire to have religious influence in their own lives and those of their families and children.

The women's societies of the various churches on the Isthmus have federated in a central organization under the title of the "Panama Federation of Societies of Women for Christian Work."

Religious work among the West Indian negroes is one of the most interesting departments of church effort in Panama. At times the government has employed as many as thirty thousand men of this class. Undenominational work would be impracticable among these people. Up and down the line of the Panama Railroad on Sunday morning after ten o'clock, you will hear the ancient hymns of the Wesleyan Methodist or Baptist churches, and hear the earnest tones of the preachers ringing out the old truths as they are interpreted before earnest congregations of negroes.

THE GOSPEL ON THE ISTHMUS

II. BIBLE SELLING IN COLOMBIA

BY A. R. STARK

VALPARAISO, CHILI

COLOMBIA, to the missionary and educator, is a field presenting wide opportunities for service; to the Bible-seller, whose work mainly lies among the simple peasants, it is one of the most entrancing on the whole South American continent. The Andes traverse Colombia in three chains, fringing off towards the Isthmus of Panama and the Caribbean Sea and producing a variety of climate and products. It is now several years since this republic was disturbed by internal strife, and it is to be hoped that revolutions are becoming things of the past. This greatly facilitates the work of the Bible colporteur.

In the work of giving Colombia an open Bible there are many encouragements, but our drawback, as always, has been the antagonism of the Roman Catholic Church, which continues its ever-active opposition. In many cases the authorities of the towns are liberal-minded men, friendly and well disposed toward the mission of the Bible-seller; but instances are not wanting where the priest has the civil authority completely under his control.

From Citio Nuevo, on the Magdalena River, Coll (one of our colporteurs) writes: "The mayor has prohibited me from selling the Scriptures under pain of imprisonment. He even denies me personal guarantees, adding that he was accustomed to do as the priest ordered, and that if I continued claiming protection he, the mayor, would put me behind prison bars." Alongside of this we place this note from Colporteur Manga at Galera: "The priest had me called before the mayor in order to have me prohibited from selling Bibles, but the mayor said that he would not prohibit the sale of the Bible, because it gave the pure doctrine of Jesus Christ." A typical trip is thus described:

"We met by arrangement at the town of Calamar on the Magdalena River and laid our plans. We were to hire a large canoe and proceed sixteen miles up the river to the village of Juncal and then strike inland to our first town. At the outset troubles began. The canoe was found to be leaking so that it threatened our precious cargo of books, and endangered our lives also, for the river swarms with alligators. Night came on, and we were pulling our way in the shallows and among snags and in the shadows of the overhanging trees. It was a relief when our destination came in sight. Soon lights began to move towards the water. Upon explaining our mission we were hospitably received.

MIDDAY REST OF COLPORTEURS IN COLOMBIA FOREST

The next day being Sunday, we determined to remain and converse with the people about the Gospel. It was a small place of not more than a hundred souls. The houses were made of bamboo stuck upright, with roofs thatched with the leaves of cocoanut palms. On Monday we were off before daylight. Our road lay through a dense forest and our animals formed quite a procession along the narrow path. When the sun arose we were glad of the shade of the trees, and the wondrous flowers and the warblings of the birds kept us good company. On reaching San Jacinto we found it a town of 4,000 inhabitants and stayed there five days selling the Scriptures with much success. We learned that it was the first time that any one had come to offer them the Bible. In five days we found that our sales numbered 53 Bibles, 30 Testaments and 569 Gospels. From the number of Gospels sold it will be seen that the people were poor, but they were willing buyers. At night we preached the Gospel to attentive crowds in large rooms placed at our disposal in different parts of the town. Upon the last night it was announced that we would conduct two meetings simultaneously and on the occasion fully five hundred people heard the Gospel."

There is a great hunger among the common people for the Word of Life. Before us lies a mission of unlimited possibility in the circulation of the Scriptures. The colporteurs take their lives in their hands as they penetrate the trackless interior or climb the mighty Andine frontiers with the Bible in their wallets.

Three cases of Scriptures marked Barranquilla á Aguachica were despatched up the Magdalena River for circulation to the town of Aguachica. On reaching their destination Colporteur Coll began selling them among willing and eager buyers. This was too much for the priest, who was determined to stop the good work. He appealed to the local authority, who was only too willing to fall in with the priest's suggestion. The cases were nailed down and sealed by pieces of tin and then despatched down the river. The colporteur appealed to higher authority and gained a hearing and the right to maintain his sales. The priest and the subordinate authority, however, defied the prefect and raised a mob against the lonely Bible-seller. The three cases arrived while I was in Barranquilla.

MISSION WORKERS IN CONVENTION

FOR the first time in the stirring history of Gospel mission work, superintendents and others have met in a convention of nation-wide interest to exchange reports and discuss ways and means of adding to the yearly total of good done in the name of Christ by this form of service. The conference took place in Cedar Rapids, Iowa, May 13-17, as the first annual convention of the International Union of Gospel Missions.

This new and important organization was called into being just eight months before (September 17, 1913), by that strong, capable leader, the late Dr. Sidney Whittemore, of New York. The National Federation of Gospel Missions, previously formed, was allowed to go out of existence in favor of the newer society, and the important business of associating Gospel missions throughout the world for mutual encouragement was undertaken. Dr. Whittemore became president, and since his death on February 4 Mrs. Whittemore has served as acting president. This whole-hearted, energizing woman was elected president by acclamation at the business meeting of the convention. In her leadership she will have the support of Mrs. John H. Wyburn as secretary and Mr. Wyburn as treasurer, eight vice-presidents and a board of thirty trustees, all Christian workers of trained Gospel mission experience, representing widely separated localities. The present enrolment is about 170.

The delegates met en route at Buffalo, N. Y., where twenty or more churches gave them their pulpits. Some two hundred persons arose to take a decided stand for Christ at the service conducted by Mrs. Whittemore, who the same night, by request of the ministerial Union of Detroit, went there and addressed that body. The next day the delegation was entertained at the Moody Institute in Chicago, holding services throughout the city afterward.

Cedar Rapids gave the convention a most hospitable welcome. On the last day, Tuesday, all the pulpits in the morning were given up to delegates; in the afternoon and evening overflowing evangelistic mass meetings were held in the city auditorium. Leading citizens opened their homes to entertain delegates, and the Interurban Traction Company tendered the entire convention an excursion. The local committee was composed of the city's prominent business men. The convention was welcomed by Mayor Louis Roth, assisted by Superintendent J. J. McConnell of the city schools; Secretary John Wunderlich of the Commercial Club, and Rev. E. R. Burkhalter.

MRS. E. M. WHITTEMORE, PRESIDENT INTERNATIONAL UNION OF GOSPEL MISSIONS

The outstanding note of the address by successful mission workers was the introduction of industrialism into the mission. J. R. McIntyre, of Germantown, Pa.; Frank Dippel of Philadelphia, O. C. Elliott of Boston, and others, declared for employment as the basis for material relief. Mr. McIntyre's work includes factories in operation where men are taught trades. Discharged prisoners are invited to go to the mission immediately they are set free, to be "made over and turned out like new." A $75,000 plant takes care of 125 persons daily, on the work-for-what-you-get plan.

The direct relation of the mission to the church was emphasized. Rev. J. David Fraser of Montreal, Canada, with others, described the permanent results in church membership brought about by their missions. Mrs. Whittemore, in her remarks, held up the wide opportunity for practical Christian service, as well as for evangelistic work, offered by the Gospel mission. She was deeply touched by her unanimous election as president, and accepted the office first held by Mr. Whittemore as a sacred trust.

Several cities sought to obtain the next convention, which will be held in Norfolk, Va.

The convention was remarkable, among other things, for the number of superintendents present who were themselves converted in Gospel missions. Rev. Frederic J. Baylis, now a power for Christ in Chapin, Ill., is a product of the Bowery Mission, and was assisted by THE CHRISTIAN HERALD in establishing his first church among cowboys in Nebraska. Rev. J. D. Fraser is superintendent of the mission in Montreal in which he was converted twenty years ago. Christopher Balfe, of Chicago, was rescued from a criminal career by the Bowery Mission. A deep spiritual tone was given to the conferences by the presence of men so wonderfully saved by grace.

It was the unanimous opinion of the convention that the far-sighted leadership of Dr. Whittemore in organizing the International Union had already borne rich fruit for the cause of Gospel missions. The broad view of the work being done stimulated all the delegates and made a tremendous impression upon the audiences at the various meetings. The closing meetings, referred to above, were out-and-out Gospel mission services, and many responded to the invitation to accept Christ as their Saviour. A greater work will now be done by the missions of the Union, and it is expected that the enrolment will rapidly increase. The organization has able leadership in its very extensive field of work.

MEXICAN PEACE PROTOCOL READY

Copyright, International News Service

AT FORT BLISS CAMP

THE peace conferees at Niagara Falls, Ontario, reached an agreement upon a plan for the settlement of Mexico, May 27. The American Commissioners at once submitted the plan to the Administration and the Mexicans telegraphed it to General Huerta. Further proceedings upon the main points at issue depend upon the approval of the plan by the respective governments. The plan includes the retirement of Huerta, after appointing as secretary of state a Constitutionalist sympathizer chosen by the Peace Conference, and not active in the rebellion, who will head a provisional governing commission of five, all so chosen and committed to land and other reforms, the commission to remain in power until the election of a permanent government, and the members to hold cabinet posts; an early election by all citizens of Mexico, and guaranteed legal; recognition of the provisional government by the United States and withdrawal from Vera Cruz. This summary has as yet not been officially authenticated. Should the plan which has been agreed upon be accepted, the Peace ommissioners will quickly arrange the details and perfect a final peace treaty.

Daily reports of progress had pointed to early agreement upon a policy for he pacification of Mexico. The continued operations of rebel forces in that ountry had not produced a situation that could influence the deliberations of he mediators. Persistent rumors credited General Huerta with the acumen o prepare for an early departure from Mexico. The Administration at Washngton was understood to be thoroughly pleased with developments, and no xtraordinary war measures had been put into effect to belie that belief. Most iopeful sign of all, the Carranza faction abandoned its previous attitude of ndifference to the peace conference, and sought admission to the deliberations.

The agreeable spectacle has been presented at Niagara Falls of representaives of the United States, three great South American countries, and Mexico, neeting in informal and amicable fashion to discuss with authority the deliate questions that make up the case concerning Mexico. Formal sessions iave been held for a brief while in the official meeting room; but it was at the ounge conversations between groups of the Mediation Board that the vital vork was done. The atmosphere of mutual trust and good will has been proluctive of results which might not have been readily reached by keen diplonatic debate at prolonged formal conferences. The chief points at issue are he personality of Huerta's uccessor, the land policy of he new Mexican Governnent, and the adjustment of affairs with the Constituionalists. As a consistent ecrecy on all unsettled maters is maintained by the eace delegates, it is not posible to state how these najor questions will finally e determined.

The proposal which it was hought would find support vas that a provisional govrnment should be set up unil legal elections can be eld, the A B C envoys, the Huertistas, and the Constiutionalists each to select ne of a commission of three o be in control. It is stated, owever, that the South American envoys declined to e a party to that plan, on he ground that they possess o authority to help deternine Mexico's government. Their province is to bring he two nations into accord s mediators. While the plan f a commission government ight receive their support, he South American envoys would leave the naming of a Mexican government to othrs. The supporters of Carranza were said to be violently opposed to the plan at the beginning, but the remendous political questions involved in the pacification of Mexico appear o have led General Carranza to appreciate the value of co-operation with hose who are seeking Mexico's permanent good.

It was also given out in an informal way that the Mexican representatives ould not accept any detailed plan of land reform laid down by the United States, but could agree to the principle, and that the new government should ind itself to move definitely in the direction of the adjustment of that basic uestion in all of Mexico's revolutions.

The many rumors of Huerta's imminent flight from Mexico City have persisted, and it is generally believed that his delegates are acquainted with his plans and wish to provide for a dignified abdication. That much is implied n any discussion of a successor at the conferences. Different names are already in the air, but it is by far too early to prophesy who will take up the arduous work of bringing order and prosperity to that faction-ridden land. On this point will come the severest struggle with the Carranza party. The Constitutionalists naturally insist upon retaining the fruits of their costly, and thus far successful, revolution. To find a set of men to govern Mexico who will be acceptable to all classes is a much more difficult matter than to draw up a plan of government. But it is said that there are just such men available in Mexico. The satisfaction of the Constitutionalists' claims growing out of their campaign will be the next task in point of difficulty.

The rebel forces on the field, so far as can be made out from the reports, have been chiefly engaged during the past week in strengthening their lines for the next advance toward Mexico City. Such fighting as has been done has been of an unimportant character. Villa has been at Torreon reorganizing his army, which has grown to 35,000 men if reports are correct. Such an increase would indicate large defections from the Federal ranks. The town of Zacatecas, on the way to San Luis Potosi, where the Federals are in force, may be the first point of attack on the southward march. The Federal General Orozco, with an army of 5,000, was reported as having given battle to a larger number of rebels in the desert forty miles from Potosi. This officer shares Villa's hatred with Huerta. It is not certain that Zaragoza and his Tampico troops reached San Luis Potosi.

BOYS OF REBEL ARMY

Press stories declare that a split between Carranza and Villa is inevitable. Dissatisfaction with Villa's treatment of prisoners of war is one ground alleged for this break. It is stated that an Italian officer of Villa's staff reports having seen Villa coolly shoot through the head more than fifty wounded prisoners lying on the ground, some of whom were already dying. Most of the fifty-seven Federal officers executed after the capture of Torreon were young men, and it is alleged that some of them were only wounded and then thrown with the dead upon the funeral pyre.

The Administration has been immensely relieved by authentic assurances of the safety of Vice-Consul Silliman, about whom there had been the gravest fears for weeks. He arrived in Vera Cruz on May 26 from Saltillo via Mexico City, having spent a month in the Saltillo penitentiary.

There is still more or less movement of Americans out of Mexico, and a feeling of great unrest mingles with the hopefulness expressed on all sides. Mexico City, which for a while was in a state of apprehension, has recovered its normal tone of cheerfulness. From that city comes report that political events of the greatest importance are believed to be impending. As THE CHRISTIAN HERALD goes to press, there appears to be excellent reasons for expecting a satisfactory adjustment of the difficulties with Mexico and within Mexico through the mediation of the South American governments, Brazil, Argentina and Chile.

Late despatches state that the Hamburg-American liners Ypiranga and Bavaria, the former of which was prevented from unloading a cargo of munitions of war at Vera Cruz by the arrival of the United States fleet, have now discharged at Puerto Mexico, the southernmost Mexican port on the Gulf of Mexico, 250 machine guns, modern Mauser rifles estimated at from 10,000 to 20,000 in number, and 15,000,000 rounds of ammunition consigned to Huerta. The United States Government was powerless to interfere, being bound by the armistice. It had been understood that the Ypiranga would return to Germany without unloading. Puerto Mexico is connected by railroad with Mexico City, the line running within forty miles of Vera Cruz, and it is thought possible that Constitutionalists in that section may prevent the delivery to General Huerta.

THE DEATHLESS LIFE

*A SERMON BY REV. JOHN P. PETERS, D.D.

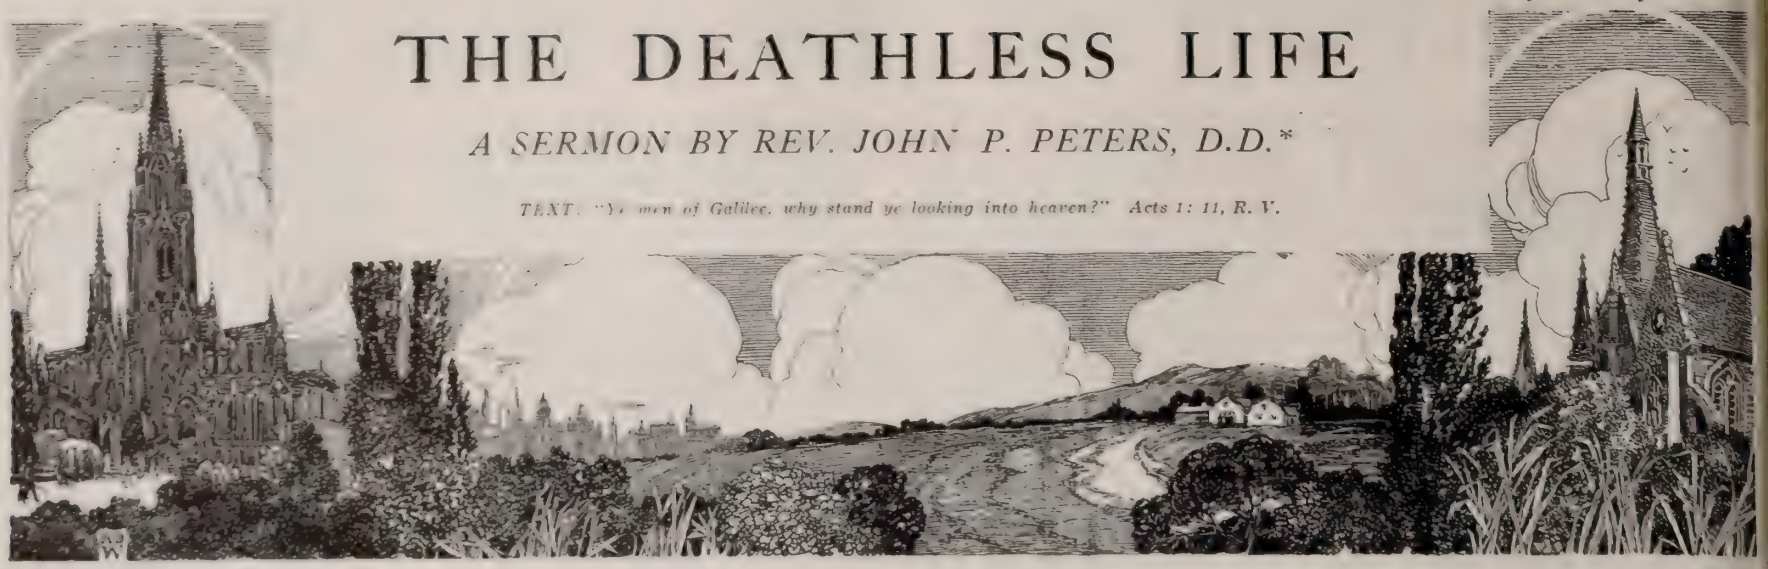
TEXT: "Ye men of Galilee, why stand ye looking into heaven?" Acts 1: 11, R. V.



AS JESUS left the disciples they stood, their faces turned upward, forgetful of earth, gazing into heaven. Its gates had opened before their eyes, a brief glimpse of its glory they had seen as Jesus entered in. They stood without, the tools fell from their slack hands, their work was forgotten; he had left them and entered that gate through which they had caught a glimpse of glory. The gate was closed. He and they were separated. He had gone in, they stood without. They were lonely and forsaken, awe-struck and overcome. They stood gazing at the gate by which he had gone in, and the gate was closed. And while they were looking steadfastly at the gate, "two men stood by them in white apparel, which also said, Ye men of Galilee, why stand ye looking into heaven? This Jesus which was received up from you into heaven, shall so come in like manner as ye beheld him going into heaven."

The Error of Despair

The best and the highest which the world had known was taken away. The truth and love which had enlightened the lives of those poor men of Galilee, which had made life a new thing, a thing of meaning, and joy, and love—had been removed. How could they become anything, do anything, left here below, bereft of the inspiration to a higher life which they had found in him? What could they now hope to achieve? What could they become? What could they do? How aimless their lives looked! How tasteless all the labors and pleasures of life had become! What was there to live for? What was there to do but fold their hands and look at heaven, and wait to see if the gate would not open and let them in? And then, again, how sore their hearts because of the departure of their most dearly beloved, their more than brother! How lonely the world looked without him! How impossible it seemed to endure the solitude! Every minute there would be need of the love, sympathy and counsel of him who was gone; every minute a longing to show him their love. How could they bear the familiar sights and sounds of daily life which would constantly remind them of their bereavement? And oh, how empty and painful the old places and employments without him! How should they endure it? He was in happiness, to be sure; but they, alas, what would become of them? What was there to do but stand and gaze after him into heaven?

The divine messengers teach a different philosophy. "Why stand ye looking into heaven?" That is not your method of finding him. That is not your chance of reunion. Turn back into the world and go to work again. Do the things he loved. Take up the work he laid down. Walk in the path which he pointed out. There is your chance of reunion. Then "this Jesus which was received up from you into heaven shall so come in like manner as ye beheld him going into heaven." He shall come to you in joy and glory, with the heavenly radiance and beauty which you beheld but now.

The Ascension is full of a great lesson for our daily life. It is Jesus the Christ, leading the way, showing us what is beyond death, and what may become of the song of men.

> [illegible]
> Whose eyes we may have met upon the face
> [illegible]
> [illegible]
> [illegible]
> [illegible]
> [illegible]
> [illegible]

So sang Tennyson in the preface to his famous In Memoriam. It is this union with Christ, the fact that he is the Son of man, in whom all humanity is summed up and united with divinity, which gives his Ascension such significance for each one of us. "In God we live, and move, and have our being," sang the old poet; and that is realized in Jesus the Christ, in whose life we are included, so that all he did, his death, his resurrection, his ascension into heaven, include our lives. His ascension into heaven is the ascension into heaven of the Son of man. It is the victory of spirit over matter, the victory of love. Love is eternal, immortal; death cannot kill it; it rises triumphant over death; it transcends this earth; it ascends into the eternal happiness which we call heaven. Love is divine; it is the spiritual life of man; if we have that spiritual life we cannot die, we shall rise from our sleep; set free from the limitations of our present carnal being, we shall enter into a higher and ever higher life, the heaven of the presence of God, the eternal source of love and life. That is what the Ascension means, what it says to man. And it is because the Ascension of Jesus has this meaning that the heavenly messengers rebuked the disciples for standing gazing into heaven. That is not the way to find him. So you can never be reunited with him.

In old days (and somewhat even yet it is so), if the life of a man or woman were spoiled, if a crushing disappointment fell upon them, if their aspirations for power, or fame, or wealth were fatally blasted and they saw nothing to live for; if their love were disappointed and their happiness blighted; if death bereft them of their dearest—they used to resort to some cloister to lead a life of penance and prayer, gazing at the gate by which the beloved, the desire of their hearts, had been rapt from their sight. By thus looking into heaven, they hoped to regain the lost. Not by this sort of looking into heaven can we enter in and recover what was lost, any more than by gazing into the tomb we can recover the bodies of our dead. By love and the labor of love alone can we find happiness and rejoin those who through love enter the heavenly gate.

It is doubtless natural that we desire to see again our sleeping ones, and to commune with them. It is natural that we should linger around the gate and look at it, and seek to see through it, and find what is beyond. So it comes to pass that some are deceived by persons who profess to bring back the spirits of their departed, that they may see them, touch them, hear them speak. Poor dupes! This so-called spiritualism is a sorry and materialistic travesty of the Christian hope of reunion and communion, and of the Christian doctrine of spiritual life and the hereafter.

What Death Is

The Ascension teaches us a different doctrine. Jesus ascended into heaven, and his disciples were told that they could not find him by gazing up into heaven. He would come again as they had seen him go, in glory. He is coming; through these centuries he has been coming more and more. Heaven has been coming. The glory of God has been descending upon earth. He could not come, heaven could not come, if his followers merely stood gazing up into heaven. They could never find him, and the world could never find him. If his disciples had spent their lives gazing up where he had gone, they and the world would have been bereft indeed. They sought him by walking in the paths which he had trod, doing his deeds, living his life. So they found him for themselves, and began to bring him back to earth in glory and great majesty. Each generation of workers seeking him through works of truth, and virtue, and mercy, and love brings him nearer and nearer to man; more and more his presence is felt and the glory of heaven revealed; until, when at last man has recognized in each man his own brother, the strong Son of God, immortal love, shall be revealed on earth in the full glory of heaven.

In the beautiful allegory of Sintram and his Companions, Fouqué has pictured the glory of Christian civilization, and the kingdom of divine love over the malice and barbarism of heathenism, the brute nature in man. The fierce savage nature, with its wild demoniac outbursts, like those of Saul, delighting in warfare, exulting in brute force, yields after fierce struggles to the power of love, finds a new and higher happiness in self-conquest, and in doing and suffering for others. Sintram is haunted by the horrible specter of Death, the awful specter which fills brute nature with terror. And with Death goes another, assuming many forms, tempting him to lust, tempting him to murder, tempting him to acquire for himself by all means—by fraud, by violence—those things which the unregenerate nature of man calls good—pleasures of the senses, wealth, the power and fame of conquest. And as he fights against, and slowly, after many falls, and wild outbursts of fury, and much misery, conquers this other, which is Sin, its true nature becomes visible, its fair disguises fall away, its real loathsomeness becomes apparent. And as his immortal nature triumphs over the mortal, the grim specter of Death loses its horrors, which came to it only from the companionship of Sin. And at last, when Sin is fully overthrown, Death loses all its terror, and becomes beautiful and glorified.

The Great Awakening

Death is itself part of the victory over sin. For when our natures are maimed and wounded with the sins of our youth, the struggle against sin is a hard one through life, life itself becomes a penance, the best possibilities of our lives here have been rendered impossible, and true happiness forfeited by our own fault—then indeed death is a necessary part of our victory over sin; in death itself lies our hope of perfection and true happiness, freed from the trammels of our infirmities and the consequences of our sin. And somewhat we are all conscious that through our own fault we cannot become what we would be, what we aspire to. The further we go in life the more we see how we have marred and maimed ourselves by our sins, limited and restricted the possibilities of our being, so that the better we see the glory of what we might have been, the more we realize the hopelessness of our imperfection, and the need of death as an ally to free us from our infirmities that we may try again.

Death is but a sleep of refreshment; our work can be resumed with new strength on the morrow; and there is higher work awaiting us, work for which we were not fitted until we had passed this day's experience:

> Ah, well, friend Death, good friend thou art;
> I shall be free when thou art through.
> Take all there is, take hand and heart;
> There must be somewhere work to do.

Indeed there is; that higher, nobler work which we aspired to here, and saw to be so noble and divine, and yet were incapable of achieving.

MRS. FURNAJIEFF GIVES THANKS

I DESIRE to express to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD and its readers my deep gratitude for the way they have encouraged me in the noble cause laid upon me to raise funds for the orphans of Bulgaria. In answer to my appeal in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD written on the 15th of October, and to appeals in churches, universities, parlor meetings, etc., the sum of $8,161 has been contributed, and there is still more to come in.

I praise God for what he has done in keeping me safe through all my long journey in the United States, visiting over forty-two cities and speaking over 156 times. The covenant I made with him before leaving London was that I longed to have every cent given by the friends of the orphans used directly for them, so that the prayers which accompanied the money might be answered. In order to do this, I pleaded before God that my expenses might be provided by personal friends. Now I can bear witness to his great care, for he has answered my prayers and supplied all my needs.

ZORITZA D. FURNAJIEFF.

DAILY MEDITATION

FOR EVERY DAY IN THE YEAR, BASED ON THE WORDS OF JESUS

BY PROFESSOR W. H. T. DAU

SUNDAY, June 14. Matthew 6: 13. "And lead us not into temptation." God suffers the strength and purity of our faith to be tested by manifold afflictions and reverses in this life. This is only for our good, and we must not try to avoid these trials of faith, but rather pray with the saints: "Search me, O Lord." But there are wicked forces surrounding us: the devil, the world, and the flesh, seeking to deceive us and entice us to our destruction into unbelief, despair, and other great shame and vice. When these temptations come by the permissive providence of God, we need his mighty support. That is what we ask in this petition. We pray for a clear perception of every moral danger, for intrepid courage against wicked men, for valor in our battles of faith, and for ultimate victory in our warfare as Christian soldiers, no matter how long the campaign may be drawn out. Without divine aid, no child of God could stand his ground against the numberless suggestions, invitations and urgings to sin that swarm in upon us from every imaginable quarter, in a world that lieth wholly in wickedness. It is the folly begotten of conceit, in this warfare to rely solely upon our "spiritual manhood," "moral courage," etc. Our strength is made manifest in weakness. We are strong only when we know that we are weak but that the Lord strong in battle is at our side.

MONDAY, June 15. Matthew 6: 13. "But deliver us from evil." The concluding petition of the Lord's Prayer is a cry for rescue, for our final salvation. We pray God that since there can be no truce in our war with evil—since our body and soul, property and honor can never be entirely safe while we draw this fleeting breath—he would in his own good time end our warfare, and rid us from every evil by letting us depart in peace and enter the rest that is prepared for the people of God. This is an all-embracing petition, that sum of all, the fit climax of this wonderful prayer, so full of deep meanings and of such wide range and application. When our last hour is come, and God hears also this petition by granting us a blessed end; when we bid farewell to this vale of tears and enter the home of our Father; then the highest seasons of refreshing from the face of the Lord will have arrived for us, of which our earthly consolations in the state of grace were but a feeble foretaste. Thus this prayer carries us forward to that most solemn moment of our existence, the hour of death, and teaches us to think and speak of that hour as the hour of our great deliverance.

TUESDAY, June 16. Matthew 6: 13. "For thine is the kingdom, and the power, and the glory, for ever. Amen." The Lord's Prayer ends with a fervent expression of the believer's homage and of his firm trust that this prayer is acceptable to God and is heard. It is a loyal subject of the King of kings and Lord of lords who has uttered the preceding petitions. The believer knows, when he has finished the Lord's Prayer, that he has spoken as a faithful vassal should speak to his trusted liege, and he declares that he is glad to have the Father in heaven for his King. For his is the power. There is no limit to his might. He can do all things. This prayer is placed in strong hands. It is deposited with our "God in the heavens, who hath done whatsoever he hath pleased." Every time we offer up this prayer, we appeal to our Father to make us and all men see again and again that the Lord God omnipotent reigneth. And his shall be the glory. To make his name great in all the earth, to extol everywhere his rule of grace and truth, to publish the excellencies of this Father who makes the nations prove the glories of his righteousness and the wonders of his love—that is the grand purpose of the Lord's Prayer. This purpose we affirm to be our own with our cheerful Amen, that is, Yea, yea, it shall be so. Lord, teach us ever so to pray!

WEDNESDAY, June 17. Matthew 6: 14, 15. "For if ye forgive men their trespasses, your heavenly Father will also forgive you: but if ye forgive not men their trespasses, neither will your Father forgive your trespasses." Our Lord added these words to the prayer which he taught his disciples, in order to enforce the vow which he appended to the fifth petition. We have heard before what an appalling effect irreconcilableness has on our acts of worship. We are here told that an unforgiving spirit shuts us out from the forgiveness of God. Mercy is the law in the kingdom of our heavenly Father. He deals with every member of his kingdom on the basis of mercy, and he demands that the members themselves adopt mercy as the basis of their dealings with one another. The forgiving spirit is a trait which his children derive from him by the new birth. If he fails to observe his likeness in them, he regards them as degenerate children, not fit to carry his name before men, and he tells them that the relation of Father which he holds to them cannot be consistently maintained while they are unwilling to forgive men their trespasses.

THURSDAY, June 18. Matthew 6: 16-18. "Moreover, when ye fast, be not, as the hypocrites, of a sad countenance: for they disfigure their faces, that they may appear unto men to fast. Verily I say unto you, They have their reward. But thou, when thou fastest, anoint thine head, and wash thy face; that thou appear not unto men to fast, but unto thy Father which is in secret: and thy Father, which seeth in secret, shall reward thee openly." Fasting is a recognized form of devotion in the Bible. Abstaining from food and drink, or reducing eating and drinking to a minimum, was enjoined in the old law as an expression of grief, and prescribed as a preparation for some of the great festivals of the Jewish Church. Christ has commanded fasting as an accessory to prayer. The underlying idea is that the person fasting subdues his natural appetites and forgets his physical wants, in order to become more fervent in spirit and concentrate his thoughts on the affairs of the soul. Occasions of fasting and humiliation become hallowed to the child of God by the intimate communion with God into which he enters through prayer and the meditation of God's Word. But the fasting of the Pharisees, like their almsgiving and their prayers, was a hypocritical action intended to make them appear as extraordinarily holy and self-denying men. Their fasting, too, was for show and merit. Therefore Christ directs his followers to discard the outward marks of fasting, and to appear joyful during their fasts. The humble spirit and the crushed heart are essential to self-abasement; a sour face and ashes on the head are not.

FRIDAY, June 19. Matthew 6: 19, 20. "Lay not up for yourselves treasures upon earth, where moth and rust doth corrupt, and where thieves break through and steal: but lay up for yourselves treasures in heaven, where neither moth nor rust doth corrupt, and where thieves do not break through nor steal." A person's religion is in no small degree revealed by his attitude over against riches. Wealth, as a means to an end, may be as useful and desirable as health, mechanical skill, literary proficiency, etc. Wealth, like any other good gift of God, becomes sanctified when it is employed in the service of God. All depends on what we do with it. In our text "laying up treasures" is both forbidden and commanded. To accumulate riches for the mere pleasure of getting and having them, and to guard them against decay and violence—that is a miserable use of wealth! And yet some who pretend great sanctity, like the Pharisees in the days of Christ, are seekers after wealth from which neither they nor their fellow men nor the church of God derive any benefit. It may even be guilty wealth, that was tainted in the acquisition. There is a nobler use of wealth than hoarding it; that is, to deposit it with the heavenly Giver. Our best investments are made with God when we turn our wealth into deeds of kindness which will be remembered in eternity, when our gold and silver have become dross, our pearls and diamonds have lost their luster, and our notes and mortgages have become valueless.

SATURDAY, June 20. Luke 12: 33, 34. "Sell that ye have, and give alms; provide yourselves bags which wax not old, a treasure in the heavens that faileth not, where no thief approacheth, neither moth corrupteth. For where your treasure is, there will your heart be also." This is a companion text to the preceding one. It explains what our Lord means when he speaks of laying up treasures in heaven, or as he puts it here, providing an imperishable bag for our riches. Men easily learn one lesson about wealth, viz.: how to acquire and keep it. The Lord would have us learn another lesson more necessary than the former, viz.: how to part with our wealth. Our wealth is not wholly ours. It may be adjudged ours by civil statute, in so far as it belongs to no other human being, though even then our fellow citizens may, under the laws of the commonwealth, claim a portion of it. We may own it also in so far as we use what we need for the decent support of ourselves and those dependent on us. But, before God, we hold all our possessions as a lien. We are only stewards in the great cosmopolitan household of God and must obey the order of the prime and original Owner of all our wealth, when he bids us sell our possessions and give to the poor. We can test our loyalty to our Master and learn the condition of our heart by the readiness or unwillingness with which we surrender our possessions at his command. Is the thought of giving to the poor a pleasant or unpleasant thought to us? To what extent have we heretofore tested our stewardship? We must some day part from all our wealth, whether we will or not. It will be a distressing dilemma, if the thought of parting from our wealth disturbs the peace of our dying hour.

These Daily Meditations by Professor Dau will appear in each issue during 1914.

GOSPEL BREVITIES FROM MANY POINTS

—It is useless to send American clothing to China with the expectation that it will be serviceable to the mission children. Missionaries appreciate the kindness which prompts such a gift, but request THE CHRISTIAN HERALD to state that such clothing cannot be used to advantage and had better not be sent.

—Superintendent John D. Nutting, of the Utah Gospel Mission, 1854 East Eighty-first street, Cleveland, Ohio, writes to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD that he is looking for seven more men "to fill our force for the year beginning in June." There is already a large force of workers traveling in connection with this mission, using Gospel wagons, visiting homes, etc.

—The five Protestant churches of Denton, Texas, combined their forces for two weeks of April, holding union meetings and otherwise presenting a solid front to unrighteousness. The result was most satisfactory. The churches reported larger congregations afterward, and increased interest in all departments. The experiment cemented the churches in Christian work as nothing before had done. We are indebted to Mrs. B. F. Paschall for above.

—Evangelists Davis and Mills are closing a successful series of evangelistic meetings in Kansas City. They began the meetings last October with such results that a number of the most prominent churches engaged their services. Six months of continued meetings in different sections of the city have produced notable results. In one section, four churches united. In one of these meetings, Wesley R. Childs, expostmaster of Kansas City, Kan., was converted. In another church, a Gospel team, consisting of a number of men and women, was organized to conduct meetings in prisons and other public institutions, and their work resulted in over a hundred conversions. In another church, a well-known gambler and sporting man took a decided stand for the Christian life.

—The present is a unique opportunity for pushing evangelism in China. The results of the present work make us long to be able to send out more native preachers, as in each case the pioneer work seems just now to be fruitful of converts. The difficulty is lack of funds. When one thinks that almost every station started means converts, one longs to see more evangelists going forth. There are large tracts of unevangelized territory where it needs men to give their whole time to the difficult work of pioneering. For myself I believe strongly in the imminence of the Lord's coming, and that we should therefore hasten the spreading of the truth. The Mexican Protocol

IN a time that seems phenomenally brief, the Niagara Falls International Peace Congress has reached the testing-stage of the Mexican problem. Its members have gone about their task in a straightforward, statesmanlike fashion, evidently impressed from the outset with the conviction that the tangle was not inextricable, but one that would yield to the application of international law and common sense. They have been careful not to exceed their powers, or to complicate the immediate issue by taking up agrarian reforms and similar matters, which they believe can very well be left for adjustment by the new government when it is firmly established. Their efforts have been mainly directed toward removing the obstacles in the way of pacification, and dealing with those preliminaries that are indispensable to the establishment of a provisional government which shall be liberal enough to command the respect of the Mexican people and acceptable to the various political factions. Now that both governments—in Washington and Mexico City—have received the protocol or preliminary sketch of the agreement, there has been much speculation as to the character of the document; but this is not disclosed. It is gratifying to note that the American commissioners have been magnanimous, and have given evidence throughout the sessions of the genuine desire of this government for the peace and welfare of Mexico.

Will Huerta accept the protocol? He may do so if, as has been learned, it makes no imperative demand for his political effacement. He may construe it as leaving him free to deal with his Constitutionalist foes, and to remain to the last an active stumbling-block in the path of peace. With his stock of arms and ammunition greatly replenished, he may decide, like a true soldier of fortune, to stake all on a final battle, preferring to retire defiant and with flags flying, if go he must, rather than to make an ignoble exit by stealth. Before this issue of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD reaches our readers, the event may have happened.

Home Rule for Ireland

AFTER more than a century of ceaseless struggle, Ireland has at last won the prize for which her people have contended in the face of many reverses and discouragements. On May 25, the Home Rule Bill passed its third reading in the Commons by a majority of 77. It can now receive royal approval without the intervention of the Lords. Under the new bill, Ireland will hereafter have its own parliament and will make its own laws. There will be two Houses in the Irish Parliament, the Senate and the House of Commons, the first to consist of forty members, nominated for five-year terms by the Lord Lieutenant and elected by the four provinces; and the Commons to consist of 164 members, the province of Ulster having the largest representation—fifty-nine members. The new parliament will have no power to legislate on any matters properly within the province of the imperial parliament. The Irish Home Rule cabinet will hold office during the pleasure of the Lord Lieutenant, who represents the crown. The judiciary will be appointed by the Lord Lieutenant. A very important provision in the bill states that "the Irish Parliament shall not establish, endow, prohibit or restrict, or give a preference, privilege, or advantage on account of, any religious belief." Just how Ulster will view the new order of affairs is uncertain. John Redmond, the leader of the Nationalists, has held out the olive branch to the men of Ulster, inviting the co-operation of their leaders in a conciliatory discussion on such features of the Home Rule Bill as may be susceptible of amendment. Premier Asquith has already announced that before the bill goes into effect a poll will be taken of the parliamentary electors in the Ulster counties to decide whether those counties should be excluded from the operation of the new Home Rule government for six years. This poll may not take place for several months. Meanwhile, Ulster is ominously calm, and there is apprehension that the quietude may presage a coming storm. If the leaders on both sides can be got together in the spirit of friendly discussion, a crisis may be averted.

Fear of the rehabilitation of the Roman Church has been one of the principal grounds of Ulster's opposition to Home Rule. This danger would seem to be sufficiently guarded by the terms of the measure; yet it cannot be doubted that, if there should be even the slightest loophole in the bill, Rome will use it to advantage. If the Unionists of Ulster can be convinced that their religious liberties are safe, and that there can be no restraint of the free exercise of their faith, for which they have always stood so stanchly, the conciliation program may succeed. Their sturdy fight for conscience sake has won them the admiration and support of a powerful body of Protestant sympathizers throughout the United Kingdom, and these supporters, while sharing the general desire to avert civil strife, will use their influence in Ulster's behalf for better terms and stronger guarantees before the province can be won over to accept Nationalism.

The Senate and "Tainted" Money

WHEN Zaccheus, in his zeal to make amends for his extortions, admitted that he restored fourfold what he had taken, he encountered no rebuke for the restitution. There was none to hint that the money was "tainted." Justice was done and done generously, though the original offense was nowise condoned by an act which was simply an incident in the man's new spiritual attitude toward his fellow men. It is a recognized principle of the Christian life that we should rectify, as far as lies within our power, any wrongs we may have committed, and to oppose such rectification is an error almost as grave as the original offense itself.

Mr. John D. Rockefeller, who has amassed his great wealth by means that have been discussed very frankly by the American press and people—and rarely with approval—has for several years past been making an annual gift of $250,000, which the General Education Board has apportioned to the Department of Agriculture for farm demonstration work. He could hardly have devoted a part of his great wealth to a better purpose. A few days ago, the United States Senate, in a moment of spasmodic virtue, voted to forbid the Department receiving further aid from the General Education Board, which is financed by Mr. Rockefeller. During the debate, it was charged that the money was "tainted," having been originally acquired through lawless means, and it was added that the United States Government was able to pay its own experts. If the argument had been confined to the last part of the proposition, excluding all outside gifts, from whatever source, there would have been nothing more to be said on the matter; but it is the other part of the argument of which we wish to speak. Conceding that it is true that the bulk of Mr. Rockefeller's wealth, like that of many other millionaires, has been gained by means that cannot be squared with the highest ideals, how are we to reconcile the attitude of the Senate, which, while willing that the taxes which Mr. Rockefeller pays should be accepted and applied to public uses, has now forbidden the acceptance of his money through a more direct channel for a specific purpose which is clearly a public benefit? Is his tax money any less tainted than his money which has passed through the General Education Board? Or would the Senate take the broad ground that the national government should hereafter accept no taxes from the rich, as we cannot conscientiously run the affairs of this nation with funds that are suspected of being of unrighteous origin? Such an attitude might be highly idealistic, but it would be far from logical. Even assuming all the Senate has said of Mr. Rockefeller to be true, if he has wrung his riches from the people by unrighteous methods, there is all the more reason why he should be permitted to restore it. There is nothing to prevent the oil king, if he is so led by conscience, from making restitution to all who have been the direct sufferers through his evil genius of accumulation. Their names are accessible, as Miss Tarbell has shown. That would be the "better way"—the true way of a man who was sincere in his purpose of atoning for the past. And if Mr. Rockefeller has no such thought in view, what then is his object in making his big gifts? Is it self-glorification? We dislike to believe it. We prefer to believe that he, now an aged man, knowing he can take nothing with him, is choosing his own way of doing good. It may not be the best way, but it is better than none, if it results in sending back some of his wealth to the people, even to those who indirectly felt the influence of his financial methods. Even if he were to send it to the Conscience Fund, it would ultimately find its way into public service. It would, however, be quite another matter if this money, which has been expended for the benefit of the farmers, had been designed exclusively for spiritual purposes, for it is written that the gift that is laid upon the altar must be without spot or blemish.

We think the Senate has begun at the wrong end of the problem. Indeed, if Mr. Rockefeller turned his whole immense fortune over to the government, as a gigantic atonement, it would utlimately find its way back to the people and be expended for the benefit of those from whom it came.

An American

JACOB A. RIIS in his autobiography, The Making of an American, told the story of his transformation from an unknown, unfortunate foreigner into a happy and successful American. How successful he was can be estimated from ex-President Roosevelt's estimate, expressed when he was police commissioner, that Mr. Riis was "the most useful citizen in New York," and from his recent statement when news came to him of his friend's death: "In all the United States I never knew a more useful man nor a stancher citizen."

To be "useful"—that is the best American ideal, and Mr. Riis learned how to be that. The story of his grim and cheerful courage in overcoming difficulties, reaching his opportunities and gaining his ends is one that will be forever inspiring. In his absolute mastery of the English language and achievement in it of a clear, charming and forceful individual style, in his integrity and skill as a journalist, in his labors for decency and honesty in politics, in his championship of the poor and in the things he accomplished for the poor, he made a record of which it would be indeed difficult to find an equal.

Mr. Riis did his work as a Christian. He tells very simply in his autobiography the story of his "conversion." He turned about. From going away from Christ he began to go toward him. Multitudes will have a clearer idea of what Christ is because of Jacob Riis's life. His memory will abide, and his spirit will continue to work for honor and charity and cheer through the years ahead.

Roosevelt River

CALL it Roosevelt River! The colonel found it. Now he has proved he found it. Let it no longer be called the River of Doubt, Rio Duvida, but Rio Roosevelt, Roosevelt River—for all the world to see.

There was something almost pathetic about the colonel's statement when he got home, travel- and fever-worn: "I realized that if I were ever to accomplish another task that required great physical exertion I would have to do it soon. In fact I was a little past the age, but I put it through."

So the new river is on the map. Let it be known in name what it will always be in thought and in fact—"Roosevelt River."

Star-Spangled Banner Restored

THE tattered Star-Spangled Banner which inspired Francis Scott Key's famous poem is being repaired at the Smithsonian Institution by Mrs. C. Fowler of Boston. The restored flag will take part in the Baltimore Flag Centennial in Baltimore. The celebrated flag, according to the officials at the Smithsonian Institution, is the largest ever known to have been in action. Francis Scott Key, a lawyer of Frederick, Md., and district attorney for the District of Columbia, was on board an English man-of-war and witnessed the British attack on Baltimore in 1814. In the early dawn he looked carefully to see which flag was floating over Fort McHenry, and beholding the flag now being restored, he wrote the poem "The Star-Spangled Banner," which made him immortal. All nations have flags. Of course no flag seems to us as beautiful as ours, with its blue sky and shining stars, its morning dawn with the streaks of red and white. Every old soldier knows the magic of the flag, and its forceful influence in battle. This influence is thus referred to:

Thou art beautiful, O my love, as Tirzah, comely as Jerusalem, terrible as an army with banners. (Sol. Song 6: 4.)

Y. W. C. A. at Exposition

YOUNG Woman's Christian Associations have just announced the conclusion of a plan with the San Francisco management, for an association building to be located near the main entrance of the Panama Exposition next year. The building is to cost $50,000. There will be a lunch club for women, a woman's protection bureau, an information desk, and an exposition of many forms of women's work. Offers of prizes have been made to women of all the associations in scholarships in colleges, book and magazine subscriptions, money to buy wardrobes for college or to go to the exposition, and for educational trips to cities. Contests are to be in sewing, patching, short-story writing, suggestions for church entertainments, hymn writing, photography and poster designs. It is thought that there will be 300,000 competitors for the prizes. The Young Women's Christian Association is one of the most beautiful and efficient departments of Christian work. It helps to make good this wish of olden times:

That our daughters may be as corner-stones, polished after the similitude of a palace. (Ps. 144: 12.)

Teaching Foreigners English

MANY persons coming from foreign countries avail themselves of the advantages of our night schools to learn our language. Of late a number of industrial institutions employing many men have made arrangements with the boards of education in cities to let the men off for a certain period during business hours with pay continued, if the educational authorities will furnish the school rooms and the teachers, with the one object of speedily teaching the foreigners our language and thus increasing their efficiency as well as happiness. It is well that so many missionary and church societies are devoting themselves to the moral and spiritual welfare of the men and women and children who come to our shores, recognizing the truth of these words:

Wisdom is the principal thing; therefore get wisdom; and with all thy getting get understanding. (Prov. 4: 7.)

Son Dies for Mother

IN A wild effort to rescue his invalid mother from flames which had spread through their apartments in Brooklyn, Harry Halstead, a clerk, was burned to death the other night. The mother, who had been confined to her bed for a year, also perished in the flames. The fire started in the apartment from a burning match dropped by a servant into a puddle of oil while lighting a lamp. The son Harry, who was across the street, heard the cry of fire and ran out to find his home on the fourth floor in flames. He cried out at the top of his voice: "Mother," at every step he took on the stairway. At the threshold of his burning flat friends caught him and tried to restrain him from what they knew would be his death. He answered: "That is my mother in there; I cannot let her perish; I am going to save her," and then he disappeared into the flame-lighted smoke. His body was found in the kitchen of the flat, and that of the mother in her bed. The action of this young man is a sample of the affection and, if occasion call for it, of the heroism of the average American son for his mother. The young man laid down his life for his mother, and then could not save her. Christ's love was infinitely greater, giving his life for his enemies, and saving them by his death.

For if, when we were enemies, we were reconciled to God by the death of his Son, much more, being reconciled, we shall be saved by his life. (Rom. 5: 10.)

AMBASSADOR PAGE, THIRD FROM LEFT; DUKE OF TECK, CENTER

ANGLO-AMERICAN EXPOSITION OPENING

THE Anglo-American Exhibition at Shepherd's Bush was opened formally, May 14, by the Duke of Teck in the presence of a number of invited guests. Ambassador Page supported the Duke of Teck on the platform. A chorus of one thousand voices sang an ode to Peace and a number of familiar American airs. The Earl of Kintore, chairman of the executive committee, said that no more appropriate means of emphasizing the advantages of friendship between the British and American peoples could have been devised than by displaying before the world the wonderful triumphs in the realms of science, art and industry, which an atmosphere of one hundred years of unbroken peace had enabled the conjoint genius of the United States and Great Britain to achieve. The Duke of Teck, in declaring the exhibition open, said it was impossible to overestimate the importance to civilization and to the world's progress of the hundred years' peace. He referred to the colossal working model of the Panama Canal as an impressive and instructive representation of the greatest wonder of the world, achieved by the undaunted enterprise of American engineering. At the inaugural luncheon Dr. Scherer of California, in proposing success to the peace celebrations and to the exhibition, said that the time had come when it was impossible for the sword to be drawn or a shot to be fired in any land where the tongue of Shakespeare was spoken or the songs of Burns were in the air. Universal peace among nations does not prevail now, but its day is hastening rapidly, as civilization advances, and as Christ dominates the spirit of the age. The Anglo-American Exposition just opened will aid in ushering in that era of universal righteousness and peace the prophet saw in the establishment of the Messiah's kingdom, and of which he said: "For thus saith the Lord, Behold, I will extend peace to her like a river, and the glory of the Gentiles like a flowing stream." (Isa. 66: 12.)

Mother Dies for Son

MOURNING the murder of her son, Eugene Houghtaling, the young station agent of the West Shore Railroad at Tappan, N. Y., who was shot down by burglars, Mrs. Frank Houghtaling, his widowed mother, died the other day at her home—of a broken heart. It was only the week before that the son met his death in a midnight battle with three armed thieves who broke into the railroad station at Tappan. News of his murder was sent to his mother. The shock was too great for her, and she never recovered from it. She rallied sufficiently to attend the funeral of the boy but was taken home unconscious and sank down into her last sleep. In her conscious moments she kept calling for "Gene," her darling boy, to come to her. Many mothers have died of a broken heart when their sons and daughters have been taken away from them. Intensely pathetic as was the love of the mother for her boy, who died in heroic discharge of his duty, we are told that God's love for us is still stronger. In the dying hour she called "Gene" to come to her; he could not, but she, a Christian, went to him, also a follower of Christ.

I shall go to him, but he shall not return to me. (II Sam. 12: 23.)

Death of Francis Kossuth

FRANCIS KOSSUTH, son of the great Hungarian patriot, died at Budapest May 25, aged seventy-three. He had been an invalid for months. Last January in a crisis in his illness Kossuth was married to Countess Benyorsky, widow of his life-long friend. Such had been the wish of Count Benyorsky on his deathbed. Francis Kossuth took his father's place as leader of the Hungarians soon after Louis Kossuth died in 1894. Up to the time of his illness Francis Kossuth led his countrymen in their political struggle with vigor and success. When only eight years of age he was taken prisoner by the Austrians, and on being released was banished to Kutahia, Asia Minor, where he joined his father in exile. In 1851 his father was liberated by the influence of England and the United States, and the boy Francis sailed with him in an American frigate to England, where the great revolutionary leader was received with demonstrations of respect and sympathy. When his father died, Francis took the body back to Hungary, in accordance with the demands of his countrymen. The funeral was accompanied by unprecedented honors by the populace. It was then that he was invited to take his father's place as the Hungarian national leader, and he accepted, declaring he would devote his life to Hungarian independence. All the good and patriotic leaders who have devoted their lives to the task of lifting up the people of the world have succeeded in so far as they have shared the spirit of the greatest leader of the common people, of whom the prophet thus speaks:

I have given him for a witness to the people, a leader and commander to the people. (Isa. 55: 4.)

Letter from Dr. Jowett

THE Fifth Avenue Presbyterian Church of New York City recently received a letter from the Rev. Dr. John Henry Jowett, its pastor, who has been making a tour of the Holy Land. It was written from Smyrna. Among other things it said: "We had a most wonderful time in the Holy Land. Every yard of it teemed with significance and added new light to the Sacred Word. Especially did we feel this in Galilee. We arrived in Nazareth before noon on a lovely morning, and more perhaps than in any other place I felt that illumination which the land brings to the Book. We came in sight of the lake of Galilee on Saturday morning about eleven o'clock. The light was altogether favorable, and the effect was beautiful in the extreme. I walked all the way down the slopes, with the upper end of the lake in full view, and my mind was filled with the marvelous scenes witnessed on its banks and waters nearly two thousand years ago. We are now spending a few days in Smyrna." They went to Ephesus, where Dr. Jowett stood on the stage of the same theatre and read aloud to the tourists accompanying him the chapter in the Acts which gives a description of Paul's speech there and of the mob started by Demetrius, which Paul escaped, and which was quieted by an address by the town clerk, and then dispersed by him:

And when he had thus spoken, he dismissed the assembly. (Acts 19: 41.)

THE GO-TO-CHURCH BAND

WHAT do you think of a boy seventeen years of age, who has not missed a Sunday at church for eight terms of four months each, and two girls of eight and fifteen who have not missed a Sunday for seven terms? What do you think of 965 boys and girls, almost 1,000 of them, making a perfect record for church attendance for four months? That was the record of the Go-to-Church Band, which has been established in 86 churches in 23 different States, and of which Mr. Clinton Alvord, Worcester, Mass., is the founder.

Nothing could possibly be more simple than the method of the Go-to-Church Band. The boys and girls of a congregation are asked to take tickets, which will be punched when they enter the church for the Sunday morning service. Every one who attends four months without missing a service is given a prize in the shape of a silver and enamel pin. And as the terms continue each contestant is eager to add other pins, so that young man already referred to, who happens to be Mr. Alvord's son, has eight pins, and his sister Eleanor, aged eight, has seven, which she is proud to wear on gala occasions, as a general will display his medals.

It was found that when the age had dawned that brings a disinclination to be called "children" there was a corresponding disinclination to bring a card to church to be punched. So a "senior band" was organized, whose members were given, not cards, but strips of coupons, one of which is torn off when presented at the church door. So now the older ones keep up the same enthusiasm, and the congregation and minister are cheered by the presence of the boys and girls.

Mr. Alvord in describing the band and its work writes:

"The influx of the young calls for no change in the regular service and a 'children's sermon' is unnecessary. However, it is impossible for a preacher to keep from brightening up his discourse somewhat when he realizes that a full fourth of his increased audience is composed of children who are less than eighteen years of age. Many of the children come for the first time as regular attendants, being unfamiliar with the service, and, when unaccompanied by older members of the family, some of the audience have a chance to show and direct in the observance of response, hymn and prayer. Central Church assigns not over three unattended youngsters to one pew and a young woman, who had volunteered for the service, has a seat with them to help and to maintain order. However, attendance for a few Sabbaths renders everything decorous, and the five- and six-year-olds behave as well as the grown-ups; indeed, one pastor said 'they behave better.'

CLINTON ALVORD

"A pastor writes under date of March 26: 'In many places the trouble is at the top. However, I would like to know more about the plan. What starts them? Just to gain a "record"? We cannot do that here in the Sunday school, and the tide is stronger against church-going.' I answered something as follows:

"Tell the plan to both young people and children. Advertise it in church and Sunday school for two Sundays before the term begins. Assure them that it is a hard thing to be successful and not miss a Sabbath for four months; if they think it easy they can try and find out. Dare them to try. Don't expect boys and girls to go to church simply because it is their duty, or to listen to a sermon. Make it a contest. Start the 'get there' spirit. No boy likes to be beaten by a friend. Once started the habit is quickly formed and the young learn easily."

Boys and girls brought up with the Go-to-Church Band program can never stay home from church in later life on the excuse that they were "made" to go to church when they were young. They go because they want to. The force of the habit of going to church, when it is voluntary, is shown by the fact that the first nine of the original sixteen prize winners for the first term at Central Congregational Church, Worcester, headquarters of the Go-to-Church Band, are still, after four years, active in the band.

CHURCH AND STATE IN FRANCE

A CATHOLIC READER'S LETTER ON THE SUBJECT, AND THE ANSWER

"GENTLEMEN: I notice in your issue of May 6, page 469, an article regarding 'Rome's Hand in French Politics.' Such things as these have been refuted so often that it does not seem possible for you to republish such things.

"Why do you not state the other side of the case, that which caused these ecclesiastical authorities to make such statements? You do not give a fair view of this at all. If there were in this country such a condition as exists in France—that is, a party entirely opposed to the church, and trying to confiscate church property—I think you would be among the first to have your ministers advise their followers to vote against them.

"Possibly you have not heard of the Protestant Federated Churches of Cleveland. At a recent election, all of their ministers on a certain Sunday spoke concerning it in their pulpits. If you can see any difference between these, I would like to have you explain it. I would also ask you that you print what caused those authorities in France to make the statements credited to them.

"Let us see if you will have the courage to print this and give it as much publicity as the other.

"Cleveland, Ohio. HALLAM S. WHITNEY."

Our correspondent asks us to do two things: (1) to "state the other side of the case"; (2) to express our opinion of certain actions of Protestants of Cleveland.

1. "The other side" in this case is the action of the French Government by which the Roman Catholic Church in France became disestablished. On July 3, 1905, the Concordat erected by Napoleon and Pius VII in 1801 was rescinded in the French Chamber of Deputies by a vote of 341 against 233. On December 9 of the same year the French Senate passed this measure by a vote of 181 against 102. The appropriations of the French Government to the Roman Catholic Church in the year preceding this action had amounted to $8,400,000. A most valuable revenue of the Roman Catholic Church was thus cut off. But the French legislators did not intend the wrecking of the Roman Catholic Church, and therefore provided that the government appropriation to the Roman Catholic Church should be reduced gradually. In 1906 the church was to receive $2,000,000 less than previously, and the appropriation was to cease altogether four years after the passage of the disestablishing act. Thus ample time was given to the Catholic Church to adjust its affairs to suit its new legal status.

The law, furthermore, ordained that no religious instruction should be given in the public schools of France during school hours, but permitted such instruction to be given upon request after the close of the school. Absolute liberty of conscience and the free exercise of his religion were guaranteed every citizen. The law warned men not to interfere with acts of public worship. Threatening a person because of his attending religious worship was declared a punishable offense. The French Government resigned the right which it had formerly exercised on the occasion of the appointment of archbishops, bishops, and priests. On the other hand, priests were forbidden to defame officers of the state or to incite the people to resist the new law.

The fundamental idea underlying this law and its various provisions are of such a character as to appeal to every American who believes in the separation of church and state.

Our correspondent speaks of an attempt of the French Government to "confiscate" church property. We question whether confiscation is the correct term for describing the action of the French Government. The act of disestablishment provided

ORTY cents a week. If you were to lay aside forty cents every week, in three months you would have $5. Or, in case you are a child, say, if you were to get seven persons—how many are in your class?—each to hand you five cents weekly, you putting in five cents also, you would ve $5 at the end of three months. Now, if at the end of each three months u were to send that five dollars to the na Orphan Fund, you would pay for the ire support and education of one orphan ld for one year. And you could pick out name one of the 1,005 orphans under E CHRISTIAN HERALD'S care; you could e his or her picture, you would be writ- to regularly about your orphan's prog- s, and he or she would know by name and iress who had done this wonderful thing him, or for her. Forty cents a week rty cents a week. Six cents a day.

Or, if that is really impossible, for one lar, for two dollars, you can provide for full twentieth, a full tenth of a whole ar's care and training. You can have a rt in changing a neglected, outcast, athen child into a charming, useful, ristian Chinese citizen.

And many CHRISTIAN HERALD readers are ng just that, and taking immense satis- ction in it. The names below are but a action of the number. The letters that close the gifts breathe the genuine love for ese wistful, gentle, homeless, friendless tle souls so far away, and yet so near in eir human need and their human possi- ities. Just study the picture, friends. teresting, isn't it? Wouldn't you say it s worth while to take up a tiny, thrown- ay baby and build him into a happy rkman such as those boys are? You uld say so? Well, friend, worth while r whom to do it? We need your help to keep up this splendid work that stands for so much to the honor of our God in the eyes of the Chinese public. It is never necessary to beg CHRISTIAN HERALD readers; make it possible for us to send the full quarterly remittance at this season for the support of the children dependent upon us. Will you? Here are a few of the letters received:

ORPHANAGE CHILDREN PREPARING RICE

IN THE center is a set of rice-hullers, small blocks of grooved wood bound by bamboo hoops; the lower block is stationary, the upper revolves upon it. Cracked hulls and all are put in the stone mortar and pounded with stone hammers. The fanning mill removes the coarse, loose hulls. The bamboo sieves allow the fine pieces of hull and cracked kernels to fall into the big baskets or trays, and the rice is ready for the kitchen. The large sheet of matting on the ground is made of split bamboo.—E. F. Knickerbocker, Superintendent, Compassion Orphanage, Ningqo, China.

A LITTLE ANGEL OF THE MOUNTAINS

BY CYRUS TOWNSEND BRADY

NOW the camp had tacitly resolved that every man should be on his good behavior when the boy was around and at frightful oaths and horrible ories should be conspicuous by their bsence; but no lines could be drawn any restraint exercised at that hour the morning in The Black Pup, with ie men in their present condition. The boy was horrified by what he eard as he went from table to table the crowded room seeking his iend. Yet there was a strange sort fascination in the horror. He was ver-young to recognize danger in the oisterous equality these men were eeting out to him; and their attention as flattering to his pride, in a trange, terrible sort of way.

So that even after he had satisfied imself that Parson Bill was not here, he still lingered. He was so nely and neglected and forlorn. It as so dark outside, and so bright ithin. They urged him drunkenly to e a man and take his liquor like one! Vell, why not? He might have succumbed to the pressing invitations ad not a sudden and fierce altercaon over a game between two men in far corner attracted everybody's atention. This gave him a moment for nought; whereupon, his better nature ppermost again, he turned and fled nto the night as if the devil and all his ngels were after him. His little eart pumped hard as his flying feet rought him to the door of The Red Dog. And for the second time his conscience smote him, yet he was not quite so responsive to its stimulus as he had been. And he pacified it by assuring himself that he was only hunting for his friend, Parson Bill.

It was in The Red Dog that the boy found Parson Bill. What followed Olaf's entrance is incredible, but it is the incredible thing that happens. Parson Bill was winning—largely. The Doc and others were losing. At length the Doc was cleaned out—broke. Then he gave all the credit of Parson Bill's huge luck to the boy. It was because he had the boy, the Doc insisted, that he had the luck. Then suddenly they realized that the boy himself was at their elbows.

In a drunken rage Parson Bill ordered him to drink. He would put his guardian angel upon a level with themselves and then test the fates. The boy, wondering, at first refused. He could dare to disobey Parson Bill, but when the Doc called him a coward he took the dare. Amid the hoarse shouts and wild encouragements of the men he took his first drink, from the drunken hand of Parson Bill. The strong liquor, even weakened as it was for his use, choked and staggered and sickened him. But he persevered, amid the shouts of the men, until the room swam and he sank upon the floor near the chair of Parson Bill.

Bill compelled the Doc to take back half his winnings and begin again. He lost, and lost, until, in a final wild desperation, he staked the guardianship of the boy against the Doc's returning luck.

"One hand settles it," said Bill, as the play began.

"I'm your man," replied the triumphant Doc, as Bill proceeded to deal the cards.

Whatever power was overruling or trying to direct unruly mankind that night was unwilling that there should be this change. For the result of that hand was disastrous to the Doc. Perhaps it was luck, perhaps it was skill, perhaps it was both, for Bill played as he had never played before, and at the end of the final game the money and the boy remained in his possession. With many curses the unfortunate Doc admitted his defeat, and, none staying him, he rose and struggled out of the room.

"Does any other gentleman wish to try the favors of fortune with me?" Parson Bill asked slowly.

No other gentleman did, apparently.

"Where's my kid?" continued the big man.

"Lyin' dead drunk at your feet," said one.

Carrying his charge home in his arms Bill laid him in his bunk and sat on the side of his own bed, staring and trying to take in the purport of what had happened. Bill was very drunk, but some glimmer of sense remained with him. He knew now what his conduct had been, at least in part. He began to realize what he had done to the boy and the result of the boy's action was quite apparent. Was there any God, and did he hear any prayers from that wicked town? Poor Bill was nearer to prayer himself that night than he had ever been before.

It was a frightfully sick little boy that awoke long after daylight the next morning. It was a changed boy, too. The first sound that greeted Bill was a profane oath. He sat up, shocked into soberness almost, and sick with horror.

"What, what—what do you mean by talking that way?" he began in wrathful reproof and indignant protest.

"You talk that way," answered the boy defiantly. "I've heard you. I'm going to do it, too. Everybody in the camp does it. I don't see why I should be different. I ain't going to say any more prayers, either. I guess you're right. God don't hear prayers that come from Cañon Creek. I prayed for you last night, and look at us now."

"What's come over you, sonny?" asked Parson Bill, bewildered.

"I'm going to be like the rest of the men. I'm going to drink and swear and play cards, and—"

"You can't," said Parson Bill in deep anxiety and alarm.

"Yes, I can. I'm awful sick now, but after I get used to it I won't be. You aren't," said the boy.

"Good God!" exclaimed the man in growing dismay.

"No use talking about Him now," said little Olaf. "I'd rather get drunk than say my prayers."

A WEEK IN THE WORLD'S NEWS

Passing Away of Jacob A. Riis

THE well-known author and social worker, Jacob A. Riis, whose serious illness has been reported in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD in past weeks, died at Barre, Mass., on May 26. Mr. Riis was born in Ribe, Denmark, May 3, 1849, one of a family of fourteen. He began his social reforms by ridding a tenement house of rats because of his horror of them, and then cleaned up the premises. He came to America in 1870 with scarcely any means, and for a while did odd jobs. He eventually got into newspaper work, where, as a reporter, he won and always afterwards retained the warm friendship of Colonel Roosevelt. Mr. Riis fought a hard battle with adversity before winning a secure place in fortune and fame, and his several books dealing with social reform matters are now standards. It is said that the sweetheart of his youth in Ribe, who had rejected his advances, became his wife in 1876. She died in 1905. Two years later Mr. Riis married Miss Mary A. Phillips. Mr. Riis had been subject to heart disease for some years, and about a year ago his condition alarmed his friends, who, however, did not expect so early a death of this distinguished man.

Nearly 1,000 Perish in Shipwreck

IN a fog, between one and two o'clock on the morning of May 29, the Canadian Pacific liner Empress of Ireland, bound for Liverpool, and bearing 1,367 souls, was sunk by the Danish steam collier Storstad in the St. Lawrence River, not far off shore from the pilot station town of Father Point, where the river is thirty miles wide. The boats had sighted each other, then were hidden in the fog, and continued signaling, but without avail, and within thirteen minutes after the steel collier had torn out the liner's side, the passenger ship went down, carrying 964 persons to their death. Four hundred and three were saved by the lifeboats, by the collier, which was also badly damaged, and by their own exertions. Of those lost 571 were in the steerage, 211 were members of the crew. Few women and children were saved. Captain Kendall of the liner made heroic efforts on behalf of his vessel and was himself badly injured. In the interval between the shock and the sinking, a wireless cry reached two government boats, which arrived on the scene within twenty minutes, and aided in the rescue. The return of those boats to land with the survivors, many of them injured, and several hundred bodies which had been recovered, was a tragic spectacle. This is the seventeenth fatal marine accident this year. A rigid inquiry into all the circumstances is now under way. A large delegation of Salvationists, en route to the international convention at London, were on board in charge of Commissioner David Rees, head of the Army in Canada, who, with his family of five and many of the delegates, perished. Laurence Irving, son of the famous Sir Henry Irving, and his wife also were lost. Survivors told the most dramatic stories of the awful scenes witnessed when the gored Empress of Ireland filled, rolled almost completely on one side, and then went down, hundreds being caught in their berths by the inrush of water. Quebec received the bodies of the dead, which were taken there by Canadian Pacific boats, in a spirit of universal mourning.

England's Thorn in the Flesh

THE militant suffragettes in England made the most violent demonstrations yet in the latter part of May, on one occasion congregating at Buckingham Palace to forcibly present a petition to the king, at which time the police arrested fifty-seven women after prolonged opposition, in the course of which many present were more or less injured. Mrs. Pankhurst was again arrested. Besides damaging valuable works of art and committing other outrages against property, a number of women attended a charity performance where were present the king and queen, and shouted insulting remarks at King George. One woman had chained herself to her seat and was removed from the theater only after a stage-hand had broken up the seat, and she was carried out screaming and kicking. The militants are earning such names as "wild women" and "gunwomen," and have been warned that the public, which is now deprived of the use of several popular museums and art galleries closed because of danger from the militants, is fast losing all sympathy for their cause and is restrained only by the police from forcibly preventing further overt acts by representatives of the Women's Social and Political Union.

Ireland Begins To Taste Freedom

THE Irish Home Rule Bill has now passed the House of Commons finally, the vote, May 25, being 351 to 274, and will become a law when signed by the king, regardless of what the House of Lords may do with the measure when that body takes it up. The final vote was accompanied by exciting scenes and much recrimination. The end of the years of struggle for Irish independence was not marked, however, by the commencement of civil war in Ulster. Elaborate preparations had been made by the government to take care of any hostile uprising, and equally elaborate plans were put into effect by the Unionists themselves, it is said, to restrain the populace for the present. It remains to be seen if armed resistance to the enactment of the law will be made, or if the House of Lords shall open the way to an accommodation by the amending bill which Premier Asquith has hinted at. Immediately the bill is signed by the king, however, and no one imagines he will not sign it, it becomes the law of the land.

Thrashing Out Colorado's Troubles

THE contending industrial and political factions in Colorado are at present submitting their cases to the court of public opinion. Delegations, usually comprising women, and representing both sides in the labor controversy, have visited Washington and other cities and have spoken to both official bodies and the general public. Graphic tales are told of the scenes which occurred during open hostilities, and the blame is attached to the strikers and to the militia according to the observations of the speakers. The strikers are reported in the press to have fired upon a Federal guard, precipitating a brisk exchange of shots. There has been no important change in the general situation during the week.

To Advance International Arbitration

THE twentieth annual conference of all Peace Societies was held at Lake Mohonk at the close of May, 300 delegates from all parts of the world being assembled. John Bassett Moore, former counselor of the State Department, who presided, in opening the sessions declared the Mexican peace mediation to be a great advance toward that better concord between the governments of North and South American continents, which is the object of the Pan-American movement. The cause of international arbitration, in the opinion of the conference, has received a decided stimulus by the Niagara Falls mediation, and it was admitted that some such great object lesson was needed.

Seeking To Girdle the Earth

THE trend toward an American campaign to possess the markets of the world, was emphasized by the National Foreign Trade Convention, held in Washington the latter part of May and attended by over 500 business men. Secretary of State Bryan assured the convention that the administration is earnestly disposed to assist in this movement, but does not intend to make international questions out of every business difficulty individuals may have in foreign lands. The danger of overdoing the matter of cultivating foreign trade while conditions of employment remain so greatly unequal was suggested by James J. Hill.

Defending Helpless Wild Life

STRENUOUS attacks are being made upon the Federal migratory bird law, "the best bird law ever enacted," by some hunters and marketmen, the protectors of bird life are waging battle all along the line, backed by a Wild Life Protection Fund subscribed to by sportsmen and wealthy bird lovers. Efforts to impair the law by cutting down the appropriation were defeated in the Senate, May 11, by 45 to 17. California is one State in which opposition is strong on the part of market-shooters. Recently Judge Jacob Trieber of the United States District Court declared the law unconstitutional on the ground that each State has exclusive right over migratory birds when within its territory.

OMMERCIALISM OR ALTRUISM*

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON BY DR. AND MRS. WILBUR F. CRAFTS

OUR lesson to-day is the story of a rich young man whose money became a root of bitterness to him, a hindrance to success. We shall all understand story better if we go back to childand recall our first knowledge of ey and property, of ownership and ardship. Some one gave you a y in payment for some little ser- or as a gift. In either case you v the penny became yours. You v also that the penny itself could be eaten. It was useful only for ange. You could buy candy with help the poor or pay for a penny ament for children in missionary s. Missionary and charitable ng developed some slight sense of ardship. You soon learned that received money not alone to buy t would please you, but as someg through which you could do l to others.

oung people seldom love money for own sake. They are usually so r to spend it for the pleasures it bring that they need to be urged ave a part of it. Boys and girls ld be taught early to save money the future. Not so many men and en would miss marriage and parge and the joys of a home of their if boys and girls were taught that 0 a week saved will in thirty years avings bank interest become someg more than ten thousand dollars handy sum to educate your boys girls if you begin in the teens to e so much by giving up things ch are useless if not also harmful. ether we accumulate some property saving or receive it as the young r probably did—by inheritance m a father or relative—we must p ever in mind that money and perty should never be allowed to ome dear to us, but should be ught of (1) as a means to an end, ful only for what they can do; and as a sacred trust which we are use on ourselves only to make ourves stronger in mind and body and l to serve God and our fellows.

We can almost always see, if we stop hink, that our property, even when seem to earn it, is in larger part to what God and our neighbors ve done to help us. Look at the ad on your table. You bought it, say, of the baker; but of whom he get it? From the miller in ir. And from whom did the miller it? From the farmer in grain. d the farmer's senior partner is d.

Misers are almost as mean and even re foolish, for they allow their irts, which should love God and man, become lovers of mere coins, as if should love a flag-pole rather than flag it was made to uphold! The ser, as his name suggests, is miserle even beyond the beggar. More equently men love the power and easures that wealth brings to its possor. And this we shall see was the se with the rich young ruler.

One of the best ways to prevent operty from becoming a curse to us to make it a constant blessing to ers by systematic giving. God has ainly shown in the Bible that he ims a tenth of our income as the al tribute due him as our King, and so as his share as our senior Partner. So much we should pay; and beyond that we may give what more we will in free offerings.

There is just one more problem of property, which will bring us right up against our lesson, namely, that if we love and trust God we shall absolutely consecrate all our property to him, and shall give it all away if by so doing we can best serve his cause; or we shall devote our skill and talent to the use of a part of it as capital to produce an income for unselfish uses if that is seen to be clearly the best way to make our business honor God in the blessing of man.

"And as he was going forth in the way there ran one to him, and kneeled to him, and asked him, Good Teacher, what shall I do that I may inherit eternal life?" Surely here is great earnestness and sincerity. A rich young church trustee—that is what a rich young ruler of the synagogue corresponds to in our day—comes running on the street after the Nazarene rabbi, whom his fellow officers in the Jewish Church despise. He even kneels in the dust of the street at the feet of Jesus in his intense desire for such an abundant life as he has seen and felt in Jesus, as he has listened to his words and seen his miracles. Young men often speak of "seeing life," and it is death they see. But this young man wished to see and feel life at the full, in place of the unsatisfying social and religious formalities among which he lived. Jesus in reply seeks to make him appreciate what "Good Teacher" should mean. Only God is really "good," and Jesus would remind him that he is himself "good," because he is also God. And then Jesus recites several commandments that express man's duty to his fellows, and the young ruler says in quiet pride: "Teacher, all these things have I observed from my youth up." "And Jesus, looking upon him, loved him, and said unto him, One thing thou lackest." To show by a test that could not be disputed what that lack was, he bade him give all his property to the poor, and so transfer his wealth to heaven, and then come in the fellowship of equal poverty to be one of Christ's disciples. The other apostles, with little to give up, had given up all their boats and nets and other earthly goods and human ties. He must do the same to enter into that original Society of Jesus. The test uncovered a hidden love of the power and pleasure that go with riches. He was not willing to go so far, and turned away "sorrowful"—completing the story of a young man lovable but lost. Dante pictures his still sorrowful form in the Inferno of the dead as

> The shade of him who made through cowardice
> The great refusal.

Note that profoundly interpretative word, "cowardice." We can not think of this rich young man as in any sense a miser. Young men seldom love money for its own sake. He loved the power and position and pleasures that wealth brought, and lacked the courage to turn from the rosy path of luxury to the stony path of altruistic service, just as most rich young men do to-day. Pastors of a Southern city recently, comparing the fruits of the winter's revivals, discovered that all were alike in the fact that not a rich man had been among the penitents at their altars. Lady Huntington, one of the few titled people of her time who were active in Christian service, thanked God for the little letter "m" in that text, "Not many rich, not many mighty, not many noble are called." There are a few in every age that can not be separated by wealth from God and the service of man. "May their tribe increase."

At the close of the study of this lesson, in a city of Montana, a few years ago, I was suddenly confronted by the rich young ruler in American flesh and blood. I had been accustomed to see a chapter of the Bible step out alive every hour when in Bible lands, but here was the rich young ruler confronting me in a modern dress in my own land. "I am the rich young ruler," the young banker to whom I refer said to me. "I ought to give up my money-making and devote myself to the moral and religious uplift of wicked people on this frontier. But I want to achieve a business success. I want the struggle and the victory and the power and pleasure it will bring. I am not willing to give all this up to do good." There was intense seriousness in this frank self-revelation, and in spite of all I could say he "went away sorrowful."

All my life I have been meeting American and British reincarnations of the rich young ruler, not all of them rulers, not all young, and not all of them very rich, but all of them experiencing the battle of commercialism and altruism—some of them coming out of it, not sorrowful in defeat, but joyful in victory. When the writer was six years old, at the time when Fremont was the anti-slavery presidential candidate, church officers who were subjects of "King Cotton" in the North, and feared emancipation might hurt New England's cotton mills, formed a gauntlet to keep my father from voting the liberty ticket. It was but another case of those who refused the call of Christ to duty lest their worldly interests should suffer. Many a time have I known professedly Christian business men refuse to sign a "no license" petition, and some have even signed license petitions, because the supposed interests of commercialism had overcome their altruism. The unspeakable support of the opium trade in China and the liquor traffic in frica by the British Government and the business public behind it despite appeals of British churchmen and philanthropists is but a wholesale case of the rich young ruler's cowardice in refusing the call of God to unselfish service of mankind. In almost every city there are men who sell harmful drugs and more harmful pictures and literature, and advertise frauds and poisons, and open to the public shows that will make boys criminals and ruin girls—there are even men willing to rent property for rum and lust and gambling—because they are not willing to sacrifice any profits the careless public will allow them to make through the wreck of human souls.

On the other hand let us rejoice that some daily papers and many weeklies are putting out liquor advertisements, and that some advertisers are refusing to help the circulation of the salacious magazine stories that have suddenly multiplied like a plague of frogs in our land.

"Noblesse oblige!" Let us press the obligation of the privileged to help the less educated, the less prosperous, not alone by money, but by the gift of themselves to public service. No new machinery will uplift our politics until the leading men in our church boards and chambers of commerce, as in other lands, count it both a duty and a privilege to accept public office as an opportunity of patriotic public service. And our Sunday schools imperatively need for teachers the elders, stewards, trustees, who are making their absorption through the week in worldly business an excuse for refusing the supreme opportunity to serve their generation by teaching the Word of God. This lesson should be a self-revelation to many a business man who has refused a pastor's invitation to pilot a class of boys or young men through the rapids of youth, showing him to himself as "him who made through cowardice the great refusal." Let us rather take as our example Saul at the gate of Damascus, and be "not disobedient to the heavenly vision."

BETTER BABIES

BY MARGARET E. SANGSTER, JR.

ONCE in a while, out of the dim maze of books and short stories and poems that I have read, a sentence leaps to the foreground of my mind—a sentence in black type that I have remembered because I liked the thought, long after the book it occurred in has been forgotten. And just now, as I was wondering about this article, thinking of the things that I had to say in it, such a sentence came out on my blue blotter and jumped wildly around my desk.

"Her tongue played with the word," sang the black letters, "as if it were a ball of variegated colors." Somehow the thought pleased me a great deal.

I once knew a woman who wrote books, a woman who was very learned in the matter of French and Latin and German and Greek. Often when her nights were dark and dreadful and sleepless, she would lie awake and think of words—what language they were derived from and what their original meanings had been. She told me that it was a great source of pleasure to her, and kept her from growing nervous when she felt wide awake. Often through the chill, gray dawn, I too lie awake and think about words to keep myself from the unpleasant imaginings that sometimes haunt one in the night time.

But, girls, I want to talk to you about one word—the word "better." I want this to be a little chat with my friends, not a grammar lesson.

"Better" is a sweet, comforting little word, I think—a modest, unassuming little word that means a great deal more than she seems to express. She stands in line with her two sisters, Good and Best. I remember that in grammar school it was hard for me to learn that better came after good. I always wanted to say gooder and goodest. After I got used to the comparison, however, it was moderately easy for me, and I always liked the middle term more than the rest. It is so easy and no more than you should be to be good, and it is so hard, and somehow so snobbish, to be best. Better seems commendable and easy to reach and rather satisfactory.

I think that by this time you are wondering about the picture at the head of this article, and what it has to do with the word better.

Ever since I was a tiny child I have been reading stories and articles and newspaper items about county fairs. I know that women send their best cakes and embroidery, while men send their prize animals and vegetables. But although I have been brought up with the knowledge of these fairs, it is only in the last few years that I have heard about baby shows. Before that an educated public did not consider prize babies of as much value to the nation as prize onions, but as soon as they grasped the fact a new kind of fairs, called "Better Baby contests," were held in every State. As I said before, it is an easy thing to be good and a hard thing to be best. It is for neither the good nor the best class of babies that this sort of contest comes as a godsend. It is for the baby who should be better that the idea is a blessing. As one of the current magazines tells us: "The well baby needs simple guidance to see that he keeps well; the sick baby needs, and usually gets, attention to make him well; but the merely delicate baby with enfeebled powers of resistance to disease and a constant low vitality needs both guidance and the best attention that medical science affords."

UNDER THE JUDGE'S HANDS IN THE BABY CONTEST

The picture on this page, taken at the New York Baby Show, is of Dr. Harold Curtis, one of the specialists in charge, looking at the teeth of a prize-winner. "The Better Baby contest," he told me, "was very easily managed and did a great deal of good. The babies were passed from one table to another, where they were encouraged to play and to say a few simple words (if they were old enough). Then they were passed over to my table and I looked at their eyes, ears, noses and throats. When I had pronounced on them they were passed on to another room and underwent a thorough physical examination. The children registering the highest number of points from each borough were then tested and the prize-winners were determined."

This is an age of better things. For years the minds of men have been turned toward better telephones, and better engines, and better heating plants, and better racing cars. It marks a new step toward the highest civilization to see people dividing the interest shown to mechanical devices with the health of babies and their well-being.

"We have rich babies and poor babies," said Dr. Curtis, "and for once money does not count at all. The son of a poor laborer is just as likely to get a prize as the daughter of a millionaire."

Girls, dear, I hope that you do not think that I have wandered away from my subject. I started out to talk about the word "better" and I have ended up by telling you about the better babies. But somehow I think that you will like the baby part of the article better than the word part, because a baby can see, and hear, and love, while the word at best is only a jumble of black letters in a fat, solemn dictionary.

TES ON THE CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR, EPWORTH LEAGUE AND BAPTIST YOUNG PEOPLE'S UNION TOPICS

he Way to the Chief Seats*

HAVE you ever sat at the "Speakers' Table"? You know how the tables at a banquet are arranged, in metrical rows, with one table ced, usually, at right angles to the , often on a slightly raised plat- m, for the chairman, the speakers the most distinguished guests. s was precisely the arrangement at Oriental feast, the tables forming ee sides of a rectangle, the short le, running at right angles to the er two, which were longer, being the e of the chief seats, corresponding our "speakers' table." The center e at this end table was for the ster of the feast, and the places at right and left were those of the t distinguished honor. Of course, ead of sitting at table the diners ined on couches. This fact is ught out in the marginal reading cline" of the Revised Versions. Authorized Version unfortu- ely preserves the old word "room," ch is no longer used in English in sense of "place."

o here is our picture: As the guests er the dining hall one pushes for- d to get up to the table of honor a seat near the host. He sits n or reclines here, and a servant es to tell him that this place has n reserved for another, whereupon "begins with shame to take the est place." This expression indi- es an unwillingness to go, a dis- ition to loiter, stopping at inter- liate places, not willing to accept t lowest seat. And every expulsion m a higher seat, every step toward bottom is accompanied with new me.

t is always a distressing thing to people walking deliberately away m the thing they want to reach. s pushful man wanted to reach or; instead he met shame.

he lesson of the parable is pre- nently against pride. The man goes deliberately forward for ognition, feeling that he has a right it, anxious to assert that right, is ng straight away from the thing seeks. The high seats in the king- n of heaven are not for those who k they have a right to them; not those who in pride and self- ertiveness and self-confidence and ire for praise go after them.

his is only one of a group of ables which form part of the great w Testament teaching that the way is down. The corn of wheat must into the ground and die before can grow and bring forth fruit. e will must be absolutely sur- dered to God before the power of Holy Ghost can enter the soul. e Christian must die with Christ the cross before he can be raised to resurrection life of holiness and . So the way to reach those chief ts is to turn our backs upon them l go out, forgetful of feasting and vards, forgetful altogether of self, give ourselves to humble, loving, uous labors for our Lord.

his fact of the necessity of self- getfulness is evidenced in many ses of life. The musician, if he is -confident and affected, misses be- a really great artist. The great sician is a man who thinks in- tely more of his art than of himself. gives himself to his art, and his crowns him with glory. The man is really and deeply and ulti- tely popular or famous is the man seeks not popularity or fame, but seeks the people's best interests the highest attainments of truth art, and finds himself, often un- ectedly, met with fame.

"Chief Seats, and How to Reach m." Luke 14: 7-11. B. Y. P. U. and tian Endeavor Topic for Sunday, June 21,

A beautiful story is told of Lord Kelvin that once when he entered a great gathering of scientists the audience rose. He whispered to the companion who had entered with him: "I think the prince must have come in." He had no idea that the demonstration of respect was meant for himself. He did not dream that he was worthy of it. He was the prince and did not know it. His humility, his love for the truth and his service in the cause of truth had given him this high honor that he had expected to be awarded only to the king's son.

Individuals and Crowds*

CHRISTIANITY, more than any other philosophy, emphasizes the value of the individual soul. Every human life is, according to the standards of Christ, of infinite value to God.

Jesus himself frequently took time to talk with single individuals, when he might have been talking to crowds. We see him in conversation with the woman of Samaria, leading her careless, guilty heart to the waters of everlasting life. Notice the connecting link between the two narratives assigned for our Scripture study. This woman, won by his kindly interest and spiritual power to a faith in his Messiahship, goes back to the city of Samaria, tells her neighbors there that the Messiah has come, and, as a result of her testimony and of his two days' visit in the city, many are led to believe in him. Three or four years later, when Philip goes forth from Jerusalem to preach the Gospel, he visits Samaria and finds the populace so ready to receive his message that it is recorded: "The people with one accord gave heed unto those things which Philip spake," and that as a result: "there was great joy in that city."

The woman whom Jesus convinced in personal conversation led her neighbors to him. And now Philip, after winning many more, is called from that busy town and his success there, to go down to the desert to meet a steward or chamberlain of an African kingdom that into his ears he may tell the same story of the Messiah. There seems no strong reason for rejecting the ancient tradition that this same dignitary, proceeding to his homeland, preached the Gospel there, won many converts, and perhaps was the real founder of the great Ethiopian, or Abyssinian, Church.

Each soul has not only infinite intrinsic worth, but each soul has practically limitless powers of winning others to the truth and the right. We are having a "win-my-chum" campaign. But are you winning him? Don't wait for larger opportunities. Be faithful to to-day's opportunity, and to-morrow will be greater. You cannot tell how much that single soul you win may do for Christ.

ROSY AND PLUMP
Good Health from Right Food.

"It's not a new food to me," remarked a Va. man, in speaking of Grape-Nuts.

"About twelve months ago my wife was in very bad health, could not keep anything on her stomach. The Doctor recommended milk, half water, but it was not sufficiently nourishing.

"A friend of mine told me one day to try Grape-Nuts and cream. The result was really marvelous. My wife soon regained her usual strength and today is as rosy and plump as when a girl of sixteen.

"These are plain facts and nothing I could say in praise of Grape-Nuts would exaggerate in the least the value of this great food."

A LITTLE ANGEL OF THE MOUNTAINS

"What did I tell you I'd do to you if you didn't say 'em?"

"You can't do anything at all to me, for you gave me the whisky last night and I'm going to take some more whenever I can," he answered with relentless logic. "Maybe I'll get to like it like you do. You always leave me alone at night, but I'm going with you from now on."

Poor Parson Bill groaned aloud. He was fluent enough on occasion, but he found nothing whatever to say in the face of a dilemma like this. His authority, his influence, everything he had, were gone. He had thrown them away. He could control the lad no longer. It was brought home to him that an absolutely necessary antecedent to any control of another is control of one's self. Being lamentably weak in that direction, he had no power over the boy.

So rapid was Olaf's degeneration that in one week it seemed to the beholders the little boy was as bad as any hardened old sinner in the camp. When the men thereof thought it over in broad daylight, as it were, they were terribly disquieted. But they did not see what to do about it. The blind cannot lead the blind, nor the unregenerate reform the sinner.

The downfall of the lad was looked upon as a vivid evidence of the incompetency of Cañon Creek to deal adequately with the problems his presence presented. The very men who had so thoughtlessly and even gleefully encouraged little Olaf in wickedness; who had patted him on the back approvingly when he swore, and had given him liquor, were the most severe in condemning Parson Bill. Public opinion had about decided that Parson Bill had proved himself incompetent to be the guardian of infancy, and only the fact that no one seemed better fitted to essay the task prevented his summary deposition.

As a precipitant of regeneration and a focus of moral reform, little Olaf was a conspicuous failure. Something else had to be done for the town, some other resolvent had to be applied to the solution of the problem.

And it was at hand. For, by the grace of God, there suddenly appeared in the camp a man, his wife, and two children. The man was in delicate health, threatened with tuberculosis. These people had given up their Kansas farm, packed their few household goods in wagons with their two little girls, and come trailing across the prairie and through the mountains. Having heard that Cañon Creek, whose salubrious climate had a great reputation, was without a restaurant or boarding house, and a likely spot for the opening of such an affair, they had come thither for that purpose.

Then men of the camp, recognizing the quality of manhood in the newcomer, for all his slender build, and being appreciative of the true womanhood of his wife and the winsomeness of the little girls, received them enthusiastically. They had been carefully piloted past the saloons and directed to an abandoned cabin, which would provide them temporary quarters until it was known what they intended to do and how they intended to do it. The only untoward incident that happened to mar the general pleasantness of their arrival was an encounter with a very dirty, ragged, foul-mouthed boy who threw stones at the cow under the wagon, and uttered such profane imprecations at the sight of the girls as to make their parents shudder with disgust.

CHAPTER IX

FOR a Christian to settle in Cañon Creek took courage. For one to go into the restaurant business there required patience and labor. Logs had to be cut. Lumber had to be ripped out at the dilapidated little sawmill down the canon. A building had to be erected. Its fittings had to be purchased or arranged from the local general store. In short, there was a great amount of work on hand and Mr. Morrison was exceedingly busy. Labor, too, was hard to get in the town. He had to do much himself, and he was not over-strong, although the pure air and the outdoor life put new energy, and new strength, and new health into his body. There was much for Mrs. Morrison to do, also, and even Jennie and Annie, the two little girls, helped to the best of their ability.

Cañon Creek stared in wonder at first, in spite of the sneers of the women residents. They soon began to take interest in the building operations, too. From interest to help was a short transition, and presently the town fairly seethed with excitement. The little girls were objects of especial wonder and delight, and good, clean, wholesome Mrs. Morrison, still young and very good-looking, even by other than local standards, was scarcely less interesting to the forlorn men of the camp, who were unaccustomed to that kind of a woman.

Civilization, law, order, or at any rate society, had at last arrived. The rough miners and traders looked, sometimes from afar, at the first family of the camp, and were cheered and comforted by the goodly sight. The new arrivals had a good effect on everybody except little Olaf. He had been a popular idol, and his fall from that position was swift, sudden, and, to the boy, quite terrible. Although they themselves had brought about his moral descent, the men now looked at him with askant glances because of it. He tried more swaggering, more bad language, and was frowned upon vigorously because of it. It seemed to him that it was now too late to try anything else. If he still had the heart he found that he had, somehow, lost the power; and yet, the withdrawal of public approval did more to bring him to a realizing sense of his utter badness than anything else.

He had made life a burden for the little Morrison girls at first, but in view of his pressing problem even they had ceased to interest him after a few days. He found himself in a position of which older persons than he were not without experience; not good enough for the best society on the one hand, and too bad for the worst on the other! He needed the bitter lesson. He was a proud little boy, and he concealed his misery from Parson Bill, who, outcast himself because of the boy's utter collapse, for which he was largely responsible, remained his only friend.

Indeed, the sudden downfall of Olaf had apparently undone Parson Bill as well. That listless and disheartened gentleman did just enough work to keep himself and the boy from starvation. Whenever he made a lucky strike or had anything above those simple needs, he would get brutally drunk. The two still ate together, still occupied the same cabin, but the old comradeship was gone. The man was ashamed to meet the boy, and the boy was alike ashamed to meet the man. Except at meal times and at night in the saloon, they avoided each other.

On the Saturday night following the Monday on which the newcomers had arrived, Parson Bill went down to the Red Dog as usual. For a wonder, the boy did not accompany him. On his visits to that place since Olaf's fall from grace, Parson Bill neither invited nor forbade the boy to go with him. It was a matter which was left to the youngster's own inclination. Parson Bill felt keenly that after his own unpardonable conduct he had no right to criticize, or to blame, or even to discipline the lad further.

But for some unexplainable reason, to Parson Bill's great relief, Olaf chose that night to stay at home. He went around to the side of the house as the evening drew on, and sat down where he could look down the trail, his back turned to the camp. He was too young to philosophize, or to speculate, or to indulge in self-analysis, but he had reached that point in his career when he could fight no longer. The moment would decide whether he would go as utterly and completely to smash as a boy of eleven years can go, or whether he would turn over a new leaf and become something like what he had been before, or even a better boy.

The quiet, his isolation in the calm summer evening, affected him strangely. His thoughts ran backward. His little mind played over bygone days. He was so preoccupied that he did not hear, as the bulk of the house would have prevented him from seeing, the approach of a stranger, and it was not until Mrs. Morrison herself had turned the corner of the house and stood before him, that he was aware of her presence.

He sprang to his feet instantly. He recognized her, of course, and stood poised ready for instant flight, his only thought being that she had come to reprove him or even to chastise him for the terrible language that he had used to the two helpless little girls only that afternoon. But as the lady made no move to approach him more nearly, he stopped his projected escape, curious to hear what she had to say, and interested to learn why she had sought him out.

Her 100th Birthday

ANN LOZIER WESTERVELT, widow of Peter C. Westervelt, celebrated her 100th birthday anniversary May 23, 1914. She is the only surviving member of her generation of the Lozier family of Teaneck, N. J., now West Englewood, where she was born May 23, 1814, on the original tract of land granted to her ancestor, Nicholas Lozier, September 20, 1697. Ann Lozier Westervelt's first ancestor in this country, François LeSueur, was born in Normandy, and came here about 1657. His last son, named Nicholas, took the name of Lozier. His children were nineteen in number, and all were baptized in the Church on the Green (First Reformed Church of Hackensack, N. J., Albert von Schlieder, minister). His son Jacob, Jacob's son George Lozier, and his son, Jacob Lozier, were each in turn members and officials of that church. In 1830 the old residence was taken down and the present residence was built on the same site in part from the stone of the first. Ann Lozier (Westervelt) was the daughter of the last named Jacob Lozier, and was born in the old residence and still remembers clearly the time the new house was built, where she was married in 1835. She, like her ancestors, was and still is a member of the Church on the Green.

At the reception in Mrs. Westervelt's home the aged lady was in her usual health and ready for her many guests. By her side sat her only daughter, Mrs. Mary Harper, who assisted in receiving. Among those who called upon the centenarian were two nonogenarians, and several octogenarians. She was fully alive to the occasion and appreciated the compliment paid her, an event to which she had looked forward for many days. THE CHRISTIAN HERALD numbers several of this widely-connected family among its readers, and has been cheered and encouraged in the work at the Mont-Lawn Children's Home by them.

CHURCH AND STATE IN FRANCE

the creation of societies of wor-p—associations cultuelles—who as al trustees are to hold church prop-y formerly held by the Roman tholic archbishops as sole owners. e French Government did not ap-priate private property of church ieties for state use, but secured the people who make use of the rches the right to hold their prop-y, which right they had not had der the Roman Catholic discipline. other words, the French Govern-nt lent its authority to the emanci-ion of church-members from, let us , the economic tyranny of the dig-aries of churches. We know from perience in our own country what power a Roman Catholic bishop or hbishop wields over his parishion-because he is the legal owner of ir church property. Only recently s was shown during the church riot South Bend, Ind. The rebellious ies have learned to their dismay t they must submit to the will of ir bishop if they wish to enjoy the of buildings erected with their ney.

At the time the act of disestablish-nt went into effect France was not ogether Catholic. Professor Dou-rgue published an estimate at the ie showing that two-thirds of the pulation of France belonged to no rch. Besides, there were the Jews d 500,000 Protestants. From no arter has the world heard such furi-s outcries against robbery, theft, , as from the Roman Catholic rarchy. The Protestants went to rk quietly and arranged their af-rs without difficulty to meet the re-irements of the new law. If the ench act of disestablishment has ttered any property rights, whose uld they be except those of the eccle-stical rulers of the Roman Catholic urch? Those rights, however, are t unimpeachable.

There is another point which our rrespondent ought, in justice, to con-ler. During the centuries in which e Roman Catholic Church was the cognized church of France, that urch had drawn from the French vernment many hundreds of millions dollars. This money was taken m the people, whether they were mbers of the Roman Catholic urch or not. The ecclesiastical dget of the French Government has r generations been a point of attack the part of French citizens who ve regarded this expenditure of st sums of the people's money as t made in their interest nor in the terest of the commonwealth. The slike of the Roman Catholic Church und among the French workmen can traced to this unjust appropriation state funds to the Catholic Church. the sums which have gone into atholic Church treasuries from the rench Government could all be com-ited, it would be seen that the Gov-nment by its annual appropriation ad become a very heavy investor in oman Catholic Church property, in ct had become part owner of that roperty to which it devoted the money its citizens. We in America believe at there should be no taxation with-it representation. The people who rnish the government its funds ve a word to say through their rep-sentatives about the disposition of ose funds. It is a specious argu-ent to call the act of disestablish-ent in France a confiscation, and to eclare the rescission of the Concordat 1801 a "violation of the law of na-re, of nations, and of the principle sincerity and good faith in the aintenance of treaty rights," as ope Pius did in his encyclical of Feb-ary 17, 1906.

Our correspondent holds that the t of disestablishment was put rough the French legislature by a party entirely opposed to the urch." It may be true that there ere infidels in the law-making body of France, but they did not put their infidel sentiments and principles into the act of disestablishment. The law which they produced in this instance is entirely in the interest of religious liberty. If that is all Roman Catholics want in France, they have that now. Nobody dare interfere with their worship. The new law explicitly provides for that. The provisions of the disestablishing act are just and secure to Christian Frenchmen rights which they did not possess before.

Pope Pius X has been talking largely for effect when, in his encyclical, he told the French nation that he must decline and reprobate the act of disestablishment which effected the separation of church and state, because it is "a gross insult to God, who is officially denied by the declaration that the republic recognizes no cult."

The New York Independent, quite pertinently, wrote at the time: "The Pope brands les associations cultuelles, who are simply local trustees holding the church property, because France wishes him to outstrip his authority. Yet for over a generation the same worship associations have existed and now exist in Switzerland. Yet Pius X makes no protest against the Swiss. Furthermore, in some cantons, by force of les associations cultuelles, the Swiss Catholics elect their parish priests; yet Pius X protests not. Strange that his Holiness is bowed down with sorrow at the wickedness of the French, who wish the people to hold their property, while he worries not at the greater offensiveness of the Swiss."

2. We have, indeed, not heard what the Protestant Federated Churches of Cleveland did through their ministers on a certain Sunday preceding a certain election. We wish to say, however, once and for all time, that THE CHRISTIAN HERALD has never advocated the complete separation of church and state as a policy to be shifted and changed according to need, but as a solemn principle. In the application of this principle THE CHRISTIAN HERALD knows neither Protestant nor Roman Catholic, neither Jew nor Greek, neither believer nor unbeliever. THE CHRISTIAN HERALD would not knowingly condone an offense in Protestants for which it criticizes Roman Catholics. THE CHRISTIAN HERALD ever seeks to keep out of its discussion of the principle of the separation of church and state religious bias and denominational favoritism.

Our correspondent has not given us the exact facts in the case to which he refers. If the ministers in question have done no more than show to their audiences the duties of Christians as citizens, they have not done anything but what their calling as preachers of God's word requires of them. For the Bible has some things to say about citizenship and the obligations accruing therefrom. Nor have they done anything amiss by preaching a special sermon on a given occasion. But it will not be easy to parallel their alleged acts with the action of Cardinal Audrieu of Bordeaux and Cardinal Doubillard of Chambrey, to which we referred in our issue of May 6. These French cardinals merely re-echo what their Pope has said and which he has made it their duty to repeat.

In the encyclical which we cited before and which was officially published in the Osservatore Romano, the Pope declared that laymen must "as a docile flock suffer themselves to be guided by their shepherds." The act of disestablishment he declared to be "repugnant to the constitution of the Roman Catholic Church as founded by Jesus, because Scripture teaches and the tradition of the fathers confirms that the church is the mystical body of Christ, a body that is governed by

"OUR heavenly Father is indeed a prayer-hearing and prayer-answering God, for he has saved our brother for whom we have long been praying," writes A Thankful Sister from North Carolina. Miss J. L. R. writes from Hattiesburg, Miss., thanking God that she is recovering from the effect of an accident which left her a cripple. Miss H. H., of Hunt, N. Y., acknowledges answers to prayers for the restoration of a mother's health. M. H., of Athens, N. Y., acknowledges answer to prayers that a friend might dispose of property. M. S. R., of Portsmouth, Va., writes: "The requested prayer for the restoration of a loved one who was sick has been answered."

Acknowledgments of answers to prayer have also been received from:

V. V., Council Bluffs, Iowa; M. A. N., Athens, Mich.; Mrs. W. H. S., Lamotte, Iowa; M. J. E., Woodbury, L. I.; Mrs. C. B. C., Fairchild, Wis.; One of the Christian Herald Family, Harlan, Iowa; Mrs. S. T. N., Mehoopany, Pa.; A Reader, Decatur, Ill.; Mrs. M. C. C., Pittsburg, Pa.; Subscriber, Miles City, Mont.; Miss M. G., Carthage, N. Y.; Mrs. L. W., Springfield, Ill.

A number of letters are being held for the "Friend" from Milford, Ky., who sent a request for prayer some time ago. No response has as yet been received from an earlier request that this reader send complete name and address in order that these letters may be forwarded. Letters are also being held for R. P. B., Montgomery, Ala., and for Mrs. H. M.

M. B. requests prayer for a revival at Potts Camp, Miss.; Mrs. W. M., for a revival at South Hadley Falls, Mass.; Mrs. S. L. R., that a church may be built at Loch Gelby, Va., and many souls saved from sin and drunkenness; Mrs. C. T., for blessings upon revival meetings to be held at Ashley, Ohio; Mrs. G. W. M., for revival meetings to be held in Watoola Church, Opelika, Ala.; Miss W. J. A., that a revival may soon take place in a community in Pennsylvania and that old and young may turn to the Lord; Mrs. T. H. and Mrs. I. A. R., for a revival among church members and the conversion of the unsaved at Marietta, Ga.; J. W. H., for the success of revival meetings in the Baptist church at Farmville, N. C.; F. W. M., for success in reopening a Gospel mission on West Houston Street, New York.

Miss N. S. writes: "Will you please pray for a brother? We believe he was converted a few weeks ago. Will you pray that his thirst for whisky and taste for tobacco be taken from him; that he may be kept from the use of both and from all sin?" A Reader from Virginia asks healing from "one of the greatest afflictions that mortal is heir to," for which she has been unable to find a cure.

The following friends ask prayer for the assurance that sins are forgiven or express in other ways their desire for personal spiritual blessing:

CHURCH AND STATE IN FRANCE

shepherds and teachers, a society of men in which there are found leaders who alone have the authority to govern, teach, and judge. Hence it appears that the church, in its inmost essence, is an unequal society; that is, a society comprising two classes of persons, the shepherds and the flock—those occupying a position in the various ranks of the hierarchy and the multitude of believers. These classes differ so utterly that the right and authority to lead all members to the final end of the society resides exclusively in the pastoral body. The masses, however, have no other duty than to suffer themselves to be guided and to follow their shepherds like an obedient flock." This declaration of the Pope caused disappointment to the French minister Briand, and consternation to such Reform Catholics as Abbé Felix Klein, Abbé Hemmer, Fousegrive, and others, who had hoped that the policy of tolerari potest and habita ratione temporis would prevail, by which the Vatican has on previous occasions side-stepped a troublesome question, and, with more or less grace, submitted to an unpleasant situation, hoping for better times. When the enforcement of the act of disestablishment was riotously resisted by French Catholics, the aforementioned encyclical of the Pope was openly charged with having caused them.

In the same spirit and to the same purport were words which, soon after the promulgation of the encyclical of Pius X, were published in the Manila Daily American by the archbishop of Manila. We quote a few of his statements: "The ones who have in keeping your body and soul ask that you do not only vote for men who are wise, but for men who are good Catholics." "Because many of you do not know for whom you should vote, you must confer with your father confessor and other good men of the holy church who have clean consciences toward God." "Never vote for any other than a true Catholic."

We do not believe Protestants to be impeccable or immune from error, but we doubt whether an American Protestant would ever speak to his parishioners as Pope Pius X and his subordinates have spoken to theirs. He would not be retained in office by his people if he tried.

TORONTO
JUNE 21-25, 1914

Interesting Program

The program for this great convention is comprehensive and diversified, covering every phase of modern merchandising. The sessions will be addressed by able, successful men; open meetings, devoted to a wide range of special topics, will give everybody a chance to ask questions and hear his own problems discussed by the men who have met and solved them.

Edward Mott Woolley

the famous writer on business topics, has made a study of the A. A. C. of A. and their work, as well as of the plans for the Toronto Convention. He has embodied the result in a little book, "The Story of Toronto". This book paints a graphic, inspiring picture of what this great movement signifies.

It will be sent free to all business men asking for it on their business stationery—together with detailed facts as to the convention program and rates for accommodations

THE NEW HOUSECLEANING

A Little Discussion on Dust and Germs, of Especial Interest to Spring Brides

THE time is at hand to which legions of women look forward with mingled joy and dread and that mankind uniformly regards with dismay if not disgust; the annual event which we call our spring housecleaning.

For so many years this has meant to the housekeeper a general upheaval, and to the male members of the family a necessary evil which returns inevitably with the spring flowers, that it sounds almost blasphemy to assert that the cleanest house the writer has ever seen is never "housecleaned" at all—never has been, in fact, though it is four years old. The answer is simple: because it is kept clean; so clean from one week's end to the next that months may come and months may go but it stays clean forever.

Of course you could not conduct your housekeeping in such a manner, nor could I, but perhaps our children or our grandchildren may so order theirs; for the house of which we are speaking was planned, designed and built to be run at the highest point of efficiency, and furnished and equipped accordingly. Portable rugs, hardwood floors, painted walls and that modern home missionary, the Vacuum Cleaner—in this instance one that has separate attachments for practically everything that needs to be swept or brushed, even the picture molding, bookshelves, curtains and sofa pillows—make possible the home-maker's ideal.

And, even though we may not ourselves attain such an ideal, we should keep it in mind, little by little making every spring housecleaning a less arduous undertaking than the last. The day of flip-flopping the dust about with a feather duster seems to have passed; is it much less efficient to sweep with the old-fashioned broom, deliberately sending up from the floor fine particles of dust that will soon settle down on tables and chairs where it must be wiped off again?

The old way is to take rugs and carpets and curtains into the back yard and there proceed to beat and shake, sending clouds of dust joyously into the air so that part of it may fly back into your own or your neighbors' windows; the new way is to draw it out, by means of the vacuum, and into a little bag where it cannot escape to work further damage. Even the up-to-date carpet sweeper is a cousin far, very far, removed from the old type. Wherever we look for illustration of new methods versus the old we find that they call for less muscle and more brains—or perhaps we should say for a different kind of thinking; a more scientific way of looking at things. Let me cite, for example, an incident which occurred the other day:

A good old-fashioned housekeeper, who was greatly disturbed over the approaching marriage of her favorite niece, a young girl just home from college, exclaimed in dismay: "I'm sure I can't understand how you are going to housekeep; why, you don't even know how to clean a refrigerator!" "That may be," retorted the girl, "but it doesn't take a vast amount of intelligence to learn, and at least I know how to buy one"; and the look which emphasized the word "buy" plainly added "which is more than you do." I saw the point, for I happened to know Aunty's refrigerator. It is clean, always scrupulously clean, as far as the eye can reach; but that, alas, is not very far.

Science has shown that "if a million germs held a conference on the head of a pin, the pin-head would still look bright and clean." Moreover, examination with a microscope reveals the fact that the cracks and fine scratches found on the lining of the average "clean" refrigerator offer as fine breeding places for the countless germs that are always present where there is the least particle of decay, even grease, as the most prolific microbe would wish. "Wiping out" a scratched refrigerator means wiping into the scratches particles of germ-laden impurities; converting the harmless looking crack into a fertile valley for propagating an army of germs that menace the family health. For as germs must feed and multiply by tens of thousands over night, so, too, do they throw off waste products which we call ptomaines; ptomaines that poison our foods and accumulate with alarming rapidity in the unscientifically built refrigerator.

So, while it is all very well to understand how to come to the rescue with boiling water and sal-soda once a week, is it not better to begin our housewifely duties at the right starting point and look for the refrigerator that is constructed to offer the greatest possible resistance to germs? A perfectly hard, perfectly smooth lining surface that will neither scratch nor crack, and scientific ventilation, may mean a bit higher price for you, but also means a very discouraging proposition for the microbe to find in his path. But, you remonstrate, nobody used to think of such things and people lived to a ripe old age. Well, some folks still think that the prick of a dirty pin or a scratch from a bit of tin are too small to " bother about," but most of us have learned from our own, or the bitter experience of others, that it pays to keep a bottle of disinfectant at hand; that it is cheaper to be extravagant with peroxide of hydrogen, or pure alcohol, than to risk infection, blood-poisoning and perhaps the loss of a finger or an arm. When no less an authority than Dr. Harvey W. Wiley, former U. S. government pure food expert, is responsible for the statement that "the ordinary ice-box is a charnel house of death, which not only breeds disease but spreads it," is it not high time that we looked below mere surface dirt? That we give as much heed to the ounce of prevention as to the pound of cure?

But to go to the point: it is not whether you are interested at this particular moment in vacuum cleaners or new refrigerators. Our little discourse on dust and germs is only intended to point this moral: let us not compass our spring housecleaning by the work of the scrubbing brush, the scouring soap, the clothes beater and the mending needle; let us do an important part of our renovating in the easy chair by the evening lamp, reading up on better methods and more efficient home equipment, so that when we do invest in something new it may be a wise and intelligent choice. Not a new dust-collecting carpet to be nailed down in place of the old, but an easy-to-clean rug and the necessary cans and brushes for staining and "finishing" the old floor.

Man is right when he protests that housecleaning should be abolished. It should, the old kind, and as quickly as possible, in favor of the modern sanitary home that is as clean in February as it is in May.

Wonderful Milk-Giving Cows

I NOTICED in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD of April 29 an article stating that a certain Guernsey cow has beaten the world's record for butter-giving milk, producing 1,059.59 pounds of butter during 1913. I have at hand records of two or three cows of different breeds that have beaten this. Below are the records:

1. Banostine Belle De Kol, champion Holstein of the world. Year's record, 27,404.4 pounds milk and over 1,257 pounds commercial butter.

2. Spotswood Daisy Pearl, champion Guernsey of the world. Year's record, 18,602 pounds milk and 1,110 pounds commercial butter.

3. Jacoba Irene, champion Jersey cow of the world. Year's record, ending January 20, 1914, 1,175.7 pounds commercial butter.

The Holstein and Guernsey cattle records are from Gallaway's Cow Book, Waterloo, Iowa, 1913. The Jersey record from The Jersey Bulletin, March 18, 1914, published in Minneapolis, Minn.

When Beauty Was Sacred

SEVEN vestal virgins tended the ever-burning sacred flame of Vesta in ancient Rome.

Absolute cleanliness was one of their religious obligations. Their house, which was maintained by the State, contained baths of surpassing beauty and luxury.

A most important feature of the toilet, as well as of every great Roman household, was the use of fine oils—apparently palm and olive.

The utter luxury of the Roman bath is today enjoyed by the more than two million women who use Palmolive Soap.

In this delightful form, palm and olive oils are most perfectly blended.

Those who use Palmolive daily find there is nothing else quite like it for cleansing, soothing and nourishing even the tenderest skin. It leaves the skin smooth, firm and white and protected against irritation.

Palm and Olive Oils give Palmolive its delicate color. Naught else is needed. The natural delightful fragrance is a veritable breath from the Orient. And the price is only 15 cents a cake.

Palmolive

In hard water or soft, hot water or cold, Palmolive lathers freely and quickly. It imparts a smooth, clear complexion, and adds that touch of charm unknown to any other soap. It is very hard—does not waste.

Palmolive Shampoo —the Olive Oil Shampoo—makes the hair lustrous and healthy, and is excellent for the scalp. It rinses out easily and leaves the hair soft and tractable. Price 50c.

Palmolive Cream cleanses the pores of the skin and adds a delightful touch after the use of Palmolive Soap. Price 50 cents

N.B.—If you cannot get Palmolive Cream or Shampoo of your local dealer, a full-size package of either will be mailed prepaid on receipt of price.

Tire Prices
Which Appear Unjust

When tires cost more than No-Rim Cut tires, every evidence is that those prices are unjust. Yet 16 makes sell at higher prices—up to one-half higher. Let us tell you why those extra prices mean an utter waste.

No-Rim-Cut Tires In Four Ways Excel

Note first that Goodyears—after millions of tests—hold top place in Tiredom. No other tire ever won so many users. And never before were men changing to Goodyears so fast as they are today. Our this year's increase in tire sales so far is 55 per cent.

And No-Rim-Cut tires have these four features which no price buys in any other tire:

The No-Rim-Cut feature—the only way known to build a satisfactory tire which makes rim-cutting impossible.

Our "On-Air" cure—an extra process which saves the blow-outs due to wrinkled fabric. It adds to our tire cost $1,500 daily.

Our rubber rivets—hundreds of which are formed in each tire, during vulcanization, to combat the loose tread danger.

Our All-Weather Tread—a tough, double-thick tread, as smooth as a plain tread, but grasping wet roads with deep, sharp, resistless grips.

Mark that at no price does any other maker give you one of these features, which together save tire users millions of dollars.

Why We Undersell

Goodyear prices are due to matchless output, to efficient methods and to modest profits. But our tires represent—as our prestige must prove—the utmost in a tire. Plenty of tires offer lesser quality, but none can offer greater.

Any dealer will supply Goodyear tires at Goodyear prices if you tell him that you want them. And you will always use them when you test them once.

SAXON $395

The Gasoline Toll Gate Does Not Stop You in a SAXON

Saxon owners are saved the annoyance and expense of frequent stops to pay toll at the gasoline stations. The occupants of the light but sturdy Saxon drive by in comfort, while many a touring party in a big, heavy car is held up for fuel replenishment.

Thousands of owners daily find the sturdy Saxon the most economical car they ever drove, they consider it the most economical car of standard design in the world—to buy and to run.

The last economy of the Saxon is in buying it. It is what you get for your money that counts; in other words, value. Experts have told us that the Saxon represents the greatest dollar for dollar value of any motor car.

It gives you, for $395, a genuine automobile, of standard design and construction, made of materials equal to those in any car, carefully built, thoroughly tested.

A Year's Service in a Month Proves Saxon Economy

And the Saxon saves you money every day you drive it. Here are some economy records from a test just made in Detroit—representing the equivalent of a year's service. Note them carefully:

135 miles a day for 30 days
40 miles to the gallon of gasoline
200 miles to the quart of oil.
Half a cent a mile for fuel, one-fourth of a cent per mile per passenger.

All the original tires good for from 2,000 to 5,000 miles more of service.

In this test one of our standard cars completed a run of 135 miles a day for 30 consecutive days. Rain or shine, warm or cold, over rough streets and paved boulevards, this sturdy car, under official observation, adhered rigidly to its schedule, totalling in one month's steady driving 4,050 miles — as far as the average owner drives in a year. And all without being laid up a single minute for repairs or replacement.

34.75 miles to the gallon of gasoline was the unprecedented economy record made by Saxon cars in a nation-wide, 200 mile, non-stop contest on May 16. In one day, under all weather and road conditions, more than 100 Saxons in different cities set the best average in economy in automobile history.

No wonder Saxon owners say: "It's cheaper to drive a Saxon than to use street cars—especially when you consider the time saved."

The 135-mile a day car is now making a trip across the continent over the Lincoln Highway, from New York to San Francisco—the long car of its size and price to attempt such a feat.

Business Men: Let the Saxon Save You Time and Money

Not only does the Saxon give pleasure and health at moderate expense — to those who don't want to pay an extravagant price for a car; to those who already own a big car; to those who need a car for summer vacation use. Its wonderful economy is a reason also for using it in business.

Salesmen, contractors, real estate men find the Saxon a saving in time and money. So do grocers, hardware men, carpenters, plumbers, painters, and many others. Public service corporations are buying Saxons for their employees. Physicians find that in a Saxon they can make more calls in less time and with less fatigue than in any other way. For all whose business requires covering much ground, the Saxon makes two minutes grow where one grew before.

Saxon economy comes from lightness — and good balance. These qualities make this car sparing of fuel and tire expense. Though light, however, the Saxon is neither under-powered nor flimsy.

Our engineers' tests — and service in 3,000 owners' hands — have proved that it would be unwise to build the Saxon any heavier for the work it has to do: carrying two passengers and covering the ground quickly and economically. The Saxon has as high a factor of safety as the high priced cars.

That's why Saxons the nation over are standing up and winning hearts. Users who then are climbing steep grades in hilly cities, such as Pittsburg, Seattle, Cincinnati; mastering rough country roads in Michigan, Wisconsin, Illinois, Indiana, Texas — everywhere.

Over 3,000 Saxons Are Now in Use

More than 3,000 Saxons have been delivered and they are universally making good — on the steepest hills, the finest paved boulevards, the roughest country roads, dust, mud, long trips, in all kinds of weather.

Saxon cars stand up. The record 135 mile a day run in Detroit demonstrated more than Saxon economy. It answered the question, "How will the Saxon stand up after a year's service?" Careful examination showed that at the end of the run, the Saxon was in as good condition as at the day it started. Except for tightening the brakes no adjustments were required. Motor, clutch, transmission, axles, steering gear — all were in perfect condition.

So you see the Saxon proves economical in repair cost as well as in fuel cost. It's built to last — and it does last.

Good and good looking, satisfying to the eye and the pocketbook, a saver of time and a saver of money — the Saxon commands itself to every one who can use an automobile for business or pleasure.

Order Your Saxon Now

Saxons are selling fast — faster than we ever dreamed they would. We have doubled our manufacturing capacity and new additions to the plant — now planned — have been completed. People want more Saxons than we can build this year. It must be a case of first comer, first served. So the only way to avoid being one of the disappointed is to see your dealer and order now.

BLOSSOMS IN JUNE

From 300 to 13,000

Three Years Ago, the output of the Paige factory was only 300 cars. Now, we build 13,000

Just consider these figures for a moment.

From 300 to 13,000 is a tremendous stride. Reduced to terms of men and human activity, these figures become an inspiration that must seize upon the imagination of every American man and woman. Three years is but a short time. Yet—within this period—the Paige has sprung from nothingness into the very front rank of a national industry.

The public has demanded more and more Paige cars each year. And step by step with this increasing demand has come the expansion of the Paige Company.

Public demand has moved us bodily from a small, tumble-down building into the present mammoth Paige factory.

Public demand has replaced a small handful of workmen with a veritable army.

Public demand has increased our sales organization from 39 to 1026 Paige agencies.

Public demand has absorbed Paige cars in every State of the Union—and many lands oversea.

Public demand has increased Paige sales from $44,000 to more than $1,250,000 a month.

As you consider this three-year record, one perfectly irresistible conclusion will begin to lodge in your mind. Such a tidal wave of public appreciation must be based upon something more substantial than mere fancy. Paige value must be unusual value. Paige cars must have earned their reputation of "preferred investments" with the motor buying public. The answer must be in the car itself.

Make it a point to investigate Paige cars at your first opportunity. Approach this investigation from any angle that you will. Then—beyond any question of doubt—you will understand the motive which has prompted so many hard headed men to stake their faith and money to the extent of more than a million and a quarter dollars a month.

THE CANADIAN PACIFIC LINER EMPRESS OF IRELAND

The Ship of 14,500 Tonnage, 18,000 Horse-power, with Modern Safety Equipment and Accommodations for 1,700 Passengers, Which Now Lies at the Bottom of the St. Lawrence

CAPTAIN OF COLLIER STORSTAD

THE TRAGEDY ON THE ST. LAWRENCE

STRUCK by the steam collier Storstad, whose bow was nearly wrecked by the impact, the Canadian Pacific liner Empress of Ireland sank in the St. Lawrence River, three miles from shore from Father Point at about two A.M., Friday, May 29, within thirteen minutes after the collision, 1,027 of her human cargo of 1,479 perishing. This was the swiftest marine disaster recorded and one of the most terrible.

The Empress of Ireland, one of the finest ships in the North Atlantic service, set out from Montreal bound for Liverpool on Wednesday, May 27, touched at Quebec Thursday, took on a pilot and proceeded some two hundred miles down the ever widening St. Lawrence until near Father Point, where she dropped the first pilot and picked up a second. The name of the second pilot was Death. A thick mist had begun to creep out over the water. Among the 1,066 passengers were several of more or less world prominence. A large company of Salvationists were aboard on their way to the international convention of the Army at London. The crew numbered 413. The captain was H. G. Kendall, a seaman with a high record for the intelligent performance of his duty. According to one voyager, "Nobody troubled to dress on the first night, so it was just a happy crowd of people in holiday garb that assembled for dinner." It seems that all on board looked forward to a quick, uneventful voyage. The voyage was indeed brief.

As to what happened after the Empress of Ireland picked up that grim pilot, accounts differ. This much seems a matter of virtual agreement: a mist-wave was seen to leave the distant shore as the hour turned midnight May 28, at which time a vessel was sighted headed toward the liner. The approaching boat was the steam collier Storstad, steel built, carrying 9,000 tons of coal and under command of Captain Anderson. The ships were about two miles apart and about three miles off shore from Father Point. Almost immediately after they sighted each other the fog bank slowly drifted in between and blotted out their lights. At once signals were exchanged. The liner was slowed down and finally stopped. At times she forged a bit ahead, then again stopped. The baffling qualities of a fog were too well known to allow anything to be taken for granted.

Thus the two felt their way. But the Pilot was guiding the course of one. Slumber lay heavy upon the passengers below decks, yet a few were roused by the weird call of the sirens, and lay, wondering. Captain Kendall and other officers were on the liner's bridge, alert. The collier's captain had retired, but in the presence of danger had been awakened and had taken command. He states that his engines were reversed and running full speed astern to check the vessel when a rift in the fog revealed the Empress of Ireland right in his course, broadside on. At the same instant he was seen by the liner. The shouts of the captains, the sudden frantic signals to their engine rooms, were like the cries of a child in the path of a charging bull. Full amidships the massive bow of the collier struck the passenger ship. Into her bulkheads, into her very heart the huge horn gored. With an angry toss the savage thing ripped open the liner's side. Ripped it open clear back to the propellers. Hung for a moment to its quivering victim, then fell sullenly off and dropped away in the fog. And that, it seems, was the one thing neither captain desired in that awful peril, and why the collier did not partially seal with her bulk the ruinous hole in the liner and so hold back the fatal flood, is the grave question that must be answered to the board of inquiry—and to the public; that, and matters of signals and speed. But the answer will avail little for ten hundred and twenty-seven souls.

Copyright, International News Service

ARRIVAL OF BODIES OF VICTIMS AT QUEBEC

Captain Kendall states that he shouted through the megaphone to the collier not to pull away. He heard no response. Captain Anderson states that he heard and answered, but that the liner was moving at such speed the boats drew apart and the wounded vessel was at once lost in the fog. At this point the accounts vary, and the public must suspend judgment until the governmental inquiry has determined the facts.

The wife of Captain Anderson, who was on board the collier, relates how she joined her husband on deck and heard and saw all that took place. After the impact, when the liner moved away, she thought that boat safe and the collier, badly damaged, deserted to sink. Wondering and afraid, she soon heard terrible cries, which increased in intensity. Presently the fate of the Empress of Ireland was clear. The surface of the water was seen to be covered with wreckage amidst which struggled hundreds of men and women, calling for help. Lifeboats from the liner were picking up these terrified survivors. Boats put out at once from the Storstad to aid in the rescue. The liner itself appeared, almost submerged and slanted until the port rail was nearly where the deck should have been. Passengers and members of the crew clung to this rail, waiting the final plunge of their ship. In the cabins and staterooms below, the waiting had ended for hundreds.

There had been desperate haste, but no panic, on the doomed ship. Captain Kendall and his crew had done what that sharp interval of time permitted to save their passengers. The captain was flung from the bridge by a lurch of the liner and badly injured. The engineers stuck to their posts until driven out by water. The wireless operator had sent out one swift appeal before his apparatus was wrecked. That one cry brought two government boats to the scene within twenty minutes of the crash. Four of the liner's lifeboats were gotten off, and some rafts, which saved many. The few passengers who had reached the sloping deck were only partially clothed: some had secured lifebelts. There was a disposition to help each other, even between strangers. There were tragic scenes as the awfulness of the fate which had overtaken them and their companions, who had not escaped from their rooms, was realized. Members of the crew below had scant chance.

A young husband who left his wife for a moment in order to get a lifebelt, found her gone when he returned and gave himself up to the water's consolation. But he was seized and drawn into a boat and saved. Later he was face to face with his wife, alive, on the deck of the collier. On that same deck lay a mother dead, with her dead babe clasped to her breast. A woman with many rings on her fingers fell sobbing in the arms of Captain Anderson's wife, who was caring for the rescued. A man with $2,000 in a belt about his waist waited to be identified among a hundred others, dead like himself. And still the overworked lifeboats pulled back and forth between the spot where the Empress of Ireland went down and the collier and two government tenders. And at every trip they left behind some who must wait the next chance to get in—if they could wait there in the icy water.

Finally the three vessels turned their prows toward land. At Father Point and at Rimouski the living and the dead were transferred to Canadian Pacific trains and boats to be taken to Quebec. The Storstad then proceeded to Montreal, where she was seized by officials of the Admiralty Court on a claim for $2,000,000 damages preferred by the Canadian Pacific Railway, owners of the Empress of Ireland. Later the funeral boats started on their bitter journey. A temporary morgue had been prepared on the Quebec pier, and there 209 coffins and pine boxes were laid in rows and piles to await identification of the bodies. The scenes on this pier were too pitiful to be told.

The record of the heavy fee collected by that dread pilot taken on by the Empress of Ireland at Quebec is as follows: Of 92 first cabin passengers, 56; of 256 second cabin, 209; of 718 in the third cabin, or steerage, 582; of the crew of 413—180. Of the 1,479 aboard 1,027 perished, 452 were saved. The proportion of women and children passengers who died was very large.

Within thirteen minutes after being struck by another boat, both presumably taking every precaution to avoid each other in a fog, this first class passenger ship went to the bottom with more than two-thirds of the persons aboard her. She was built to carry over two thousand souls across the Atlantic in all kinds of weather, but she sank in a river in sight of land just as quickly as it was physically possible for that much bulk to go under water, from a blow by a smaller craft, struck when both boats were on guard against collision. It is claimed that the inquiry into this fearful wreck will be thorough.

As stated in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD last week, many of the party of Salvationists perished, including the head of the Army in Canada, Commissioner David Rees and his family of five. The delegation numbered 150, and but 25 survived the wreck.

Statistics show over 27,000 lives lost in 10 marine accidents since the year 1850, including the wreck of the Empress of Ireland. The Titanic was lost April 14, 1912, with 1,595 lives, and the wreck in the St. Lawrence is the thirty-third since then, with a total of 3,231, in addition to the loss on the Titanic. There was recently concluded in London a prolonged conference between representatives of various countries on greater safety at sea. The recommendations of that congress are still matters of debate in those countries, including the United States—in the face of such figures!

SHOWING THE BOW OF THE STORSTAD AFTER THE COLLISION

AN AEROPLANE STARTLES JERUSALEM

ACCOUNTS have appeared in the press of the several disastrous attempts to reach Jerusalem by aeroplanes. The first was by French aviators, of which one, that piloted by General Bonnier, accompanied by M. Barnier, was successful, landing on the Plain of Rephaim, south of Jerusalem, on the last day of 1913 and leaving the next day for Cairo. The next was by Turkish airmen, who were no doubt stimulated by a money prize offered by the Jerusalem municipality to the first Turkish aëroplane which should succeed in effecting a landing in the Holy City. Two unsuccessful attempts followed in quick succession, the first machine falling from a great height near the Sea of Galilee, both of the airmen, who were Turkish officers, being killed. It was thought the accident was owing to the peculiar atmospheric conditions above the deep depression of the Jordan Valley. The dead airmen were taken on the train to Damascus, where they were buried with honors beside the hero Saladin. The second attempt came to grief at Jaffa, which it had reached safely, falling into the sea when starting for Jerusalem, where the governor and great crowds were awaiting its arrival. The pilot, Nouri Bey, was drowned, but his companion, Haki Bey, escaped.

THE TURKISH AEROPLANE WHOSE DRIVERS PERISHED

We have now to tell the story of another and entirely successful attempt, by Major Salim Bey and Captain Kemal Bey, who landed in their Blériot monoplane on the Plain of Rephaim on Friday the first of May. They, too, nearly perished in the effort to reach Jerusalem; for after getting as far on the way from Constantinople as Adramid near Smyrna, in Asia Minor, their motor ceased to work when they were among the clouds at an elevation of 1,600 meters, compelling them to make a volplane, which brought them down among trees, which destroyed their machine, though they escaped with their lives. The patriotic Mohammedans of Adramid at once contributed enough to replace the machine with a new one, that they might complete their flight to Jerusalem, and then on to Cairo. The new monoplane with the aviators came by steamer to Beirut, whence they flew southward along the coast to Jaffa and then eastward to Jerusalem, making the trip from Beirut in exactly three hours, arriving at 8.30 A.M. A strong east wind retarded them so that they landed with their fuel just about finished. They were received with great enthusiasm by the city officials, the military and the populace. On Saturday evening the mayor of Jaffa accompanied Kemal Bey for a short flight. The airmen received the prize of one hundred Turkish pounds, which had been offered. On the Monday morning they left for El Ariesch on the Egyptian frontier, reaching it in two hours as announced by telegram. There they were to leave for Port Said and Cairo. One photograph shows officers and crowds around the machine, looking towards the railway station and the German colony in Jerusalem, the road seen being the one running south to Bethlehem. Still another photograph shows the aeroplane in full flight as it was leaving, with the Mount of Olives in the distance with the Russian and German sanitarium towers. This was taken before sunrise.

THE SUCCESSFUL AEROPLANE LEAVING JERUSALEM

The people of Adramid gave each of the aviators a Koran that they might read from them and offer prayers for them in the Mosque of Omar here. The people of Jaffa have subscribed the money for buying an aeroplane which they will give to a Turkish airman who will come for it and fly from that city.

A correspondent, E. J. G., writes as follows about the aeroplane shown at the upper right-hand corner: "Inspired by the example of the French airmen, Védrines and Bonnier, a young Turkish officer, Fethi Bey, undertook an aerial trip from Constantinople to Egypt, stopping at several places in Syria en route. After visiting the town of Hums in Syria, he piloted his Blériot monoplane to Beirut, where he landed with his passenger, Sadik Bey. The arrival of these young officers always aroused great interest and enthusiasm among the population, elated at the passage of a Turkish aeroplane."

PREPARING FOR NEXT CUP RACE

ON MAY 26, Sir Thomas Lipton's yacht, Shamrock IV, with which he challenges the America's cup, was launched at Portsmouth Harbor just as Nelson's flagship fired a salute in honor of the queen's forty-seventh birthday. This newest product of the English designer Nicholson is creating much curiosity because of its radical departure from established models. It is described as ungraceful, stubby, and squatty, but declared to be the fastest yacht built, and a cheering multitude watched it take the water. On this side of the Atlantic three yachts will compete amongst themselves for the honor of defending the cup in September. They are the Resolute, owned by the so-called Flag Officers' Syndicate, the Vanitie, Alexander Smith Cochran, owner, and the Defiance, backed by the Tri-City Syndicate, Philadelphia, New York and Boston. Elimination contests between these yachts are now being held. All four boats are under 120 feet in length over all, the Shamrock IV being 110 feet. The latter is expected to start for America about the middle of July.

THE NEW BIRTH

BY

REV. J H. JOWETT, D.D.*

TEXT: "Ye must be born again." John 3: 7

THE words express a universal necessity. There is no exception to their imperative demand. The Master assigns no limits to the vast obligation. It is not—"except a Jew be born again," but "except a man," any man, every man; the great necessity is laid upon everybody. "Except a man be born again," except he be recreated in spirit, receiving new spiritual thought and motive, new moral taste and feeling, "he cannot see the kingdom of God."

The declaration was made to an inquirer, and enshrines the substantial answer that must be made to every inquirer. It expresses a universal need. Is it not then very strange that we have no record of our Master ever repeating the declaration? If the demand be absolute, if the necessity be general and universal, should we not expect that Jesus would meet all inquirers with the same profound and searching response—"Ye must be born again"? Yet in the story of the Christ the words are never repeated.

And yet in very truth he said the word to all. If he did not in every case make the explicit demand, "Ye must be born again," in every case he made a demand which necessitated the re-creation. You can express the same necessity in many different ways. I might go to the paper manufacturer and say to him: "Will you make this sheet of paper over again? Let it be re-created; let it be re-born." Or I might take the same piece of paper, and say to him: "Will you remove the watermark from the sheet?" But fundamentally the two requests are one and the same, for to remove a mark which is inherent in the very substance of the paper necessitates the re-creation of the sheet. The apparently smaller demand leads you up to the greater. I might go to the ironfounder and say: "Will you make this beam of iron over again? Let it be recreated; let it be re-born." Or I might take the same beam of iron and say to him: "Will you remove the flaw from the very center of this beam?" Again the two requests are essentially one and the same, for to remove a flaw which runs through the center of an iron beam necessitates the re-creation of the beam. The greater demand is implicated in the apparently smaller one.

The Lightning of a Word

And so it is in the ministry of Christ. He did not say to all inquirers just in so many words, "Ye must be born again," but he put his finger here and there upon flaws which were inherent in the very substance of the moral being, and by demanding their removal necessitated the renewal and rearrangement of the entire life. The Master never spoke of the new birth to any inquirer but Nicodemus, yet upon all inquirers he laid such searching obligation as drove them back to the necessity of this great and imperial charge: "Ye must be born again."

And now I want you to consider with me two instances where Christ holds conversation with inquirers about the life divine, and I shall ask you to observe by what different ways he leads the inquirers to feel the imperative necessity of a new birth.

It is hot blazing noontide, and the roads are thick with white dust. Jesus had been walking since early morning. He is now thirsty and tired, and he sits down to rest for a while by Jacob's well. He is alone. And while he rests, there cometh a woman to draw water. She came along very wearily, as though life to her was a very withered and tasteless thing. She was a woman whose heart was like your fire-grate at the dead of night. The fire was out. Affection had burnt itself dead. Her character was gone. She was a poor, tired, worn-out drudge. Jesus knew her just as he knows you and me. They got into conversation. I like to mark the exquisitely tender and delicate way in which our Master piloted the conversation. It began with a cup of cold water; it will end with the cup of salvation. It began with very shallow questionings; soon they will be out among the deep things of God. Woman and Saviour! They were both very weary in body, but Jesus is leading the conversation to the deeper weariness of the soul. Little by little he leads on softly until he begins to tell her of the water of life, of which if any one drinks he shall never thirst.

And now the woman becomes an inquirer. Her curiosity is stirred. She breaks into questionings. The Master goes on to tell her more about this strange water, until at last she interrupts him with the appeal, "Sir, give me this water." Now what will he say to her? She is asking for the water of life. What reply will he make? I expect that he will look at the woman with subduing tenderness, and that with unspeakable gentleness he will say, "Ye must be born again." But no, his answer is a strange one. See where he puts his finger. The woman said: "Give me this water," and Jesus replied: "Go, call thy . . . husband." "Thy husband," and she hung her head in burning shame. That word "husband" was like a flash of lightning in a dark night. The lightning makes every object visible in sharp and lurid outlines. That word "husband" lit up her past life; it made it live again; there it was before her, a wretched and ghastly history, right up to that very hour, and she was filled with shame and confusion.

And while it all lived before her, she began to apprehend what this Jesus suggested. That wretched history must be ended. Its dark heritage must be cut off. And she felt so helpless, so perfectly impotent. As she stood there before him with bowed head, she longed that she might be made over again. Do you not think that as her past life flashed before her, she felt that to be born again would be the only efficient remedy? And that was just the purpose of Jesus. Why did he say: "Go, call thy husband," when the woman asked for the water of life? Because Jesus cannot give the water of life merely for the asking for it. He can only give it for the thirsting for it. He wanted to change asking into thirsting. The woman's lips had asked for the water of life; Jesus wanted to make her soul thirst for it. And when he said "thy husband," the evil of her past life leaped upon her and her poor sin-burnt soul cried out: "I thirst."

I think that God deals with us in a similar way to-day. He sounds the deep notes of our life and awakes our conscience. He puts his finger here and there that he may make us feel the need of a new birth. He hears us making inquiries about the water of life, and he says: "I must turn their asking into thirsting," and he does it by revealing the evil substance out of which we are weaving our days. He creates and intensifies the consciousness of guilt, and so inflames our soul with thirst. The awakening sentence varies with the individual need. "Go, call thy husband!" "Go, fetch the ledger!" Fetch the volume which records thy business transactions. "Call thy husband!" and the word lit up the past with lurid fire. "Go, fetch thy ledger!" Could every man cheerily bring the book for the eye of Jesus to examine, or would the naming of the book recall occurrences which emphasize the necessity of a new birth?

Earth-Bonds

I can quite understand King Herod asking for the water of life, and asking for it out of an idle curiosity, but I think that the response of Jesus might well be in this wise: "Go, fetch John the Baptist!" and the naming of John would kindle the fire of hell in the heart of the guilty king, and arouse the secret cry: "I am tormented in this flame; I thirst!"

When Christ said to the woman, "Call thy husband," he opened the books of her past life. And he is always opening the books, laying his finger here and there, that as inquirers we may not ask for life lightly or indifferently, but with the very passion and agony of the soul. And so in this instance we have one example of the way in which Jesus dealt with seekers after life. He created the sense of a great need. He drove the inquirer back to the consciousness of the necessity expressed in the text, "Ye must be born again."

Let us now take another example. Jesus has just been fondling little children, lifting them in his arms, smiling favors upon them, and giving them back into their mothers' arms doubly blessed. While the Master was still caressing one of th little ones a young man came up in great eagerne and asked the Lord this grave and welcome que tion: "What shall I do to inherit eternal life Now what will the Master say? The question is plain one. I know what I expect him to say. think he will look down at the little one, with who golden hair he is playing, and say to the your man: "Thou must become like one of these. Th must become as a little child. Thou must be bo again." But he never mentioned the new birt And yet in some way he must have said it. If h did not say: "Be born again," he will make a d mand which will involve it. See then where th Master puts his finger: "Go sell what thou hast, ar give to the poor."

That was the strange way in which he met th inquiry after eternal life. "Go, sell what th hast." How can we explain it? Jesus knew ju the point where this young fellow was bound to th earth. He knew that earthliness stole into his n ture through his selfish conception of wealth. O spirits can touch the world at different points, ar wherever we touch it the contagion of worldline enters. I could touch a galvanic battery in mar ways. I could touch it with my fingers or with m feet, or, indeed, with any part of my body, but n matter where the contact is made the electricit will stream from the battery into my body and pe vade me through and through. And so it is wit my spirit, and its relation to that subtle powe which Jesus calls the world. My spirit may com into contact with the world in many ways, bu wherever the contact is made worldliness wi stream in and distribute itself throughout m whole being.

The Break-Up of Sin

Now, Jesus saw that this young man came int contact with worldliness at the point of his posse sions, and that, just here, a current of earthline streamed into his soul and became an evil leave The Master saw that in this man's conception o wealth there was an open gate for the evil one, an so when he came inquiring the way to eternal lif the pure and unworldly life, Jesus put his finge upon that open gate: "Close this gate; worldline is getting at thee here; sell what thou hast an give!"

Now do not let us narrow this parable by co fining its application to people who have great po sessions. We may transmit the contagion of smal pox quite as effectually by means of a cent as b means of a five-dollar gold piece; and this epidem of worldliness can stream into a life through sma possessions as well as through great. Let us neve forget that it was the man with the one talent wh because he had only one talent, thought that n responsibility attached to it, and thereby brough upon himself the anger and condemnation of Go So do not let us make this a question of the quantit of our possessions. It was not because he had grea possessions that Jesus said "sell and give"; it wa because he had not the right conception of his po sessions. I venture to think that if he had been in measurably poorer and had retained the same di position, Jesus would have spoken to him the sam commanding word: "Sell and give." "Give!" seems simple and rather irrelevant counsel to man inquiring for eternal life. Yes, but it suggest a moral revolution! It will necessitate a new birth The only big word in this young fellow's vocabular up to this time had been "get," and perhaps it correlative "hold." Now he is bidden to "give" You see the root of the matter. When Jesus saic "Sell what thou hast and give," he practically saic "Alter thy whole conception of things. Look upo thy possessions in quite a new light. Convert th sense of ownership into a sense of partnership. Ge new thoughts about thy possessions. Get new fee ings towards the poor. Get a new heart. Be bor again!"

When Jesus said, "Give!" he saw that the blesse and ultimate consequences to this young man woul be the total break-up of the supremacy of worldl ness and sin. And so the smaller command t "give" involved the cardinal necessity of the ne birth. "Ye must be born again!"

DAILY MEDITATION

FOR EVERY DAY IN THE YEAR, BASED ON THE WORDS OF JESUS

BY PROFESSOR W. H. T. DAU

SUNDAY, June 21. Matthew 6: 22-23: "The light of the body is the eye: if therefore thine eye be single, thy whole body shall be full of light. But if thine eye be evil, thy whole body shall be full of darkness." When the eye performs its function properly, it guides the foot in stepping, the hand in grasping, the body in sitting down; it makes the whole person move and act correctly in all situations. It is as if the light that is in the eye had passed into every limb. But if some object of absorbing interest has captivated the eye, the hands and feet move aimlessly, and any moment there may be a painful accident. The heart was made the seat of the affection of love: primarily the love of God, secondly the love of our fellow man. It is to direct the loving actions of man. But if riches appropriate the love which the heart is able to exercise, it ceases its ordained function of cherishing those things which are dear to God. As the fascinated eye no longer sees the things it ought to see, so the heart engrossed with thoughts of gain and profit fails to respond to motives of love and sympathy. There may be a pretense of love, as there is a pretense of seeing in an absent-minded person, but there is no soul in it, no reality, no sincerity.

MONDAY, June 22. Matthew 6: 24: "No man can serve two masters: for either he will hate the one, and love the other; or else he will hold to the one, and despise the other. Ye cannot serve God and mammon." Wealth may prove not only a disturbing but a destructive element in the heart of a person who wishes to serve God. No employer can afford to have his employee become distracted with thoughts that are foreign to the work assigned to him. A divided interest in our work destroys the good quality of our workmanship. An engineer who cannot conquer the craving for strong drink must not be entrusted with guiding a railroad train. A law student who will write poetry, while he should sit poring over his Blackstone, is a failure as a student. But these incongruities are trifles compared to the monstrosity of admitting into the heart, which belongs wholly to God, the idol mammon, the all-conquering desire for and the all-absorbing pursuit of riches. Mammon knows that when he has half a person's heart he has it all. God declares that when he is given only half a person's heart, he has no part of it. We speak of "the almighty dollar," and we have transferred an attribute of the great Creator to a creature, to indicate that there is such a thing as mammon-worship. Mournful indeed is it to contemplate Christians who imagine that they can serve God and mammon. Christ says: "Ye cannot."

TUESDAY, June 23. Luke 12: 22-23: "Therefore I say unto you: Take no thought for your life, what ye shall eat; neither for the body, what ye shall put on. The life is more than meat, and the body is more than raiment." God wants men to work with their own hands, both that they may eat their own bread and that they may have to give to the needy. God is angry at the man who will not provide for those of his own household, and he excludes the man who will not work from the charity of his believers. But the work of believers must be free from anxious and distracting care. The perplexing questions concerning food and raiment so often asked in a spirit of discontent, distrust and doubt, are out of place among the followers of Christ, because they will not serve mammon, and to yield to worry about their livelihood would be one form of serving mammon. Mammon-worship in most instances has started with anxious cares about the means of support. Christ here reminds his followers that God, who has given them the greater, the life and the body, will also provide the lesser, the victuals and garments. It is understood, of course, that when Christians cultivate a care-free spirit they are content with such things as they have and do not covet better food and clothes than they can afford.

WEDNESDAY, June 24. Luke 12: 24: "Consider the ravens: for they neither sow nor reap; which neither have storehouse nor barn: and God feedeth them: how much more are ye better than the fowls?" God has made many living creatures and has differently endowed them, but they are all dependent upon him. Though gifted with the highest creature intelligence, man is no exception to the rule. When man forgets that he feeds out of the same hand with the beasts of the field, the fishes in the sea, and the birds of the air, God calls in the dumb animals to teach man a needed lesson. The ravens, as common in Palestine as the sparrows in our streets, are fed by God, though they own no landed estates that yield them their substance and have no magazines in which their food is stored. Man has both. He has been commanded to eat his bread in the sweat of his face, and his daily routine of labor is made to suit the sequence of the seasons, seed-time and harvest, cold and heat, summer and winter. Moreover, he is taught the virtues of thrift, economy, and frugal habits. But all these things are merely agencies by which the providence of God chooses to sustain him. Man must not make them his gods, but look beyond the earthly means of his support to the heavenly Provider, who "openeth his hand and satisfieth the desire of every living thing." On Castle Coburg, during the critical days of the Augsburg Diet in 1530, Luther derived great comfort from observing the care-free habits of a little bird.

THURSDAY, June 25. Luke 12: 25-26: "And which of you with taking thought can add to his stature one cubit? If ye then be not able to do that which is least, why take ye thought for the rest?" The word rendered "stature" in our text means "age," and the obvious sense is that it is impossible for any person to prolong his life by anxious care. To gain time is often considered quite an item in the achievement of our purpose. A few more years, or months, or days, or even hours are often an important factor in our calculations. We figure out that if this or that contingency arises we need so much time to meet it. What is the use of all our reckoning with chances? We always rise dazed and disheartened from our problems, for the parts of the equation never square so as to give us the unknown quantity. Not the least measure can we add to our allotted span of life. Why, then, take thought for the rest? The perception of our incapacity in the smallest matters ought to have a deterring effect on us. It ought to drive us away from the sphinx-like god of chance who never answers our questions and whom all who worship him worship ignorantly, to the all-wise and good Father of all, in whom we live, and move, and have our being. To the great Author of our existence we may safely entrust the care for our subsistence.

FRIDAY, June 26. Luke 12: 27-28: "Consider the lilies, how they grow: they toil not, they spin not; and yet I say unto you, that Solomon in all his glory was not arrayed like one of these. If then God so clothe the grass, which is to-day in the field, and to-morrow is cast into the oven; how much more will he clothe you, O ye of little faith?" God is not only kind but lavish in kindness to his creatures. His munificence cannot be rivaled even by a rich and luxury-loving king like Solomon. The bountiful God has fairly littered our fields and forests with wonders of beauty in the form of innumerable flowers. There are exquisite formations of stems, leaves, petals, and a riot of color, from the most delicate hue to the deepest stain. It is a charming sight to behold a field of lilies. And now what is the most beautiful lily but grass of the field that withers in a few days? Is not its glory a waste? No, we thank God for the lilies, especially in moments of little faith, not only because of the delight which their short-lived splendor affords to the eyes, but because of the comforting assurance which their chaste beauty conveys to our troubled, careworn souls. They tell us that the God who does so much for a perishable halm in our meadows will know how to clothe our bodies here, which he will one day robe in the glory of his Son's body.

SATURDAY, June 27. Luke 12: 29:30: "And seek not ye what ye shall eat, or what ye shall drink, neither be ye of doubtful mind. For all these things do the nations of the world seek after: and your Father knoweth that ye have need of these things." Anxious cares about the wherewithals of our subsistence argue the presence of distrust in our heart. The anxious mind is full of doubt. Doubt feeds care, and doubt it is that finds expression in those troubled questions about food and clothing. To discover such doubts in the minds of men to whom the fatherly providence of God is a hidden truth, is not surprising. The heathen surrounds himself with a bewildering multitude of deities, to each of whom his fancy assigns special duties. But he does not trust any one of them. He relies, after all, on his own intelligence, foresight, strength and skill, and when he observes that these fail him, or are about to fail him, it is reasonable that he should fret and worry. But if a child of the Father in heaven, by consideration of his earthly wants and the difficulty of meeting them, allows himself to be carried away into doubt and despondency, he resigns his confidence in the omniscient and wise care of God, and becomes at heart a godless worldling. Temporal cares have a paganizing effect on Christians. To foster them is to stifle faith.

GOSPEL BREVITIES FROM MANY POINTS

—EVANGELIST HENRY OSTROM has conducted five months' campaign in cities around San Francisco Bay, a remarkable outpouring of God's grace being manifest. Over 600 young men and women pledged themselves to Gospel work in addition to many church members reclaimed and a host of conversions. The campaign included Vallejo, Napa, Stockton, Berkeley and Palo Alto.

—EVANGELISTS OSCAR LOWRY and George Doody have been in Brainerd, Minn., their message winning many hundreds to Christ. The noon shop meeting was a great factor in interesting the railroad men. Bible classes were organized, a Y. W. C. A. established, and scores of family altars set up as a result of the five weeks' campaign.

—TWENTY THOUSAND CONVERSIONS are claimed for the seven weeks' campaign conducted by Evangelist Billy Sunday in Scranton, Pa. The characteristic effects of his preaching marked the packed meetings, and churches for miles around have reported greatly stimulated interest and hugely increased memberships, multitudes of former church-goers renewing their connection. A delegation of two hundred clergymen, representing twenty-seven denominations, went to Scranton from Philadelphia for two days of the campaign, and witnessed the professions of 576 persons in one evening who pledged themselves to the Christian life. The tabernacle seated 9,500.

—THE IDEA THAT only a redeemed "down-and-out" will talk Christianity to a crowd on the street is receiving its death blow this summer in the class of speakers which the National Bible Institute is presenting at its outdoor services in various crowded parts of the city of New York. Men of business training and achievements mount the little platform by the curbstone to proclaim the Gospel message. At Madison Square crowds gather every day to listen to such men as Mr. Hugh Munro, Mr. J. A. Richards, Mr. Don O. Shelton, and other Christian laymen. Outdoor meetings are held noon and evening at Madison Square, Union Square, Battery Place, Broadway and Forty-fifth Street, Lexington Avenue and Upper Third Avenue, and at 101 Manhattan Street; while indoor services are held nightly at the four Gospel halls of the institute, located in densely populated sections. Some young college men have been added to the staff this spring, among them being Mr. J. S. Kennard, Jr., of Princeton Theological Seminary, and Mr. D. R. Wiley, son of Dr. David G. Wiley, secretary of the Church Erection Society of the Presbyterian Church.

The "Empress of Ireland"

WAS it the river or the sea? The mighty river rolling out; the ocean tides rolling in; a great ship bearing its freight of life out to the grim sea; a smaller craft beating its way in from the ocean waves, laden with dead fuel to be kindled into life in the fires of Canada's homes and factories. A fog; a misunderstanding; an error! A crash; a shuddering, ghastly tear in hull and hold and keel; then cries, prayers, struggles, darkness—death. Death to a thousand souls!

It is too early now to do anything but grieve. Most sharply do the people of Christ's fold grieve for the one hundred and twenty-five brave Salvationists, some of them leaders whom it will be impossible soon to replace, who met death in the waters. But for all we grieve—the brave men and tender women and little children; for the homes made desolate and the waiting hearts that bleed.

But out of it all one hope arises. As the Titanic sacrifice two years ago has brought about new safeguards at sea, so the loss of the Empress of Ireland will lead to other, and perhaps hitherto unthought-of, reforms. Up to the present, it appears that the error may have arisen through uncertainty as to whether the signals being given were fog signals or signals used in clear weather—since the fog was light. Such misunderstandings must forevermore be made impossible. And still higher standards of energetic, painstaking, unremitting caution and watchfulness must be set.

If millions of lives shall be made safer at sea because of this new and grievous horror, it may be said of those who perished as it was said long ago of One who laid down his life: "They saved others, themselves they could not save."

Another War Cloud

FOLLOWING the shock of horror felt by the civilized world upon the publication of the Carnegie Peace Foundation Balkan Commission report, comes the still greater shock of hearing that the report itself, undertaken in the interests of peace, may lead to another war. The Greeks are enraged at the report, which some of their leaders declare to be prejudiced and untrue.

But seriously as the report reflects upon the Greeks, the worst possible way to attempt to prove their innocence would be to go to war again. That would prove nothing except that they still hate the Bulgarians, which would do nothing to restore an iota of their nation's prestige or honor.

Let Greece prove her integrity by standing true now to the interests of peace and showing a desire to bring the perennial Balkan strifes to an amicable and actual end.

It would be most unfortunate if the present negotiations for the purchase by Greece of two second-hand battleships from the American Government should be consummated. It is bad enough that in the interests of peace an American organization has unwittingly fanned the smoldering fires of war. It would be worse, if, in the interests of trade, we furnish an angered nation with two war vessels. Rather than this we should desire to find a way of doing something definite, positive and vigorous to prevent another Balkan outbreak.

But what America, perhaps, cannot do, Europe can. The European Powers can and must make another Balkan war impossible. The American press, at least, is free to urge this obligation upon the States of Europe. The world is sick of blood. Let the prayers of Christian people arise mightily, on both sides of the Atlantic, that the hell of war shall not break forth again in these troubled lands.

Right Paths and Wrong

"ASK for the old paths," wrote the prophet, "where is the good way, and walk therein." Sound advice for that age and generation and equally sound to-day. The old paths! What are they? If we recognize the existence of certain great truths and fixed principles, unchangeable by time or circumstance, then the road that leads to the right understanding and application of these is the path we must seek. Modern sociology has declared that the most grievous wrong of which a man can be guilty is that of misleading the multitudes who look up to him for counsel and direction. Yet, in the face of all the signposts which experience has erected as guides to the old paths of truth and righteousness, we find men, who ought to be true leaders, seeking out for themselves and others paths that are full of brambles and thorns and which lead to the trackless wilderness.

We find reformers who teach and practice the doctrines of riot and disorder; who would elevate society by first tearing it up by the roots; who would establish justice by first breaking the law into fragments; who, to produce social order, sow the seeds of social strife. As well might they sow dragons' teeth and look for a crop of roses and violets. Doing evil that good may come is a radical fallacy—an error which has cost the world much undeserved suffering. Preachers, writers, and others, who teach the philosophy of discontent, are sowing the wind and must reap the whirlwind. The "old path" is the only safe and tried one—the path of reason and righteousness.

He must indeed be blind who cannot see that the whole world is tending slowly, but none the less surely, toward the realization of the doctrines of Jesus, which supply the true basis of civic, national and international regeneration. Christianity can right the wrongs of the world, redeem society, cure human selfishness and give us a world of love and justice. That is the program of the Kingdom—nothing less; and any minister who does not hold Christianity as equal to the task, makes confession of his own unbelief.

Wheat Crop Prospects

"GRANT County, Oklahoma," writes Mr. H. L. Boyle, of Wahita, a subscriber of this paper, in a cheerful note, "has the promise of the largest crop of wheat it has ever had. We shall need about one thousand more men than we have to take care of it. We shall be cutting wheat by June 16." This was written two weeks ago. Since then, the Agricultural Department in Washington has been receiving its reports of the crop outlook, and on June 2 it sent out the astonishing news that Oklahoma, Kansas and Missouri wheat raisers will need at least 82,000 more men to help harvest the crop in those States. Secretary Wilson of the United States Labor Bureau will co-operate with the farmers in getting any army of harvesters at $2 to $3.50 per day on a three months' engagement; and the group of contiguous States will do all they can to supply the workers. Our hearty congratulations to the farmers of Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Missouri, Oklahoma and Kansas, where wheat is king this year. This is the kind of news that makes for national prosperity and gives the calamity-howler food for reflection. In 1912, the farmers of the Northwest harvested the biggest spring wheat yield ever known—330,000,000 bushels. This season's acreage is much larger than that of two years ago, and the yield will far exceed the combined average of winter and spring wheat in any previous year. Should weather conditions continue favorable, anywhere from 700,000,000 to 1,000,000,000 bushels of both crops may be harvested. Bumper crops in the past have always set the ball of prosperity rolling.

A Doubter Answered

FROM a reader in LeRoy, Mich., we have received a letter in which the writer expresses serious doubts as to the authenticity of the Babylonian tablets. She says:

"The majority of your readers know nothing of the value of archeological treasures, and will therefore believe you; but you are merely preying upon their ignorance, and all the more culpable, since what you offer is impossible."

Our correspondent takes a very natural view of the matter and is unquestionably sincere in her supposition that the Babylonian tablets which have come into the possession of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD cannot be genuine, because the value of genuine tablets from Babylonia, over 4,000 years old, is inestimable!

Now, as her doubt may be shared by others who have not fully considered all the facts in the case, we take this opportunity of stating that the editors of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD personally visited the Babylonian Department of Yale University, saw the curator, looked over the collection of tablets, all of assured authenticity, and took every means of informing ourselves on the subject. Convinced from so high an authority of the genuineness of the tablets ourselves, we have no hesitation in repeating here and now that we regard them as being precisely as represented to us.

Further, we are willing that any reader who becomes the possessor through this journal of one of the Babylonian tablets should make the fullest inquiry of some recognized authority in Assyriology, and if, after doing so, the reader is still unconvinced, we will then agree to return the subscription and cancel it on our books.

We are willing to do this because of our own personal conviction of the genuineness of the tablets, of the reliability of the source from which we have obtained them, and of the high reputation and eminent archeological standing of every one of the authorities who have actively co-operated with us in this matter and whose writings and investigations are known in both Europe and America.

A Neglected Duty

VICE-PRESIDENT MARSHALL, speaking at a church gathering in Washington, D. C., on March 18, referred to the growing neglect of the religious training of American childhood. He said:

> There is this thing wrong in many of the churches, that because church and state are separate and the state makes the schools, the church feels itself absolved from any duty in the direction of education of youth.
> The state is permitted to mold children from the age of six up through the time when they are going through colleges where many of the professors are agnostics and atheists. But now the church is awakening to the fact that children should be reared in the way of Christian faith from the nursery upward. I believe that there is in this country to-day a great spiritual awakening, and the church is beginning to see that it has turned over entirely too many of its functions to the state.

The Vice-President could hardly have rendered a better service to the cause of religion than he has done in emphasizing the lack of spiritual training among the young. He has pointed out a duty to which the Protestant Church in America must address itself in the immediate future. All of its spiritual campaigns for adults will not compensate for the losses sustained through the decline of the family altar and the absence of any adequate systematic religious training for children. There are multitudes of children of Protestant parents outside of the Sunday school for whose spiritual welfare the church is responsible! A few denominations are already active, and are reaching childhood through church parish schools and other means. We need a general energizing of the whole Christian Church in behalf of the neglected children.

Arctic Ship "Karluk" Lost

ON SEPTEMBER 20, 1913, Commander Vilhjalmar Stefansson of the Canadian Government's Arctic exploring expedition stepped off the flagship Karluk, fifteen miles from the Colville River, and the ship with Captain Robert A. Bartlett and twenty-three men aboard went off without him and drifted away into the mists of uncertainty. The fate of the ship has just been learned by the following message, sent by Captain Bartlett from Alaska:

I sent the men to the shelter house. I remained on the ship until it sank in thirty-eight fathoms of water at 4.30 o'clock on the afternoon of January 11. We watched the final plunge with the blue ensign at her main topmast cutting the water as she disappeared beneath. We had two houses on the ice—one of snow, the other built of boxes covered with sails. All the mattresses had been saved from the ship, and every man Jack had a good bed of skins and blankets. There was a stove in each house and plenty of coal to keep things warm. We had a very comfortably constructed gallery, with a large stove, regular meals and good food.

Captain Bartlett then goes on to tell how he sent the men to Wrangel Island and then made the trip five hundred miles over the ice, most of his dogs perishing on the journey, and reached the Siberian coast, where he was picked up and brought to St. Michael, Alaska. The polar sea is sullen, and its ice is merciless, but human ingenuity and courage will continue to dare them, dangerous and deadly as they are. Man has been made master of nature, and each year he is leaving fewer secrets of the earth or the sea. A brave man, fighting moral as well as physical dangers, makes this mention of his experience on the sea:

Thrice was I beaten with rods, once was I stoned, thrice I suffered shipwreck, a night and a day I have been in the deep. (II Cor. 11: 25.)

Claims Seeing by Electricity

ELECTRICAL experts have for several years been promising an invention by which people could see by electricity; could see the image of the person spoken to on the telephone a thousand miles away. At a meeting of the Institute of Automobile Engineers the other day in London, Dr. A. M. Low gave a demonstration, he claims for the first time in public, with an apparatus he has invented for seeing by electricity. He claims that it is possible for persons using a telephone to see each other at the same time. He said: "In time, say fifty years from now, people sitting in a room in London will be able to witness a scene taking place on the deck of a steamer in mid-Atlantic." This new idea of seeing by electricity suggests these spiritual eyes and increased vision in the psalmist's words:

Open thou mine eyes, that I may behold wondrous things out of thy law. (Ps. 119: 18.)

Boy's Clubfeet Made Over

AMONG the wonders of the scientific world are the triumphs of modern orthopedic surgery. A case which looks little short of the miraculous is reported from the Emergency Hospital, Washington. William Averhill, a five-year-old boy from near Oxford, N. C., was taken to the hospital with clubfeet. His feet were turned inside and under, and his gait was slow and laborious, really more a shuffle than a step. He was put on the table, and the surgeon went to work on one foot, then on the other, cutting ligaments, separating tendons and readjusting little bones, and all but amputating the child's feet. Then the members were readjusted, given the necessary antiseptic treatment and skillfully wrapped in plaster of Paris casts extending to the knees. About three weeks ago, a little less than five weeks after the operation, the plaster cases were removed, and something akin to a miracle had been wrought. Two little feet, once considered hopelessly deformed, had been transformed into normal organs, in which practically no trace of their former deformity was left except the scars made by the surgeon's knife. It is under the intellectual enlightenment and golden civilization of the Christ, who came into our world to do what he did immediately by divine power, that the blind are made to see and the lame to walk. Jesus sent this word by John's disciples:

The blind receive their sight, and the lame walk, the lepers are cleansed, and the deaf hear. (Matt. 11: 5.)

$1,400,000 for Education

AT THE spring meeting of the General Education Board $1,400,000 were apportioned. Five hundred thousand went to the Medical School of Yale. The board had previously given the Medical College of Johns Hopkins University $1,500,000, and to that of the Washington University $750,000. In conformity with its previous policy of making gifts to increase the endowment and extend the usefulness of promising institutions in various parts of the country, the following appropriations were made: Stevens Institute of Technology, $250,000; Elmira, Hendrix and Wells Colleges, $100,000; Washington and Lee University, $125,000; Woffords College, $33,000. Increased appropriations were made for work in secondary education in the South. Twenty-five thousand dollars was voted to Hampton Institute, $10,000 to Tuskegee, and $10,000 to Spellman Seminary, Atlanta. These great gifts to education recall the words:

He that keepeth understanding shall find good. (Prov. 19: 8.)

MRS. PANKHURST AGAIN UNDER ARREST

SUFFRAGETTES to the number of several hundred lately endeavored to break through a cordon of police and soldiers surrounding Buckingham Palace, London, with the object of presenting a petition to King George. As a result, a fierce fight took place, and finally the police used truncheons on the women, many of whom were badly injured. Many of the women were armed with Indian clubs, which they used vigorously. Mrs. Pankhurst, the suffragette leader, was put under arrest, and was torn shrieking away from the gates of the palace. Mrs. Pankhurst has led the female suffrage movement in England with bad judgment and with worse spirit. If she had undertaken to injure the cause she espouses, she could not have rendered better service than to prompt or countenance the smashing of windows, breaking down doors, burning buildings, mutilating pictures and exploding bombs with fatal results. Of this militant suffragette leader and her followers it can be said: "Therefore pride compasseth them about as a chain; violence covereth them as a garment." (Ps. 73: 6.)

The World's Largest Telescope

A SEVENTY-TWO inch reflecting telescope, ordered by the Dominion of Canada recently, is to be installed on the summit of Little Saanich Mountain, within seven miles of Victoria, B. C. The instrument will be the largest in the world and with the necessary buildings, site and general equipment, will cost $200,000. Dr. J. S. Plaskett, astronomer of the Department of the Interior at Ottawa, spent a year traveling through western Canada to find a location for the observatory where the atmospheric conditions would be most friendly to astronomical observations. The telescope has often been justly employed by writers and speakers as the symbol of faith by which the soul of man can see unseen things and bring into view world on world of highest thought, beauty and life. In that wonderful chapter of faith, the apostle thus refers to it:

By faith he forsook Egypt, not fearing the wrath of the king: for he endured, as seeing him who is invisible. (Heb. 11: 27.)

Leprosy Cases in America

IT IS likely that our country, being in such close communication with all nations of the earth, has lurking away in some unclean corner well-nigh every disease that flesh is heir to, and that there are cases of leprosy here and there throughout the country, although our National and State Boards of Health are quite vigilant, and protect the people generally against such diseases. There are two cases of leprosy just reported. Vernon D. Bennett, an inmate of the Soldiers' Home at West Allis, Wis., was found to be a leper, and volunteers were called for to nurse him. Ten veterans of the Civil War came, every one gladly offering to perform that service. All but one were over seventy years of age, too old to care properly for the afflicted one. Fred W. Curtenious, who served through the Spanish War as Bennett did, was accepted. The second leprosy case just reported is Mrs. Frances Amato, thirty-five years old, one of the six sufferers in the leper colony on Blackwell's Island, who died the other morning. Leprosy, in olden times, was so loathsome and deadly that it is used as the type of sin. Christ illustrated his divine prerogative by curing the leper when all human help failed.

And Jesus put forth his hand, and touched him, saying, I will; be thou clean. And immediately his leprosy was cleansed. (Matt. 8: 3.)

Labor Exemption Adopted

WITH a single exception, every one of the 208 members of the House of Representatives who were present at the session on June 1 voted to insert in the Clayton Anti-Trust Bill the amendment agreed upon by the Administration and organized labor, providing in effect that no labor or farmers' organization should be held to be a combination or conspiracy in restraint of trade. Before the vote was taken, there was great eagerness among the men of all parties to get into the Congressional Record, for the vote itself was not to be recorded. Among the short speeches, Representative Lewis of Maryland said: "This bill merely puts the American workman where the British subject was placed by Parliament in 1906." Representative Moore of Pennsylvania, who had not voted, being absent, denounced the measure as class legislation, and his colleagues for passing it in terror of labor leaders in the galleries. Amidst all the friction, we may yet arrive at the right solution of the great labor problem in the interest of justice to all parties concerned and the public welfare—closer to the standard of Christ's measurement thus expressed:

Therefore all things whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so to them; for this is the law and the prophets. (Matt. 7: 12.)

GENERAL ASSEMBLY OF

THE one hundred and twenty-sixth annual session of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church in the United States of America was in many respects a notable gathering. First in order was the setting. The sessions were held in the magnificent Fourth Presbyterian Church, Chicago, lately dedicated at a cost of almost $1,000,000, the finest Presbyterian church building in America. Dr. John Timothy Stone, the pastor, was also the retiring moderator, and preached the opening sermon from the text: "Ye shall receive power after that the Holy Ghost is come upon you." In the afternoon the election of a new moderator resulted in the unanimous choice of Rev. Maitland Alexander, D.D., pastor of the First Presbyterian Church of Pittsburg, no other nominee being put up against him, which showed on the very start the feeling of unanimity and accord which characterized every session of the Assembly.

The second consideration was the historic denomination itself, which this Assembly represents. The first General Assembly of the church was held in 1789, and its report showed, after almost a century of labor, only 177 ministers, 431 congregations, and 18,000 communicants, with contributions totaling only $852 for missionary and benevolent work; while last year the report showed 9,410 ministers, 10,090 churches, 1,415,872 communicants. Certainly a grand advance for the Kingdom.

The third consideration is the work of the Assembly and its various decisions as to work and polity. Chief among these are the Home and Foreign Mission reports, the reports on Evangelism, Temperance, Divorce and the White Slave Traffic. The report of the Board of Home Missions was anxiously awaited, as there had been much feeling for two years concerning the board's internal policies, and many expected a great "fight" on the subject; but none materialized, as Dr. Stevenson, the chairman of the standing committee, outlined a plan whereby all the various factions were brought into harmonious accord. Under this new plan there will be three secretaries instead of one, Dr. Charles L. Thompson, the present veteran secretary of sixteen years' standing, resigning June 1, after a service that has stirred the deepest admiration of the church, and which gained for him a magnificent ovation when his name was mentioned by the chairman.

There will be four general departments under the new plan: (1) Executive, (2) Church Extension, (3) Immigration and Social Service, (4) Financial Administration. The headquarters will still be in New York, but in addition, a field office will also be opened somewhere in the Middle West, [illegible] touch with Western fields.

The Foreign Mission Report was made by [illegible] Nicolls of St. Louis, the oldest living ex-mo[illegible] the General Assembly. In order to show t[illegible] comity and unity of spirit throughout all [illegible] denominations, the board's report showed [illegible] what the Presbyterians had done, but also [illegible] various Protestant denominations of the v[illegible] accomplished unitedly for the spread of Chr[illegible] dom; and as THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is inter[illegible] tional, your correspondent thinks it well to [illegible] aggregate figures rather than those referri[illegible] Presbyterians alone. They are significant a[illegible] the advance that church unity is making:

"Protestant missionary enterprise now [illegible] 24,092 foreign missionaries, 111,982 native [illegible] 2,644,170 adult communicants (in full memb[illegible] Christian community of 6,837,736, 86 coll[illegible] universities, 522 normal and theological col[illegible] medical colleges, 98 training schools for nur[illegible] boarding and high schools, 292 industrial [illegible] schools, 115 kindergartens, 30,185 elemen[illegible] village schools, 576 hospitals and 1,077 dis[illegible] 271 orphanages, 11 leper asylums, 21 home [illegible] tainted children of lepers, 25 institutions for [illegible]

THE WAR AND MISSIONS IN MEXICO

BY REV. LEON B. SALMANS, M.D.

WAR is, in some respects, always unfavorable to the prosecution of Christian labors. At least in two respects it has been unfavorable in Mexico. For three and a half years we have been harmed in our efforts to propagate the Gospel in Mexico by a general public excitement which not only diverted attention from religious subjects, but also caused some to fall away and produced financial stringency.

Not only many laymen ceased to attend our services, but some preachers disappeared. Some of our laymen went into the army and several preachers became revolutionary leaders. It was affirmed, during the beginning of the war, that very few Protestants had turned revolutionists in proportion to their number. But later, they have evidently increased among the loyal voluntary warriors, though not among those pressed into service, for the manifest reason that those pressed into the service could not easily be Protestants, because as soon as they become converted they become useful members of society; whereas those pressed into the army are usually the criminals, the idle and the useless members of society. Protestants hold a high position in life's activities as to independent thinking, clean living and personal initiative. Of late, in all that part of the country where I have been able to observe, they have been allied almost wholly with the constituted government and not with the rebels. Some of the Protestant preachers have come to be generals; some were executed and very few are rebels. Unfortunately, a large proportion of our volunteers have fallen in battle or otherwise. All this has tended to diminish the size of our congregations.

As the greatly increased financial prosperity of Mexico was due in large part to the rapidly growing establishment of modern industries on a large scale by foreign capital invested under the leadership of foreign financiers, engineers and skilled workmen —enterprises that require public peace and international confidence for their successful prosecution—they suffered greatly from the very beginning of the war, while at the last hour they simply collapsed, when Vera Cruz was attacked, and the last of the Americans were sent out of the country into hiding. Times have grown financially harder and harder and missionary work has suffered accordingly.

While some of our missionary financial interests have suffered, this seems not to have been the case in every respect. For instance, our girls' boarding schools have shown a tendency to greatly increase in their financial income. We have found many instances in which people sent their daughters as boarding pupils to our schools because they felt that they were safer there than elsewhere.

Now that all missionaries have been driven out of the country or into hiding, much of the work has been greatly disturbed or closed up. The larger schools have been closed in most cases, while in a few instances they have ceased to be boarding schools and have continued in the hands of the native teachers as day schools.

The churches, however, have continued open under the pastoral direction of Mexican preachers. In most places much of the support of these pastors was coming from the congregations themselves. Insomuch as the support of these preachers has depended upon appropriations of money from the missionary societies or upon the influence or help of the missionaries themselves, the pastors are going to suffer. But it is not to be believed that these preachers will in many cases abandon their work because of the temporary redu[illegible] the means of support.

The owed 93,000 added on confession of faith t the year, a much larger record than has rted at any preceding Assembly. With such the Presbyterians feel they have every reason esh courage and go forward.

rance also stirred up a great interest, and one st drastic actions ever taken by any church ion was passed when the Assembly voted y Presbyterian, whether clerical or lay mem- ld resign from any club selling intoxicating nd no member in the future should join him- y club selling the same. The Assembly also of the Hobson and Sheppard bills now n Congress for nation-wide prohibition, and nended Secretary Daniels for barring liquor navy. Still further, it endorsed the Anti- eague, the Women's Christian Temperance e National Temperance Union and "all other societies having for their object the destruction of the liquor traffic."

Uniform divorce laws, more attention by parents to the subject of the white slave traffic and to the education of their children as one safeguard against the evil, and greater care on the part of women to matters of dress, dancing and harmful amusements and entertainments were subjects that received the Assembly's emphatic approval.

WILLIAM CARTER, D.D.,
Special Correspondent.

ONE of the most interesting episodes of the Presbyterian General Assembly in Chicago occurred on May 29, when a strong plea was made in behalf of lifting the ban against "uncommercialized" games and sports on Sunday. The matter came up during the discussion of the report of the Committee on Sabbath Observance.

The Rev. Thomas W. Smith of New York and the Rev. Henry L. Brown of Chicago pleaded that workingmen should have an opportunity to seek recreation on Sunday, and vainly sought to amend the restriction against "all sports and games," substituting "commercialized" for the word "all." The report, which also disapproved of all unnecessary travel and Sunday excursions, was adopted after a spirited debate. The adoption of the report was regarded as a victory for the conservative wing of the Assembly. The report also condemned the Sunday newspaper and advocated Saturday half-holidays.

The General Assembly of the Southern Presbyterian Church at Kansas City, Mo., on May 25 adopted the following resolution, after several speeches had been delivered sharply criticizing the Roman Catholic Church:

"The General Assembly views with serious concern the growth and pernicious activity of that powerful politico-religious organization known as the Church of Rome, which is and always has been a menace or a blight to civil and religious liberty of every kind wherever it has obtained a foothold; it views with serious concern the dangerous apathy pervading all classes of Protestants in this country touching this menace."

A resolution was adopted setting forth that "our churches should always encourage voluntary organizations for the betterment of social conditions, and urge their members to co-operate in them." Also resolutions urging revival of family worship, and favoring national prohibition of the liquor traffic.

n't you a little sick yourself?" asked Mrs. Morrison, wincing at the thrust and yet resolved to win the boy, if possible.

"Me? Not a bit. If there was any boy here my size I could lick him just as easy! I'd show you," answered Olaf boastfully.

"I didn't mean sick that way, my boy. Aren't you sick of being such a"—the woman saw the swift alteration of the boy's countenance—"of being such a lonely little boy?" she asked quietly, disarming his resentment by the turn of her question.

She had changed her request and comment to something far removed from what it had been in her mind to say. The youngster, who had expected something quite different, was visibly touched.

"I ain't lonely. All the men like me, or they used to before your girls came," was the swift self-revealing answer.

"That's just it," said the woman; "they like my little girls because they are clean and sweet and—"

"I was clean and sweet once, too," said the boy passionately. "My mother died and then my father, and—but I was a good boy even when I had to sell papers on the street. I said my prayers 'most every night, and I went to the mission, and when they sent me out here I didn't drink with them at first, but Parson Bill made me, and now, and now—"

A sense of what he was came into his little soul and he shuddered and hid his face in his hands, all his bravado vanished utterly.

There be thoughts in childish hearts that lie too deep for words. Such was the case with little Olaf. His voice faltered—died away. Presently he dropped his hands and looked at the woman. He saw womanly sympathy and tenderness in her eyes — those touches of love without which we and the world would cease to be.

Little Olaf was fresher from contact with womankind than the miners. He had missed the feminine touch—the mother touch—more than they. He had longed for it—craved it. And now he felt it again. The woman stepped closer to him. He did not want to run away now. She put her arm around his trembling shoulders; she bent and kissed him on the forehead. The boy made an involuntary movement to extricate himself, but found that the encircling arm refused to give way. Then he threw himself on her breast in a passion of sobs. The woman sat down on the log which served as a bench, and drew the boy down by her. She pressed his tousled little head against her breast and patted and soothed him and whispered things as mothers have ever done. This was no child of hers save in the sense that every child is the child of every true woman. And to her own son, had God given her one, she could not have been kinder, more tender, more loving.

Olaf felt strangely comforted, and yet the inherent honesty of his soul shone forth. He could not accept that sympathy or enjoy that sweet solace under false pretenses. God was smiling on him, giving him another chance through this woman, and only the truth would serve now. If it deprived him of the comfort of her presence he had to blurt it out.

"You hadn't ought to treat me this way," sobbed the lad. "I've been such a bad boy. I've got drunk and swore, and I said nasty things and I threw stones at your dog and scared your little girls, and—"

"I know, I know," said the woman, "but you're going to be a good little boy now, God helping you—Christ's faithful soldier and servant until your life's end, aren't you?"

"I don't know whether I can be. I don't know whether he — anybody would care for a boy like me."

SAVED TO SERVE*

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON BY DR. AND MRS. WILBUR F. CRAFTS

THE months we are reviewing to-day include most of spring and part of summer. Beginners and primary pupils from their "nature lessons," will tell us some things the Bible says of the beautiful flowers and songful birds and rippling waters of the season, and some other things Christian poets have said of these seasons. (Children recite, one verse each, standing in a row, in clear voices, the following passages of Scripture: Gen. 1: 11-13; Ps. 107: 35-37; 104: 10-13, 16-18, 24. Add poems about flowers and birds, and sing the song of the sparrow, "God careth for you"; also the motion song, "Hear the music of the rain." These references to nature will teach gratitude to God almost without saying, and it would be fitting to make a civic and spiritual lesson out of the water through which God changes the barren wintry landscape into a "watered garden," showing that what the beautiful flowers drink, what the happy birds drink, what the strong oxen drink is the best drink for boys and girls, for men and women. See our cold water recitations for little tots in Graded Temperance Helps, by W. H. Dietz.)

Decision Day

(It is the custom of many Sunday schools to have an annual "Decision Day," but we think it would be far better to make the last Sunday of each quarter the harvest day for the spiritual work of the quarter, reviewing—especially in the Intermediate Department—those lessons of the quarter that will help to the great decision.)

The boundaries of the intermediate grade, eight and twelve, are both momentous periods. The courts hold a boy may be responsible for even so great a crime as murder at eight years of age; and surely one old enough to be a criminal is old enough to be a Christian. It was at twelve years of age that Jesus, like other Jewish boys, "joined the church," and surely none of us should wait longer than that, for in his day they were not twenty-one till they were thirty, and as thirty is to twenty-one, twelve is to eight. Boys are really as old at eight to-day as they were at twelve in those days. One reason why we should not wait beyond twelve is that the hardest battle with sin comes in the "teen age," and we should build our forts and "put on the whole armor of God" in advance. More people have joined the church at fifteen than at any other age, but probably the reason most of them did not start earlier was that parents and teachers did not sooner lead them to "the valley of decision," where "heaven is near."

There are five lessons in this quarter that give us God's invitations to this happy valley. Luke 15 shows us the five partners in a soul's salvation: God, the Father, is pictured in the loving, forgiving father of the prodigal; Jesus, the Saviour, is pictured in the shepherd who goes far from the fold along steep and perilous paths to bring in the wandering sheep; the Holy Spirit is pictured as the lamp in the hand of the woman, who represents the true church of God, which is also seeking the lost sinner, pictured in the lost coin, precious because stamped with the image of God, in the lost sheep and in the lost son. It is only in the wayward son that the sinner's power of decision is indicated, for when among the husks and swine he said: "I will arise and go unto my father." The human will can accept or reject God's love and even the Saviour's outstretched hands. Every soul that is not living at home with God is in "the far country," whether his wickedness is of the same kind as the prodigal's or not. Weeping will not save, but only willing. We need not make a long journey, for Jesus is here, knocking at the heart's door, saying: "If any man will open the door I will come in and sup with him and he with me." Shall it be like that Easter supper with Jesus at Emmaus (Luke 24: 13-35), or will you refuse the invitation to the joyous feast of a Christian life, with insincere excuses? (Luke 14: 15-24.) The right life is the gladdest life. It will not be free from struggle and sacrifice, but the sacrifices will lose their sting if we turn over to God all we have and are at the start for him to use as he will. "Whosoever he be of you that renounceth not all that he hath, he can not be my disciple." (Luke 14: 33.) That means that "we can serve God without condemnation only as we serve him without reservation." What one "gives up" of sinful pleasures, compared with what one gets of solid satisfaction in right living and useful service, is but giving up poisons for a feast.

We mentioned in the Sunday school lesson for December 28, 1913, published in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD of December 17, 1913, three possible pledges you might take. Imagine this dreadful contract: "I cannot love and serve Jesus Christ. (Signed) ———." You would not dare to sign that, for you know it wouldn't be true. Here is another: "I will never love and serve Jesus Christ. (Signed) ———." You would not sign that. You are no more ready to say "Never" than to say "Now." Here is another. Will you not put your name just now in the space waiting for it? "I will now and forever love, trust and obey Jesus Christ and do good to others in his name. (Signed)———."

Vocation Day

For classes whose members are in the 'teen age every quarterly review may well be "Vocation Day," and for those not yet members of the church that should be also "Decision Day," for the only way one can rightly and wisely choose a vocation is with the aid of Christ and for the sake of serving our fellow men as he did.

We found the first five lessons of the quarter gave us helps to decision, though not taken in regular order. We shall find the remaining seven all of them helpful in choosing a vocation. For those who feel called to give their whole lives to the ministry or other missionary work, the story of the rich young ruler is very instructive. (Mark 10: 17-31.) "The wonderful words of life that fell from Christ's lips were in such contrast to the dead forms he was accustomed to repeat in the synagogue that he seems to have been impelled to become one of Christ's apostles that he might receive such words daily and pass them on as quickening forces to others." But when Jesus, seeing his strong devotion to the honors and luxuries that wealth brings, bade him throw off this "weight" and join the other apostles in a fellowship of poverty and service, he was "disobedient to the heavenly vision" and so missed the place as the twelfth true apostle, which Saul of Tarsus, another rich young ruler, obtained later by meeting a similar test with the words of absolute surrender, "Lord, what wilt thou have me to do?"

Zaccheus is another case that contrasts with the rich young ruler. (Luke 19: 1-10.) He was a publican, a Jew who collected taxes for the Romans and extorted more than the tenth he had a right to take, and so was what we call a "grafter." But he repented and made restitution "fourfold" to those he had wronged, and devoted not a tenth but one-half of his goods to philanthropy. The vocation he chose, apparently, was that of a philanthropist, with some new sort of business as its foundation of supply. The vocation that most boys and many girls will choose is some form of business, but let us hope the business part of it will be conceived as Cary, the pioneer of missions, conceived of his work. He said, in substance, that his business was serving the Lord and his fellow men, and he cobbled shoes to pay expenses. Many lessons of the past quarter have a vital bearing on the boy whose vocation is some form of business. The difficult lessons of the Unjust Steward (Luke 16: 1-13) and the Unprofitable Servant (Luke 17: 1-10) teach that both our earthly and heavenly business should be done zealously and humbly; and Dives (Luke 16: 19-31) warns those whose talent is money-making against using money selfishly rather than as stewards for God and man bound to use their property for the general good as much as a minister is bound so to use his knowledge and eloquence. Minister or merchant, we need for the choice of our vocation, and yet more for the fulfilment of it, the Holy Spirit, "the mind of Christ" (I Cor. 2), which on that first Whitsunday, the Day of Pentecost, equipped the timid, unlettered apostles to be world-conquering preachers. The supreme thing in "Vocation Day" is not only to say but to feel that service is first and salary second whatever we choose to be.

It may often be wise to choose two vocations, that one may be the support or supplement or at least a recreation to the other, as Paul's tentmaking made him more independent as a preacher, and Professor G. F. Wright's geology tours rested him from teaching Greek. The spirit of the Boy Scouts is a good one, not alone for a day's outing, but for life: "Remember the other fellow and do a good turn every day." Pertinent to this charitable side of a business life is the bidding of Jesus: "When thou makest a feast, bid the poor, the maimed and the blind, and thou shalt be blessed." (Luke 14: 13.)

Citizenship Day

In the Adult Department I know of nothing more fitting for quarterly review than to recall, on the basis of some one or more passages studied during the quarter, the newest Testament of the grace of God as shown in the moral progress of the city, the State, the nation and the world during the quarter.

In the days of Christ's ministry the Jews were subject to a Roman emperor and could not express human brotherhood by laws but only by individual charity. When rich and poor have the ballot justice should more and more take the place of charity. Moral reforms are human brotherhood expressed socially and unitedly in terms of law, as shown in those great constitutional phrases, "the general welfare," "the common weal." Courts have often said that the supreme purpose of law is to promote the public health and the public morals.

What progress has been made in three months past in promoting human brotherhood and social betterment? Speaking first of the crusades against habit-forming drugs, Maine and Tennessee are enforcing prohibition with new vigor and good results. Illinois by aid of the new woman suffrage voters has closed 1,100 barrooms. (Not all women voted right, only 65 per cent., showing need of more educational work.) Minnesota has closed 135 saloons, Michigan, Nebraska, Ohio have also increased their "dry" area; and Indiana, under a remonstrance law, that does not wait for a spring or fall election, is getting dryer all the while. Kentucky and Maryland have protected "dry" parts of those States against intra-State liquor traffic from their own wet towns. Secretary Daniels, of the Navy Department, by an order that officers shall observe the prohibition order "in force" but not enforced in the navy and always applicable to officers no less than to the plain marines, has "made the ocean dry," so far as our warships are concerned. Hon. Cato Sells, Indian commissioner, is vigorously enforcing the law against selling liquor to Indians, and is asking his associates in the Indian Bureau to join him in giving the Indians an example of abstinence. The Post Office Department is calling postmasters to account who take orders for liquors for premiums offered by liquor-dealers. The United States Senate and House of Representatives both have on the calendars, though without recommendation, the Hobson-Sheppard constitutional prohibition amendment, which insures an early vote. It is powerfully opposed by great petitions, and will not win unless Christian citizens keep up a steady fire of petitions and letters and telegrams to congressmen up to the hour of victory.

Abroad, Scandinavia is steadily abolishing government ownership barrooms and hastening on to national prohibition. The Czar has expressed his disapproval of the energetic promotion of liquor-selling by his government for the sake of revenue.

Gains in the crusade for purity are shown in the fact that Philadelphia and Pittsburg have joined the many other great cities that had previously abolished their vice districts. The list now includes New York City, Philadelphia, Chicago, St. Louis, Boston, Washington and a hundred other cities and thirteen whole States. And, as once before, thirteen stars will grow to forty-eight.

Efforts are being made to revive laws permitting race gambling, and good citizens must keep guard in all legislatures. On Sunday observance, too, there is need of great vigilance. Despite wars and war scares—the latter one of the regular products of the war traders' trust—the cause of international peace is growing, and the mediation of South American republics between the United States and Mexico is a distinct new step forward. We may therefore fitly pray in the words of Walter Malone, writing of the Panama Canal:

All these things grant us, Lord. And speed that day,
That day desired through long milleniums,
When man is truly worthy of his sire.
And as we now in wedlock shall unite
These mighty oceans, grant that all the tribes
And kingdoms of the world shall soon be one,
Blest with one common hope, one end and aim,
One stainless flag, one fatherland, one God.

The next International Sunday School Convention is to be held in Chicago, June 28-30, 1914. It is to be a triennial convention with delegates from the United States and Canada; probably one of the greatest religious gatherings ever held in the United States. June 28, the Sunday when the convention is to be in session, is named as "International Sunday School Day," and all Sunday schools on the North American continent are urged to observe this day with services and prayer.

Questions and Answers

X. Y. Z., Washington, D. C. A child desires something and asks his father for it. The father thinks it wiser not to give the child the desired object. If the child should still keep begging and getting the whole family to persuade the father to give in, it would appear to me the father would naturally be displeased. I find myself a little out of sympathy with the Prayer League. I have been deaf since childhood. I know that God can restore my hearing. I have prayed about it, and am convinced that he thinks best not to answer my prayer. Would it be right for me, then, to request prayers of others? We are not heard for our "much speaking," and surely he knows best.

Is it not possible that you are in error in deciding what God is pleased with? It may be that he is not so much pleased with your deafness as he is displeased with your lack of faith. We should insist in all our praying to go through to the point where we find out God's will. That is the great thing, after all—not any special blessing of body, or store, or surroundings, but the blessing of being precisely what God wants us to be, and having precisely what he wants us to have. It is he himself and his friendship that can make us glad. Now if, in direct and close communion with him, you are led to feel that he really wants you to be deaf, then, of course, you must not pray for healing or ask others to pray for you. It is usually not God's will that is the obstacle to our prayer, but our own doubts and our own ignorance of what his will is. And here our friends can help us. We can all pray together, seeking to find out his will and then coming to the point where we can believe that his will shall be done. We should suggest that you ask the Prayer League to join you in prayer that God will make known definitely his will to you. If you find that his will is that your deafness continue, pray for relief from all anxiety, uncertainty and distress about it, and for grace to hear the affliction, as Paul bore his thorn in the flesh. (II Cor. 12: 7-9.) If you think he is willing to heal you ask that your faith will grow till it can claim the blessing.

Mrs. W. M. A., Whitney, Neb. 1. The passage to which you refer is Col. 2: 16. Paul here shows that if our service were confined to these observances alone, it would not be acceptable. They are but the "shadow of things to come." The letter of the ancient law has been superseded by the law of love and if we be indeed Christ's, and his Spirit dwell in us, every day of our lives will be sacred, and we need pay no regard to those who would judge concerning legal observances or in respect to foods.

W. J. McC., White Rock, Pa. Christianity was introduced into Spain in apostolic days. Paul, in Rom. 15: 24, 28, mentions a journey he proposed taking to Spain, and tradition says he spent two years there. James the Elder is also said to have preached the Gospel in Spain. During the early period of Christianity, Spain had many witnesses to the faith. In time, when it became subject to the supremacy of the Pope, it grew intensely Roman Catholic. During the long period of Christian persecution, and when the ecclesiastical authorities established the Inquisition, the nation in its cruelty to the true believers, whom it called heretics, and many thousands of whom it tortured to death, seemed literally to "forget God," in its lust for blood and slaughter. It carried these excesses beyond its own borders and its frightful deeds in the name of religion in Holland and other countries are recorded by many historians. See the works of Gibbon, Robertson, Hallam, Prescott, Irving and Ticknor, which you will find in the public libraries or can procure through any bookseller. From being one of the most powerful nations in the world, Spain was greatly reduced by the fortunes of war and otherwise to a secondary position, and lost nearly all of her colonies. Ps. 9: 17 refers to the punishment of the nations that forget God, and illustrations of this character are found in the histories of many of the ancient nations, Assyria, Babylonia, Egypt and others.

J. B., Sacramento, Calif. It is the duty of the Christian to repress in himself and to discourage in others the tendency to unduly criticize other people. Indeed, we are expressly commanded to "speak evil of no man" (Titus 3: 2; James 4: 11.) This of course applies equally to both sexes. The universal proneness to gossip, to "running down," or "knocking," is one of the evils of our time. It may arise from thoughtlessness, but it is prompted by a bad spirit. There are legitimate occasions when reproof may be necessary. The pastor who would hesitate to administer a judicious rebuke at a fitting opportunity would be neglecting his duty, and there are times when any good man or woman may have the duty to perform of speaking "a word in season," in reprobation of evil conduct. Even in such cases, we should act with moderation and judgment, aiming rather to convince than to irritate. But ill-natured, envious, disparaging talk, judging others unheard, shows an un-Christian spirit and is unworthy of one who professes to serve Him who hates the sin, but loves the sinner. Wholly apart from its inconsistence with the Christian profession, there is something radically wrong with the mind and heart of the man or woman who persistently indulges in ill-bred, uncharitable and injurious remarks about other people.

M. G. O., Quakertown, Pa. In reading Ecclesiastes, it should be kept in mind that it is a book of philosophy rather than of religion. Its chief purpose is to contrast the vanity of human pursuits and achievements and pleasures (when these are made the chief aim in life) with the value of true wisdom. The first nine verses of chapter 3 are in the nature of proverbial wisdom, showing that there is a time for everything, and that while earthly pursuits are lawful in their proper time and order they are unprofitable when followed as the chief good in life. The obvious lesson is moderation and self-control, enjoying temperately the gifts God bestows and remembering that all these must pass away from us, and that man himself is mortal, a creature under law, and therefore he should not be the slave of his whims and inclinations. The whole chapter, while it recognizes the divine sovereignty, is unrelieved by any spiritual gleam of the hereafter.

S. R. S. 1. Commentators explain that the point of contrast between the baptism administered by John and that by Jesus was not a personal one, but was between water baptism unto repentance and the promised baptism of the Spirit unto a new life. John himself said (Matt. 3: 11): "I indeed baptize you with water . . . but He shall baptize you with the Holy Ghost and with fire." As to the significance of Christ's baptism, these simple disciples had not yet been enlightened. They were accordingly baptized by Paul himself "unto the whole fulness of the new economy as now opened up to their believing minds." 2. Your second question has recently been dealt with in the Mail-Bag.

C. B. A., Los Angeles, Calif. You state it correctly. Hannah had three sons and two daughters.

M. C. N. Y. Slang is altogether out of place in the pulpit. It may occasionally happen that a familiar colloquialism can be used by the speaker with good effect; but the adoption of a slangy form of expression in dealing with sacred things is vulgar and irreverent, and should be avoided.

J. R. T., Montrose, Va. The "daughter of the horseleech" (Prov. 30: 15, 16) is supposed by some commentators to refer to the vampire (a fabulous creature), which was regarded as insatiable. Or it may have reference to the voracious leeches that sometimes exist in pools which cling to flesh of men or animals until surfeited with blood.

W. S. C., Mill Run, Pa. Bishop Vincent, in his Curiosities of the Bible, gives the total New Testament verses at 7,959, and the middle verse as Acts 17: 17. These statements have been generally accepted, although we ourselves have not verified them, and it may be that your reckoning of 7,957 and of the middle verse as Acts 7: 7 is the correct one.

M. E. C., Ord, Neb. The temple was the great building at Jerusalem, first built by Solomon, rebuilt by Zerubbabel, enlarged and rebuilt by Herod, and destroyed by Titus in A.D. 70. Synagogues were smaller places of Jewish worship which were built throughout Palestine during and after the exile. They correspond to our churches and are now found in many countries.

Get All the Joys of Puffed Grains

Don't serve them only with cream and sugar, and for only one meal a day. Find the other ways to enjoy them.

Mix them with your berries. These thin, crisp, toasted morsels add a nut-like blend. Try this once. You would rather miss the sugar than the puffed grains after that.

Use the grains like nut meats. Scatter them over every dish of ice cream. Use them in candy making. Let the children, when hungry, eat them like peanuts, seasoned with melted butter.

Float Them in Milk

In these days of bread-and-milk suppers serve them in place of bread. Puffed Wheat and Puffed Rice are four times as porous. And these crisp, toasted, bubble-like wafers have a fascinating taste.

Remember that here you get the whole grain, with every food atom available. All the food granules have been blasted to pieces so digestion can instantly act. Never was grain food in any other way made so easily and completely digestible. Puffed Wheat and Puffed Rice are ideal as a good-night dish.

Puffed Wheat, 10c
Puffed Rice, 15c Except in Extreme West

These are the days to get all the joys of Puffed Wheat and Puffed Rice. Keep the pantry stocked. They seem like grains changed into nuts, so they serve both as foods and confections.

And, with all their delights, they are scientific foods. They are steam-exploded by Prof. Anderson's process. In all the ages no other way has been found to so perfectly cook a grain.

For variety's sake keep supplied with both.

CHILD-SAVING BELOW THE EQUATOR

THE Blossom Home for Orphan Children, located in Sao Paulo, Brazil, has closed its fourth year of work with great joy and satisfaction. I am reminded of two promises which were given to me in 1902, while reading my Testament on an elevated train in New York City, before we sailed for Brazil. "Trust in the Lord, and do good; so shalt thou dwell in the land, and verily thou shalt be fed." Ps. 37: 3. "So he fed them according to the integrity of his heart; and guided them by the skilfulness of his hands." Ps. 78: 72.

I remember an experience while we were living in the interior of the State of Bahia. We were strangers in a strange land; our money was all gone; we had eaten our last meal, and no more food was in the house. What should we do? About 3 P.M. some one rapped on the wooden shutter of the front window. Upon opening it, I found a stranger on horseback, on his way up country from the coast to his fazenda (farm). A missionary friend, knowing that he was to pass our door, asked him to deliver a letter to us. There being no railroad, this was the only way of sending it. On opening the letter I found what was equivalent to ten dollars of our money. You can imagine there were thankful hearts in the home that night.

When poor, starving and almost dead Maria das Flores, our little Brazilian Blossom, was brought to us by her crazy mother, and we looked at her claw-like hands, sunken eyes, and emaciated body, we little knew it was to be the beginning of more faith on our part. God heard, and the almost dead body grew well and strong. No longer were her hands like bird-claws, and day by day she crept into our hearts, so that when the time came for us to leave Bahia for Sao Paulo, we felt we ought to take the baby with us. Through her rescue God laid on our hearts the work of saving other helpless children of Brazil. As the result of that resolve, our lives have been dedicated to that service for the Master; the Blossom Home for Orphan Children, during the four years of its existence, has gathered together thirty-four boys and girls, ranging from fifteen months to seventeen years, for whom we are responsible till they are of age.

I have been reading the story of the Exodus, and have been helped in reading how Moses, and afterward Joshua, reminded the Lord of what the heathen would say if he failed t bring them to the Promised Land. W have put ourselves on record that th home is a faith work, and we do nc want the world to say He failed us that his children in the homeland wer not in sympathy; or that the worl cares more for its enterprises than th children of the Lord do for the ente prises of his kingdom. Shall it be so

During the past few weeks mor applications have been received tha at any other time during the past fou years. They have come from the ex treme north of Brazil, nearly tw thousand miles from Sao Paulo; fror the interior of the State and from th city of Sao Paulo. Some of the littl ones are children of native Christians and some are the children of Catholi parents, but all need a home and hom care, and we would be glad to giv them both had we the room. On las "All Saints' Day" four of our olde boys went with one of the staff to cemetery, and in a short time dis tributed over three thousand tract and Gospels to the people who came t place candles and flowers on th graves of loved ones. Who can esti mate the result of these silent messen gers for God?

The latest idea of the children is t send one of their number off to college and it came about in this way: On day Ophelia, our "Topsy," not being in the best of humor with some of he fairer-skinned companions, said: " don't want to stay here, I want to g to Booker T. Washington's schoo where all are negroes." Mother said "All right, Ophelia, be a good girl an earn the money to pay your way, an we will let you go." Some of the chil dren said they would help her, an that brought about a discussion of th subject with the result that a fund wa started to send the most worthy chil to some school, and more than $10 has been given by the children fron their small earnings for this purpose

Does God hear and answer praye to-day, as in days gone by? To us here in the Blossom Home, there ca be no question as to God's willingnes to hear and to answer the prayers of his children. We have had far too many proofs of his love and care t allow for a moment a doubt to occupy our minds. This work grows on one and makes one long to do more for the Master and for his little ones, so that this great land of Brazil might be won for him. CARL W. COOPER.

Sao Paulo, Brazil.

THE WAR AND MISSIONS IN MEXICO

General Huerta has been reported as well disposed toward the policy outlined by the mediators, with some modifications. He appears to be opposed to the idea of a commission government and is said to insist upon acceptance by the revolutionists of whatever plans shall be agreed upon, before giving his own assent. While Huerta's ultimate concurrence in the proposals of his own delegates is expected, he is represented as continuing his preparations to resist the advance of the rebels, and even to continue as head of affairs. He appears to have received the arms and ammunition discharged from the German liners Ypiranga and Bavaria, which vessels, by the way, have been fined $500,000 by the authorities at Vera Cruz for violation of the Mexican customs laws. On June 2 the steamship Antilla is said to have sailed from New York, bound for Tampico, with a huge consignment of ammunition for Villa. The question of the re-establishment of the embargo on arms has arisen. In many ways the situation has become somewhat tense with uncertainty.

Implicit dependence cannot be placed upon the daily grist of news from Mexico, and concerning the negotiations at Niagara Falls, as the sources are now always official and new situations arise with exasperating suddenness to upset all calculations. Late advices represent Huerta as having 60,000 competent troops available for either defensive or aggressive measures; at the same time the Federals appear to be steadily losing ground before Villa's troops in the entire district south of Torreon.

There is a possibility of complications growing out of the sailing of the Antilla seemingly in disregard of the understanding with the peace envoys. The press reports, with surprised comment, that Secretary of State Bryan appears to have been in total ignorance of the intention to ship munitions of war by the Antilla, and of the clearance of that vessel, until too late. Mr. Bryan is quoted as stating that positive orders had been issued prohibiting further exportation of arms from the United States to Mexico by land or by sea. Rumors are renewed of a grave split between Carranza and Villa, the latter, according to report, not agreeing with his chief in the latter's hostility to the mediation.

In the main, those highest in authority seem to regard the situation as in no wise inimical to the purposes of the representatives of the two governments at Niagara Falls, who are completing the details of their general plan.

A LITTLE ANGEL OF THE MOUNTAINS

"My son," said the woman gently, "it doesn't make any difference what you do or what you have done, he always cares. Don't you know the story of the boy who ran away from home and behaved so badly and spent all his father's money, and did worse things than you have done, and had to live with pigs, and how, when he came back, his father received him gladly, and gave him clean clothes and plenty to eat, and forgave him?"

"Just like me?" questioned the boy.

"Yes, something like you, only he was older than you are, and knew better."

"I knew better, too. I remembered all Miss Grace told me at the Mission, and what my mother and my father said. But Parson Bill—he was good to me—but it was my own fault," continued the youngster loyally, desirous to shield his friend.

"Well, we are going to put it all behind us," said the woman tactfully, asking no question, willing to take the boy as he was, looking only to the future. "We are going to ask God to make a new heart and renew a clean soul in you. You and I are going to be great friends. You are coming down to my house, to see me and my little girls. They want a little boy to play with—a little boy that knows all about this country and can show them all sorts of places to play."

"Yes'm," answered the boy brightly. "I know all about these mountains about here. I've been all over them with Parson Bill, and if you think I'm good enough to take your little girls, I'd like to."

"And you will come and stay with me?" The boy's face fell.

"I can't leave Parson Bill, ma'am."

"Why not?"

"Well, you see, he took me in here when I was all alone, and he was good to me and gave me a home, and I'm all he's got, you see."

"Why, I thought you said that it was Parson Bill that made you—"

"I know. But I oughtn't to have said it. It wasn't fair. I was in The Red Dog to bring him home, and I wanted to do it. They were all crying and yelling and shouting. I did it myself to oblige Parson Bill."

"But you mustn't lose your immortal soul for Parson Bill's sake," said Mrs. Morrison gravely.

"No'm, I mustn't."

"And perhaps if we try very hard, and pray very hard, we can save Parson Bill's soul, too."

"Do you think so?"

"Certainly, I do. And you will come to the Sunday school to-morrow?"

"I ain't got no clothes but these, and—"

"Never mind your clothes. A clean heart is better than clean clothes, and—"

"But I ain't got a clean heart, either."

"But you're going to ask God to give you one to-night, aren't you?"

"I haven't said my prayers for so long that I've most forgot them."

"Suppose we say them now, together," said the woman. "My little girls always kneel down and put their heads on my knee. Would you like to do it, too?"

"I used to do it," said the boy, "to my own mother."

"Well, pretend I'm your mother and do it now. Do you know 'Now I Lay Me'?"

"Yes'm."

"Well, go ahead, then."

"But I'm not going to bed now."

"Never mind that; you can say your prayers any time, you know."

The boy slipped off the log, knelt down on the ground, laid his head on the woman's knees, and faltered out the immortal baby prayer that a man never gets old enough to consider inappropriate. The woman laid her hand on the bent head and pressed it softly. After a moment, she broke into a longer and older prayer. "Our Father," she began slowly and tenderly, the boy following until the end. Then with a sudden excess of boldness he ventured on a prayer of his own.

"Please, God," he said, "give me a clean heart again, and help me to be a better boy, and help Bill, too, for he's my friend, and all the people in Cañon Creek. Amen."

"Amen," said the woman. "Now go to bed, and in the morning you are going to wash yourself and come down to my house for breakfast—that is, if Parson Bill can spare you."

"He don't care much for breakfast on Sunday mornings. He'll be sleeping off his drunk. I'll come."

"We'll have breakfast at half-past seven," said the woman, "and the Sunday school at nine."

"Who'll be there?"

"Just Mr. Morrison, and Jennie and Annie, and you and I, and anybody else that wants to come."

"There won't anybody want to come in this town."

"Well, we'll have the Sunday school, anyway. You see, we had one back in Kansas. We had no minister back there, either, but I brought the books along with me, and we will start one here, and perhaps presently we may have a church and a minister to help us."

"I'm afraid we won't have a church in Cañon Creek for some time," said Olaf, who thought he knew the religious possibilities of the camp better than Mrs. Morrison.

"Well, that is in God's hands. We will do our part, and that is all he can ask of us. Now I must go."

It was quite dark when she rose to her feet.

"Good-night," she said. "I am glad we had this little talk together. I am going to pray for you to-night."

"I am going to walk down the street with you," said the boy politely.

"It isn't necessary. There isn't a man in Cañon Creek that would harm me, I am sure of that."

"I'm sure of that, too. But I have an errand to do and if you don't mind I'll walk along with you."

Hand in hand, the two stumbled down the long pathway. Opposite The Red Dog the boy halted.

"I can't go any further with you to-night. This is where my errand is."

"My child, you're not going in there again, after our talk together and your promise to me!" exclaimed the woman, horrified at the idea and bitterly disappointed, too.

"Yes'm, I am."

"But what for?"

"I'm going to try to get Parson Bill."

"But if you go in there they'll—"

She stopped abruptly and stared long and earnestly down at the lad's upturned face. Would they?

"I know what you think," he answered bravely sustaining her searching gaze, "but I'm going to try to do something for Parson Bill. You did something for me, and I'm praying to God right now to keep me a good little boy, even in there. You see, if I'm only a good boy where you are, that won't be much. I must learn to be a good boy everywhere. Once I was."

"Go," said the woman, "and God keep you."

"You'll see me to-morrow morning."

"For breakfast?"

"Yes'm, thank you."

It is not necessary to describe the scene in The Red Dog. It was as it ever had been, and as the proprietor fatuously thought it ever would be. Bill was at his favorite table. He was not playing. He had nothing with which to gamble and he was drinking alone. The usual noisy welcome was vouchsafed the boy, but to the usual friendly invitations he paid no attention. He went straight to the side of Parson Bill. The latter was staring moodily at the table, his face supported by his hands, his elbows resting on the board. The boy shook him is the most economical pineapple because there is no loss from bruising and no trouble or waste with skins and cores.

Hawaiian Pineapple is so much finer than other pineapple because it is of the Smooth Cayenne variety, grown extra big, golden, tender and luscious, in a sub-tropical climate, in a soil which exactly suits it, and especially because it is picked and properly canned in pure cane sugar syrup on the very day it has fully ripened on the plant. The final days of ripening develop the sugar which gives a flavor and tone to the fruit that green-cut pineapple ripened in the vessel hold, the refrigerator car and the storehouse never can get.

Regardless of its quality and the distance it has to come, Hawaiian Canned Pineapple costs no more than domestic fruits. One hundred recipes are given free in our booklet

THE YOUNG PEOPLE'S MEETINGS

NOTES ON THE CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR, EPWORTH LEAGUE AND BAPTIST YOUNG PEOPLE'S UNION TOPICS

Civic Reforms*

STUDENTS of to-day in high school and college are getting new light on many of the social problems of the day, problems of poverty, industrialism, wages, profits and all the problems of our economic life. Have you ever thought of interesting yourself in the conditions of the operatives in your father's mill, to know what wages he pays them, to find out the methods used in your uncle's store, or in his office, or mine? These are problems which the church must take up and try to help settle if she is to keep her place as a useful and progressive force in the world's advance. Very likely your father or uncle would be more likely to be influenced to more just and generous business ways by earnest, loving, careful and companionable conversation with you than by hearing or reading some of the impassioned appeals of older reformers.

You can also help individually by getting definite cases of need on your heart. That is the great secret, after all. We are cold, or at most lukewarm, in our efforts for better conditions until we come to realize the intense human element in it all. The great Carrington had been unmoved by all the temperance agitation he had observed and heard, and was willing to continue his participation in his father's brewing business until passing a saloon one day he saw a woman flung from the door and knocked down in the gutter by a drunken husband whom she was seeking there. Young Carrington glanced up and saw his own name in great gilt letters above the saloon door. That struck home. It was he and his father, he felt, who had thrown the woman, bruised and bleeding, to the street. And henceforth he became the enemy of the traffic which was blighting lives and ruining souls, and became one of the great forces of social reform in England.

Try to learn about some definite cases of people and homes that have been hurt by some of the great economic injustices and social wrongs which are cursing our land. This will help you to work harder to get rid of them, and the joy of feeling that you are really helping definite people will open up a new life for you.

There is no space to speak of the definite things that local societies and larger groups of societies can undertake. Study the conditions in your own locality; make up your mind to help put things right.

Read the stern passage from the book of Isaiah, assigned for our Scripture study. See how God hates wrong and injustice and how strenuously he declares that unless we set these things right he will not hear us when we pray nor accept our services of worship and praise.

The Immigrant Tide†

HAVE you formed a habit of studying the faces of the people whom you see at work? I mean gangs of Italian immigrants making streets, or at work in the quarries, or in big excavations for new buildings, or along the railroad track; or the women you see in the city streets, carrying heavy bundles, or the operatives in mills and mines. A very large percentage of these people are immigrants, and if you will study their faces you will find one fact written there all too plainly: "We are working them too hard." There are two other facts which go with this fundamental fact: We are paying them too little; we are giving them too little time to play and to think. A recent writer has declared: "Thus have the immigrant forces laid our nation under an unending debt, and thus unjustly have we paid."

It is true that many immigrants have earned enough money to return to their native land. It is true that many have been enabled to bring their families here. But great hordes of them are living illy and in loneliness. And many families are in dire destitution. Those from Russia, particularly the Jews, feel the glow of American freedom, and our country has been to them what Mary Antin has so fondly called it, "the Land of Promise." But many others have failed here to gain what would compensate them for the loss of home and homeland.

The passages from Isaiah assigned for our Scripture Lesson study are almost startling when applied to our country in relation to the immigrant. "Behold, I have given him for a witness to the people, a leader and commander to the people. Behold, thou shalt call a nation that thou knowest not, and nations that knew not thee shall run unto thee because of the Lord thy God, and for the Holy One of Israel; for he hath glorified thee." Does not our history indicate that God has chosen this nation to be a leader in the cause of religion and justice and that the other nations of the world have come running to us because of the blessings God has bestowed upon us? What, then, is our duty toward these alien millions? Is it not indeed to lead them to the true light of the Gospel, to give them a fairer share of our nation's wealth and to help them to lives of light and comfort?

With Modern Tools*

THE American Baptist Publication Society has 149 men in the home mission field, seven of them with chapel cars, sixty with wagons, four with colportage automobiles and three with little Gospel steamboats. The story of the work of these men is full of thrilling interest.

Truly romantic are the careers of Captains G. LeRoy Hall, master of the Life Line, which cruises on Coos Bay, Oregon; W. E. Story of the Osceola on the Sacramento River, California, and W. R. Howell of the Robert G. Seymour, which is just beginning its work on Hood's Canal and among the San Juan Islands. In seven months Captain Hall visited over five hundred unchurched families, held seventeen prayer meetings, delivered 179 sermons and addresses, organized two Sunday schools and one church. The meetings are sometimes held aboard the vessel instead of on shore, the whistle taking the place of the church bell. Captain Story, who speaks seven different languages, has a field of over six hundred miles of diked waterways, and forty islands, thickly populated but almost entirely without religious privileges. Not only Japanese and other foreigners, but Americans as well, are altogether without religious opportunities except such as Captain Story brings them with his Gospel boat.

We said with new tools, but after all it is old business, preaching the Gospel from a boat. May these brave men have the blessing of the Man of Galilee upon their work! For the facts contained in this lesson we are indebted to Mrs. William James Sly, who contributes an article on this subject to the June number of Service.

THE STRAIN OF CIVILIZATION

BEFORE the entrance of the Americans into the Philippines the people lived in abject and miserable poverty. The opening up of the islands by roads and railroads drove those who had formerly felt they could go with little or no clothing to dress respectably. Side by side with these changes, the prices on all food, except corn, were raised. Rice here has doubled its price. Vegetables, etc., the same. American work demanded American food. American schooling has made Filipino parents know that they must give their children more nourishment than they themselves had as children. Where better food has not been given to young people attending school their almost fainting condition daily during the morning hours has been noticed by their teachers.

Had not Americans, with their generous salaries to Filipino farm laborers, enabled this weak-bodied people to meet the extra physical strain which a sudden and advanced civilization imposed, the brown race must have begun to die out before their white civilizers. Even with a full understanding of the needs of our young people, a large number have died. The strain of an ordinary mission school education was more than their weak constitutions could sustain.

THREE CEBU MAIDENS

The children of the so-called "better class" could probably have endured far greater mental and physical toil and for a longer time without breaking down in health, and that even with insufficient food, than could our poorer friends.

This is doubtless due to the fact that the constitutions of the better class have not been undermined by the frequent famines.

A LITTLE ANGEL OF THE MOUNTAINS

gently, and Parson Bill looked down at him.

"Parson Bill," said Olaf, "come on home. It's so lonely up there and—"

"You stay here," said Parson Bill hoarsely, "and have a drink."

He never offered the boy anything when he was himself, but he was not himself now. He thrust the bottle and a glass toward him. The boy thrust it back.

"I'm not going to drink any more," he said. "Mrs. Morrison was up there to-night and"—by this time a dead silence had fallen in the room—"Mrs. Morrison is going to start a Sunday school to-morrow morning. I'm going, and I want you to come, too, and she said any of you would be welcome," continued the little evangelist, facing the mob with a throbbing heart, a white face, and a high courage.

"Well, I'm—" began one man, at which the whole company burst into uproarious laughter.

"Parson Bill, won't you come?" asked the boy, his face flushing at the derisions hurled upon him from every side. "I feel so much better already because I promised, and maybe you'll feel better, too."

"Is the kid going to convert the whole blank town?" roared the barkeeper. "Git out of yere!" he added severely; "you're interruptin' trade an' sp'ilin' the evenin'. We don't want no religion round yere, an' as for you, Parson Bill, if you can't keep that infernal kid of yourn in order, you—"

"Hold on!" said Bill, rising to his feet and balancing himself by the table; "don't any of you presume to say any word against the boy. I won't stand for it for a single moment." He spoke clearly and with his usual fluency and nicety. "We're a set of low-down drunken sots and gamblers, and the devil only knows what, and we have done our best to bring this child down to our level. Thank God, somebody got him in time and is going to drag him back from the hell into which we are all plunged. Let nobody laugh at him, let nobody shake a finger at him!" he roared out vehemently. "I'm going with him, and if no one else goes to his Sunday school to-morrow I'll be there." He stopped, drew himself up. "Does any gent wish to argue the point with me? Has any gent got anything to say?"

The men of The Red Dog stared at him in amazed silence.

"I'm going home with the lad," continued Parson Bill. "And although you have no lads like him to go home to, more's the pity, yet the sooner you get out and shut up this place the better. Don't say a word to me," he roared in sudden passion as the barkeeper opened his mouth. "I'm not so far converted that I couldn't use my gun on occasion, and I'll shoot up the first man that opens his head to me. If the youngster wants to be a Christian I'm going to help him, if there is a way or a place."

"Mrs. Morrison said there was a way and place for everybody," said the boy.

"I guess she knows," said Parson Bill. "Clear the way and let us out."

He had his gun out, and extending his left hand to the boy, the two made their way through the crowd and out into the night. Nobody endeavored to stop them, no one even made any comments in their hearing. A damper had been put on the hilarity of the evening, and although the proprietor sought to restore the convivial tone that had prevailed prior to the episode, and although he was warmly seconded by some of those present, their efforts were conspicuous failures. Some of the hardier spirits kept up the revel for an hour or so, but presently one by one the men departed. For the first time in its history The Red Dog put up its shutters, put out its light, and barred its door long before midnight.

I HAVE been a subscriber of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD for a number of years, and enjoy reading it each week, especially the missionary news from heathen lands. The department on Rome is always very interesting. This feature of your paper has secured you subscribers that I know of, and many more that I do not know of, I am sure. Keep up the good work, by keeping us informed as to the Roman situation. Your stand on this question has won for you the good will of thousands.

EYE STRAIN
Relieved by Quitting Coffee.

Many cases of defective vision are caused by the habitual use of coffee.

It is said that in Arabia, where coffee is used in large quantities, many lose their eyesight at about fifty. Tea contains the same drug, caffeine, as coffee.

A N. J. woman writes to the point concerning eye trouble and coffee. She says:

"My son was for years troubled with his eyes. He tried several kinds of glasses without relief. The optician said there was a defect in his eyes which was hard to reach.

"He used to drink coffee, as we all did, and finally quit it and began to use Postum. That was three years ago and he has not had to wear glasses and has had no trouble with his eyes since.

"I was always fond of tea and coffee and finally became so nervous I could hardly sit still long enough to eat a meal. My heart was in such a condition I thought I might die at any time.

"Medicine did not give me relief and I was almost desperate. It was about this time we decided to quit coffee and use Postum, and have used it ever since. I am in perfect health. No trouble now with my heart and never felt better in my life.

"Postum has been a great blessing to us all, particularly to my son and myself."

Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich. Read "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs.

Postum now comes in two forms:

Regular Postum—must be well boiled. 15c and 25c packages.

Instant Postum—is a soluble powder. A teaspoonful dissolves quickly in a cup of hot water and, with cream and sugar, makes a delicious beverage instantly. 30c and 50c tins.

The cost per cup of both kinds is about the same.

There's a Reason" for Postum.

"KNEE-DEEP IN JUNE"

BY MARGARET E. SANGSTER, JR.

SKIES softly blue overhead, and away in the country meadows that are brightly green to walk upon. Woods that are cool and dusky and mysterious, and flowers that are radiant, gorgeous things. Stars that come out at night to glow in a sky of deepest sapphire, and a sun that is golden and warm and friendly. June with all of its witchery and enchantment and love!

We were sitting in the sun—the bride-to-be, the schoolgirl, and myself—all engaged in our typical occupations. The bride-to-be was embroidering conventionalized orange blossoms on a bit of the finest linen, the schoolgirl was studying French, and I was scribbling at some verses. Overhead in the greenness of a graceful tree a little bird sang happily to itself.

"J'aime, tu aimes, il aime," droned the schoolgirl softly to herself. Suddenly her book shut with a snap, and she gazed up into the tree. "It's a bluebird!" she exclaimed.

The bride-to-be took a careful stitch in the white linen before she answered:

"Go on with your work," she commanded gently; "it's commencement very soon now, and if you don't pass your French—" She paused significantly.

The schoolgirl flushed a bit, and then with a defiant little toss she threw the book just out of reach.

"I can't help it," she declared, "the world's too beautiful to study in. It's June—and there's a bluebird in the tree. French can wait."

The bride-to-be took another dainty stitch. "I don't blame you," she said. "I wouldn't be doing a thing myself, but the end of the week comes so soon, and these things must be finished for the wedding."

Vaguely I scribbled on with my verse. At the end of the page I stopped abruptly.

"What," I question, "rhymes with silver?"

"Nothing, I guess," yawned the schoolgirl; "don't write any more today. I want to talk to you."

With a sigh of relief I dropped my pencil. "Go on," I said, "talk."

The schoolgirl gazed soulfully off into the distance, large black-lashed eyes dreamy and vague. The silence drifted around us like a rainbow-hued cloak, and the bluebird began to sing again in his green retreat. With a little start the schoolgirl came back to us.

"In ten days," she confided, "I graduate—if I pass my exams. Then it's Europe, and my music, and the whole world before me."

"Then it's decided," I spoke lazily, "and you're really truly going to do it?"

"I'm really truly going to do it," answered the girl eagerly. Her hands, with their long, slender fingers of a musician, ran softly over the grass as if she were playing a scale. "I'm going to be well known some time, girls—you'll be proud of me, maybe."

"We're proud of you now." It was the bride-to-be who spoke. "We couldn't get along without you, dear. Who else would be able to play the wedding march for me as you will?" With a loving hand she patted the curly head.

"That's nothing." The schoolgirl flushed self-consciously. "Who wouldn't play Lohengrin wonderfully for you—you darling!" Eagerly her hand found the soft one on her head and held it tightly.

The little bird swayed perilously out on a shaking twig and gave a chirp of dismay. Interestedly we watched him flutter back to a firmer seat. In the pause that followed I broke in.

"I'm jealous," I told them. "Here you are, both of you, doing something new and exciting, while I must stay at home and hear from you every year or so. It will be lonely with one of you married and the other in Europe."

"You've got your work," the schoolgirl told me, "and you have bushels of other friends. Oh, don't say that you'll miss me. I feel positively homesick already. I go in such a short time!"

The bride-to-be was sewing steadily, carefully, and under her hands the piece of linen was becoming a thing of marvelous beauty.

"You won't miss me," she murmured thoughtfully as she puckered her forehead over an especially difficult stitch, "and then—I won't be far away. You must come and visit me in the Little House." Her glance, dream-filled, wandered away to the white road that crept like a narrow ribbon over the hill. "We bought the dining-room furniture yesterday," she told us. "It's the prettiest—heavy, solid-looking chairs, and a low sideboard with places for grandmother's pewter candlesticks, and a flat shiny table that you can see your face in. I love it. I'm crazy, girls, for you to see the Little House."

"The Little House!" I spoke rather jealously. "It's always the Little House now. You never care for us any more, not half as much as you do for your little house."

"That's right," the schoolgirl chimed in," and after next week, why, the Little House will just up and swallow you and we'll never see you again—hardly. You won't even come to my commencement exercises."

The bride-to-be laughed softly. "Precious babies," she said, "to be jealous about me and my house, and my (with a blush) husband. Why, honey, I'll come to your commencement, and years after I'll come to your concerts in Carnegie Hall. Even if I don't see Margaret often I can read her articles and think about her. Why, we'll be as much together as ever."

The schoolgirl winked the moisture from her eyes and picked up her discarded French book from the ground. Her voice trembled a bit as she began her conjugations.

"J'aime," she recited slowly. Then suddenly her face cleared. "That's it!" she told us excitedly. "It seems hateful to say good-by to all of our good times, but I love it. Every time I see a piano, every time I play a note, every time I think of the future, I feel happy. Music—it's the greatest thing in the world!"

The bride-to-be was not listening. With eyes fastened on the road, she was swiftly folding up her work.

"Here comes Bob," she exclaimed softly, while a lovely rose color stained her cheeks. "I'll go to meet him," she said.

The bluebird sang in the tree, and the sunlight fell in ripples on the grass. The schoolgirl looked over the hill with ambitious eyes, and down on the road a dark-coated arm encircled a white gown.

"The greatest thing in the world!" I murmured to myself.

Skies softly blue overhead, and away in the country, meadows that are brightly green to walk upon. Woods that are cool and dusky and mysterious, and flowers that are radiant, gorgeous things. Bear CREX in Mind

CREX wire-grass rugs, carpets and runners are in such great demand—they are imitated.

Even Asiatic countries are trying to introduce poor imitations of questionable sanitation.

All grass floor coverings not bearing the word CREX on label or in side binding are imitations.

The name CREX, like the word "Sterling," means standard of quality.

No imitation can be compared with the original, genuine CREX, no matter what it may be called—no matter if claimed to be "just as good."

There is an appropriate CREX covering for every floor—indoors and out—and in color effects to match every setting.

Ask your dealer to show you his catalog and CREX line for 1914—especially the new herringbone weave for porches.

Prices range from 50 cents to $12.00, according to size.

A New Flag

This is to announce that we have secured a new Flag for our readers, of the same size (6 feet long by 4 feet wide) as the flag we have been using. It is made by the Dunkards of Pennsylvania, and you may be sure that it is well made. The stripes are double-stitched to one another. This is really one of the biggest values in flags we have been able to offer. You should have one for the Fourth.

Compare Size of Flag with the Height of Children

With this Flag goes FREE a beautiful Portfolio (11 by 16 inches, in Colors) of the Panama Canal.

The first ships are about to steam through the canal, which is fully described in this Portfolio, which contains a full descriptive History of the Canal, Photographs of the most important points, Colored Maps of the Canal Zone, Diagrams showing the Changes in Ocean Steamship Routes, Map of the United States in Colors, a Map of the World in Colors, and eight Photographs depicting the Main Buildings, Grounds, and Bird's-eye View of the great Panama-Pacific International Exposition.

The Portfolio will give you a comprehensive idea of just what the Panama Canal means to the world at large.

The Flag you will use for every holiday for years to come—in public and private sociables, in the schoolhouse, in the church and in the home.

ANSWERED PRAYERS

THE pastor's son for whom prayers were asked two weeks ago is rapidly recovering. Mrs. A. C. M. writes from Brooklyn, N. Y.: "My request of about two months ago has been answered. My sons have joined the church and the younger obtained a position." E. W. W., of Huntington, Ore., writes: "I must tell you how God has blessed us as a family since I have been praying every day at noon with you all for all the requests mentioned in every issue of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. We want to acknowledge the Father's goodness in answering our prayers by saving our little son from death. While he lay almost dead here God in answer to prayer provided transportation to Chicago for treatment, and, as if by a miracle, he is now at home, restored to health." C. D. writes from Philadelphia: "I have been helped greatly by the Answered Prayer column. I want to acknowledge God's goodness in answering two prayers for financial help this past week."

Acknowledgments of answers to prayer have also been received from: F. W.; E. H. L.; M. E. P.; Mrs. M. A. B.; Mrs. F. J. F.; Mrs. C. F. M.; P. J. W.; Mrs. A. B.; Mrs. M. A. S.

A sad letter comes from a young lady asking to be delivered from the morphine habit. Dr. and Mrs. W. ask prayers that their son, who was preparing for the ministry and had done good work in Gospel missions, be restored to health. He has been ill for ten years and is now in a hospital for the insane. A friend from Brookshire, Texas, asks prayer that her sister be cured of cancer. G. G. D. asks prayers to be united to the friend whom she was about to marry but who has been estranged through false reports. Special requests have been received from M. E. J.; A. H.; Mrs. G. O. S.; Mrs. A. C. M.; H. M., London, England. The letter signed "X. Y. Z." is answered in this week's issue of the Mail-Bag.

A friend requests prayer that the good work being done in revival meetings at Portland, Pa., may continue, and that the spirit of brotherly love and harmony may reign. A. C. D. C. requests prayer for a revival in the church at New London, Wis.; Mrs. W. for a revival at Storm Lake, Iowa; Mrs. S. M. W. for revival in church and outpouring of the Holy Spirit in the community of Grundy Center, Iowa; A. C. L. for a revival in the church at Putnam, N. Y.; Mrs. M. R. L., for a revival at Marietta, Ga.; Mrs. E. A. G., for a revival at Starr, S. C., and abolition of liquor business; Miss M. M. C. that cause of Statewide prohibition may triumph in Virginia; Mrs. J. W. for blessing upon the Armstrong Bible class in a church at Albert Lea, Minn.

The following friends ask prayer for a deeper work of grace, assurance of sin forgiven, or express in other ways their desire for personal spiritual blessing:

Mrs. R. M. P.; Mrs. C. W. P.; Mrs. B. O. (to receive the joy of the Holy Spirit); Mrs. M. R. M.; Mrs. C. A. M.; S. H.; G. W. G.

The following friends ask prayer for the conversion of sons:

Mrs. A. L. H.; Mrs. R. D. C.; Mrs. L. E. B.; Mrs. G. W. B.; Mrs. J. R. A.; Mrs. L C. W.; Mrs. J. W. R.; Mrs. R., Los Angeles, Calif.

The following friends request prayer for the conversion of other relatives and friends:

Even Baby Knows the Hygeia Breast is Next Best to Mother's Nursing

Baby Takes to This Bottle Naturally

Nursing from Hygeia's broad, yielding breast-nipple is modern, natural, clean. The Hygeia nurser is not a bottle at all, but a cell—wide-mouthed and easily cleaned and sterilized. You can get cloth and fingers into it. The rubber breast is non-collapsible and has the same contour as a mother's breast. A hidden shield prevents collapsing. It can be turned wrong side out to clean. Sold complete, or you can buy parts separately.

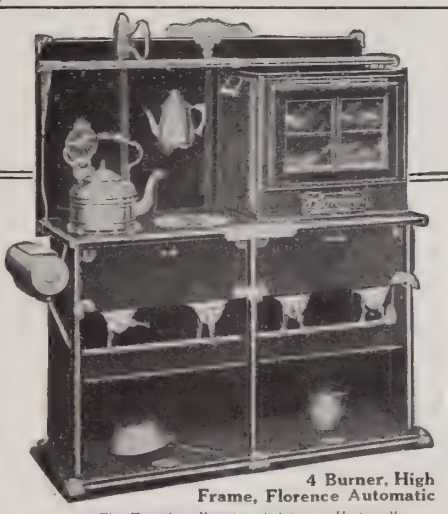
Summer Cooking Shouldn't Cook the Cook



4 Burner, High Frame, Florence Automatic

"The Turning Point in Oil Stove History"

Getting dinner ready in July is just as comfortable as in November—if you use a Florence Oil Cook Stove.

You can keep one or four burners at an intensely hot or merely simmering flame. The heat goes upward, not outward into the kitchen. It does your work well and reliably, and keeps you comfortable. It requires less watching and regulating than a coal stove.

To change the heat you merely turn a simple, little (patented) lever device.

There are no wicks nor valves. The oil supply is automatically constant. The flame is blue and of extraordinary heat.

FLORENCE

Oil Cook Stoves

"Look for the Lever"

We believe that no other stove approaches the Florence Oil Stoves in the degree of heat generated from a given quantity of oil. It costs about one-half cent an hour per burner.

At last—in Florence Oil Stoves you have safe and reliable oil stoves. Their construction and the principle behind it preclude danger.

Cleanly and convenient, Florence Oil Stoves are just what you've wanted for your kitchen. From one to four burner, high or low frame. Ask your dealer or write for catalog now.

Florence Glass Door Ovens

for visible baking—better baking—fuel saving. Cold air kept out till baking's done. Asbestos lined. Arched roof, bakers' oven top, even heat. Rust proof. Oven grates run front to back. Florence Stoves and Ovens are fully guaranteed.

May We Send You Both of These?

FREE—an unusual recipe book of household helps. Contains quite "different" cooking and menu suggestions. It is FREE—write for it.

Also, a Toy Stove, 16c in stamps. Harmless, not to be lighted. Great for children—and gives an idea of Florence Oil Stove appearance. Send for catalog and one or both of these today, giving dealer's name.

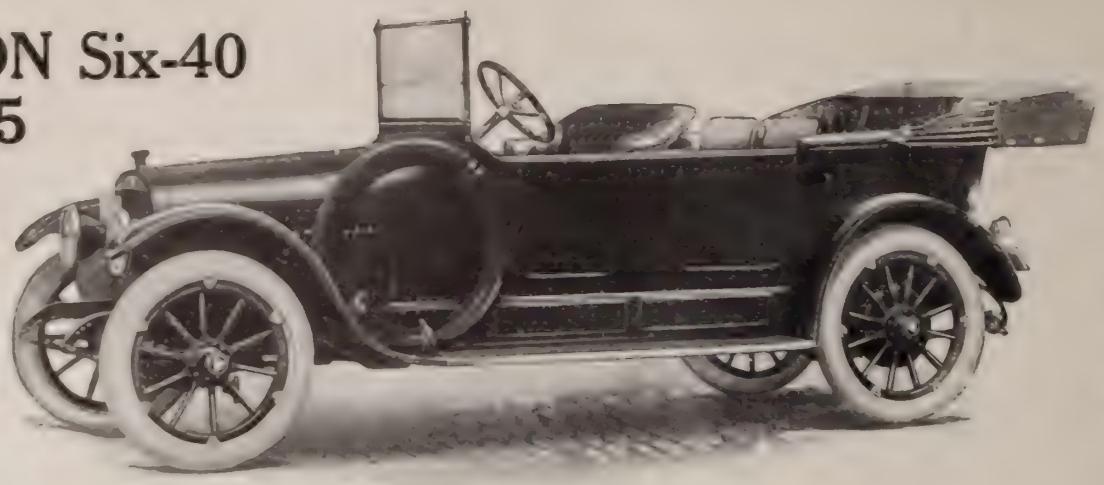
"FORT PLENTY"—THE BEAUTIFUL DINING HALL OF OUR CHILDREN'S HOME AT MONT-LAWN

An exact reproduction of Nature's coloring, from a lumière negative made by Earle Harrison

HUDSON Six-40
For 1915



As Pictured
$1,550

The Thoroughbred

The latest refinement in Sixes—one of the handsomest cars in the world—setting many new standards in high-grade cars, and another new record in quality price—the 1915 model of the car whose popularity compelled us in eight months to treble our output.

31 New Features

The HUDSON Six-40 came out last year to win a new field to Sixes. Our famous engineering corps—headed by Howard E. Coffin—had devoted three years to the model. It typed, in their opinion, the ultimate in sixes, as denoted by modern trends.

In lightness, it set a new standard for cars of this capacity. It cut down old-time averages about 1,000 pounds. All this was saved, with no sacrifice of staunchness, by costlier materials and better engineering.

In economy, it lowered operative cost from 15 to 30 per cent under former like-powered cars. This by lightness, by employing six cylinders and by a new-type motor.

In beauty, design and equipment it excelled, in some respects, any other car of the year.

In price—then $1,750—it set a new record among quality cars which no other maker met.

We knew that men wanted this type of car. They wanted lightness, modest size, economy. They rebelled against over-tax. Yet they wanted quality and they wanted beauty. And they wanted, above all, a Six.

But we did not dream how many men waited such a car. They flocked by the thousands to HUDSON dealers, and placed 3,000 orders more than we could fill. At the end of the season men were offering premiums—as high as $200—to obtain this light Six-40.

Now our 48 engineers have devoted another whole year to this car. They have brought the weight down to 2,900 pounds. They have added comfort, convenience, silence and beauty in 31 important ways.

In the HUDSON Six-40 for 1915 we offer you the best consensus of present-day ideals. Many men must buy cheaper cars. Some will always want the big and the costly. But most men will concede this new HUDSON Six-40 to be America's representative car.

Price $200 Less

The HUDSON Six-40 demand has compelled us to treble our output for next year. Building three times as many, our cost per car will be lessened by $200. So the price for 1915 has been fixed at $1,550.

That accords with HUDSON policy. It is the latest of the thousand things we have done to bring the best within reach of the many.

Think of this ideal car—the very embodiment of all that's desirable—a HUDSON and a Six—selling for $1,550. Only a little while back there was no Six sold for twice that.

The new HUDSON Six-40 is a thoroughbred Six. Its very lightness denotes the highest grade of materials and a masterpiece in designing. It is distinguished in lines and beauty. Its finish, its beauty and equipment all show our infinite pains. It seats up to seven, with the disappearing tonneau seats.

A year of use in thousands of hands has proved the faultless construction. And now this new model shows all the refinements which 48 men in four years have worked out.

Go to your HUDSON dealer and see it. It is the finest example you will find this year of the progress made in motor car building.

Six-40 Phaeton, $1,550 f.o.b. Detroit
Six-40 Standard Roadster, same price

The HUDSON Six-54, built on the same lines, but with larger motor and 135-inch wheelbase, sells for $2,350. It offers to men who want size and impressiveness the best that is possible, and at a modest price.

Hudson dealers everywhere now have these new cars on show. Our new catalog on request.

A WEEKLY ILLUSTRATED NEWSPAPER FOR THE HOME

THE BARADA (ABANA OF THE SCRIPTURES, II KINGS 5: 12) AS IT FLOWS THROUGH DAMASCUS

"THE EYE OF THE EAST"

FIFTH ARTICLE IN THE NEW TRAVEL SERIES

BY REV. FRANCIS E. CLARK, D.D., LL.D.

Founder and President of the Christian Endeavor Society

TRADITION, ever anxious to fix the exact site of every great event in history, tells us that the awful vision which struck Paul blind, but at the same time opened his spiritual eyes, came to him at the spot now called Salahijeh, where the umbrageous gardens of the magnificent city of Damascus first break upon the eye. This view has always been famous and always will be; for no one can ride for days across this arid country, and suddenly come upon one of the most beautiful oases in the world, smiling with brilliant flowers and luscious fruits, with gurgling streams of pure fresh water running through it in every direction, without being deeply moved.

Many traditions cluster around this spot. Abraham is said to have rested here for the last time before entering the Promised Land. Here, too, came Mohammed, and, looking down upon the charming oasis and the magnificent city, then, as now, the oldest city in the world, he is said to have exclaimed: "I will go no further; there can be but one paradise for man, and mine shall be beyond the grave."

But far more important than any event which could have happened to Abraham or Mohammed or any of the world's conquerors who successively have ruled over Damascus, was the momentous occurrence which struck down the future apostle only that he might in turn be upraised to be Christ's most eminent disciple.

This event on the Damascus road was so vastly important to the future of the Christian Church that the sacred writers have thought it worth while in the limited space of one book of the New Testament to record it no less than three times, once by St. Luke in the eleventh chapter of Acts, and twice by St. Paul himself in later chapters of the same book when he was defending himself from the unjust charges which the Jews were always leveling against him. I cannot do better than to quote a part of his graphic description of the event which not only transformed his own life, but, it is fair to say, in some large measure the history of the world itself.

"And it came to pass," he says, "that as I made my journey, and was come nigh unto Damascus about noon, suddenly there shone from heaven a great light round about me. And I fell unto the ground and heard a voice saying unto me, 'Saul, Saul, why persecutest thou me?' And I answered, 'Who art thou, Lord?' And he said unto me, 'I am Jesus of Nazareth, whom thou persecutest.' And they that were with me saw indeed the light, but they heard not the voice of him that spake to me. And I said, 'What shall I do, Lord?' And the Lord said unto me, 'Arise, and go unto Damascus, and there it shall be told thee of all things which are appointed for thee to do.'"

TRADITIONAL SITE OF PAUL'S INTERVIEW WITH ANANIAS

He goes on to tell how he was led by the hand and came into the house of Judas, where one Ananias, a devout man according to the law, came to him, and said: "Brother Saul, receive thy sight," and "the same hour I looked upon him."

Ananias was not an eminent disciple, but a quiet and obscure member of the early church. He was never mentioned in any of Paul's epistles, but he was instrumental, as any humble Christian may be, in pointing an inquirer to the way of life.

Let us follow Paul into the heart of Damascus, seeing things which in his blindness he could not see, but which, because of the unchanging customs of the East, are in many respects the same to-day as they were two thousand years ago. At least Mount Hermon is the same to-day as then, looking down from its serene snowclad heights upon the busy city, which throughout nearly five thousand years of recorded history it has guarded. The Abana and the Pharpar still vivify the desert sands as they did when Abraham chose Eleazar of Damascus for his servant, and when Naaman, the Syrian general, contemptuously said to Elisha: "Are not Abana and Pharpar, rivers of Damascus, better than all the waters of Israel!"

He might well have asked this question, for these crystal streams, gushing from an inexhaustible fountain at the foot of the Lebanon Mountains, are far more attractive as they tumble over the rocks in their early course, and sing their way in innumerable streamlets through the great city, than the muddy waters of the Jordan, which is sometimes hemmed in by forbidding mountains and cruel cliffs, and sometimes flows sluggishly and tamely through the plains, as though exhausted by its exertions in its upper regions. Especially to the Abana, now called the Barada, is Damascus indebted for its continued vigor and ever youthful life through five millenniums.

The railway that now connects Damascus with Haifa and Beirut follows for miles this beautiful river. From the outlet of the gorge, through which the river runs, and where it is divided into seven branches, two of these branches distribute the water into numerous conduits throughout the whole city, while the remaining five are used to irrigate the orchards, so that not only every house, but every plot of ground, is provided with this delicious life-giving water. As we follow the river up to its source, some twenty miles from the city, it grows ever smaller and smaller, but more and more picturesque, for the gorge through which it dashes narrows almost to a cleft in the rocks, but we never leave the laughing streamlet, lined with beautiful trees, until we reach its very fountain-head.

THE WALL OVER WHICH PAUL ESCAPED FROM DAMASCUS

What did Paul see, in the first century of our era, that we may see to-day, and what modern sights would be strange and perhaps incomprehensible to him? It is an interesting question, as we enter this historic city. Doubtless he saw some of the same street scenes, heard the cries, we see and hear to-day, the cries in a different language, for the Orientals have always been famous for their figures of speech and their flowery hyperbole in selling their wares. The merchant of wheat bread covered with butter and grape syrup and sprinkled with sesame calls out, "God is the nourisher, buy my bread!" Or perhaps he sings in a high falsetto, "Food for the swallows!" by which he would mean that it was delicate enough for the most charming girls. To-day one often sees an Arab bending under the weight of a great two-handled jar, while in his hand he carries cups of brass, which he jangles together and into which he pours from his jar lemonade or raisin water, shouting at the same time, "Refresh the heart, allay the heat." Often one hears a water-carrier cry out: "O thirsty one, 'the distribution!'" which means that some benevolent individual has paid him for the licorice water or the plain water or the lemonade which his distended goat-skin contains, in order that he may give it away to all applicants, and thus win merit for the donor.

Often one passes a fruit or vegetable vendor with a great load of cucumbers or turnips, or perhaps huge beets, from which he cuts a slice for the purchaser, like a round of steak. This man very likely calls out, "O father of a family, buy a load—many pounds of cucumbers for thirty paras." Perhaps the most far-fetched advertisement, as Baedeker tells us, is the cry of the flower-sellers, who call out, "Salih hamatak!" which means "Appease your mother-in-law"; that is, by presenting her with a bouquet.

Other sights and sounds by no means so agreeable meet the modern traveler to-day and doubtless, also, met those who journeyed through Damascus in St. Paul's time. Never have I seen more hideous objects than the insane men of Damascus. Some of them, those who are particularly violent, are fastened with a heavy chain to a ring in the wall of some house or public building. Upon the sidewalk day and night, covered, if at all, from the blistering rays of the sun or the dews of evening by a little awning of ragged burlap, almost naked, gnashing their teeth, or perhaps with stupid, dull indifference in their eyes, they crouch all day long, depending upon the charity of passersby.

All these sights were probably common in St. Paul's time, but there are others which link Damascus to the modern world and of which Paul and his companions never dreamed. Among these are the three railways which connect the city with the outer world, one running to Haifa, under the shadow of Mount Carmel, another to Baalbec and Beirut, the great modern port of Damascus, and the third the "Pilgrim Route" to Mecca and Medina.

Another sight which would certainly have amazed St. Paul and his companions is the clanging trolley car which rushes at break-neck speed through the streets, elbowing the patient donkeys and the stately, ragged camels out of the way at every turn. These ancient "ships of the desert," which have so long had the monopoly of the carrying trade of the Far East, seem still to look with supercilious contempt upon the modern electric car, as much as to say, "What are you doing here, in my own domain?"

Electric lights, too, with which the city is fairly abundantly supplied, would have opened the eyes of St. Paul's contemporaries in astonished wonder, and the great monument in the chief square of the city, which tells of the completion some years ago of telegraphic connection between Damascus and Mecca, would have amazed them indeed with its story of the wonders of electricity.

The last spot which we can visit is the ancient wall through whose window it is said that St. Paul escaped. Here is his own brief account of his escape: "In Damascus the governor under Aretas the king put guards about the city of the Damascenes, thinking to arrest me, and through a window, in a basket, was I let down by the wall and escaped his hands." This short story comes at the end of Paul's account of his many tribulations, his stripes and imprisonments, his perils and his shipwrecks. It evidently made a deep impression upon him, for it is the first of many persecutions which should follow him until the end came. We looked with interest and reverence upon the ancient wall, which undoubtedly was standing in St. Paul's time, and at the window from which it is quite possible, but by no means certain, that he was lowered in a basket, and, as we looked, we thought of our Lord's words, spoken at the time of his marvelous conversion, to Ananias his humble instructor: "I will show him how great things he must suffer for my name's sake."

A BISHOP IN SHIRTSLEEVES

WHEN Dr. J. C. Hartzell was elected bishop of the Methodist Episcopal Church for Africa, he prayed God for twenty years of active work on the Dark Continent. If the bishop lives until the assembling of the General Conference in 1916 his prayer will have been answered. His vision of the redemption of the continent has in a measure been realized among the natives of Rhodesia, Angola, and Portuguese East Africa, where his efforts have been almost confined.

When, in May, 1907, the delegates to the World's Fifth Sunday School Convention sailed from Boston for Rome, Bishop Hartzell was invited by President Warren to join the ship at the Madeira Islands. A case of smallpox developed and the vessel, the Romanic, was not permitted to stop. However, Bishop Hartzell was able to get passage on a small freighter bound from Rio de Janeiro to Lisbon. Another and smaller steamer took him from the Portuguese capital to Gibraltar, where he arrived on a Saturday evening. On Monday the Romanic anchored in the harbor!

While on the cruise from Gibraltar to Genoa, a day was spent in Algiers, during which time many of the delegates visited the several independent missions which had been established. Being impressed by the opportunity for aggressive missionary work among the Moslems, several of the prominent delegates, not members of his denomination, asked Bishop Hartzell to take the lead in organizing a determined effort to combat the onward movement of Mohammedanism.

"It is unquestionably a great field," replied the bishop, "but it will take at least $5,000 a year for five years to insure success."

"All right," they said enthusiastically, "we'll get it right here on this ship. At least, we'll get enough to make a start and then we'll carry the proposition to the friends at home." That evening $10,000 was pledged, and to-day an aggressive missionary campaign is being conducted under the Cross of Christ against the forces of the Crescent on the Dark Continent.

Bishop Hartzell was intimately acquainted with Cecil J. Rhodes, that "Empire Builder," who had a vision of Africa's future not fully appreciated by his associates, and when the bishop was about to establish his central mission in Rhodesia, Mr. Rhodes presented him with 3,000 acres of land, the site of Old Umtali, the village itself having been moved across "Christmas Pass," in the mountains, to the railroad near. Several of the town buildings were turned over to him to be remodeled for the missionaries' school, chapel, and girls' home.

"I DO WORK SOMETIMES"

Not long ago Bishop Hartzell was visiting the mission station at Old Umtali. His attention was attracted by the approach of a company of singing, shouting natives, led by their chief, Umtassa, head of a large number of villages or kraals, who had come to pay his respects to the "great white chief." During the interview, conducted through an interpreter, the bishop explained the work which the missionaries were trying to do, and endeavored to convince Umtassa that he should be friendly. At the conclusion of the palava, and following the custom of that section, Bishop Hartzell told the chief that he wanted to show his kindly feeling by a present, and thinking that the black man would probably desire some trinket or gift of little value, as is usually the case, asked Umtassa what he would like. The chief said he would tell him the next day.

Early the following morning the bishop was awakened by the missionary, who stood in the doorway with Umtassa.

"I thought it all over," said the latter, "and now I know that I want a white iron bed like white people have."

The bishop was unable to reply to the somewhat unusual request. Such articles are very expensive in that country. To refuse the chief, after having himself suggested the giving of a present, would be quite impossible, so the bishop told the missionary to see that a bedstead was brought out from Umtali, and then indicated that the interview was closed. But Umtassa had not finished.

"And you can send along with the bed a mattress, some sheets and two pillows," he added.

Bishop Hartzell, in telling this story, never fails to remark upon the somewhat surprising effect often produced by the efforts of missionaries to Christianize and civilize the natives of Africa.

C. F. STODDARD.

FLAGELLANTS OF THE PHILIPPINES

FOR several years past, following Holy Thursday and Good Friday, articles have appeared in the Philippine newspapers regarding "The Flagellants," or people who practice penance of the most severe character, and stating that this takes place back of the La Loma Catholic Church, the location of which is familiar to all the old residents of Manila. My friend and myself concluded this year that we would take our way to this locality and see for ourselves. We got off the car on Calle Blumentritt, near the cockpit, walking over the hill between the two Chinese cemeteries, until we reached the Chinese Catholic Church. At the rear of this, we soon came upon a long, narrow pathway, inclosed by a fence on either side. This path we followed over and down the hill on the opposite side from the cemeteries.

LA LOMA CHURCH

As we neared the hollow where the beautiful bamboo trees grow in profusion, on and near the bank of a small stream which evidently finds its way to some place during the rainy season, and possibly for some time afterward, we were really startled and, for a time, almost unable to proceed, at the sight that met our view. An unusually large and well-proportioned Filipino was standing with a cloth tied over his head and face, and a wreath of guava branches and leaves on the top of this. In his hand were something like a dozen very coarse vines, about two feet long, braided together; on the end of each was a piece of bamboo or light wood, five or six inches in length, and of the size of the largest lead pencil, as I afterward examined. The man was bare to the waist, and with this crimson instrument—if such it may be called—was lashing his back and sides, which were literally covered with blood, and in such a quantity that it was coagulated at the waist line, and had saturated nearly the whole back portions of the white pantaloons, his only garment. Over all, the blood from his back was trickling off his bare heels on to the ground.

This whipping and lashing he continued until he dropped to his knees on the ground, with arms extended. The man who appeared to have the matter in charge stepped behind and kicked him in the back with such force that he fell prostrate, headlong upon his face; whereupon the attendant turned the head-covering a trifle and whispered in his ear, then put something in his mouth that had the appearance of a wet sponge. The man, with great effort, arose, and again began beating himself as before, but this was of short duration, as he soon fell face downward from apparent exhaustion. At this juncture, the man in charge appeared with a heavy leather strap, and struck the poor unfortunate three very severe blows across the back, in the place where the blood was oozing. Then after the leather strap-beating, he stood on the prostrate form as if to crush out the remaining spark of life. The penitent lay on the ground in the hot sun until he recovered sufficiently to go a few steps to the little nearby creek I have already mentioned, where, with assistance, the blood was washed off and a camisa or shirt put on. He was then prepared to leave the locality, a very sick and pale-looking man.

The cause for placing the cloth over the whole head is evidently to conceal the distressed features of the subject during the proceedings. At the commencement of this pitiful forture, the subject who is to go through the ordeal kneels before a small cross with the image of Christ nailed to it. While he is kneeling in front and blindfolded with the cloth over his head, the man in attendance comes up behind and strikes him on the back with a cluster of sharpened pieces of glass, set in what appears to be brown sealing-wax, plastered on to a flat piece of wood, resembling a hair-brush in shape, but round instead of oval, and with a longer handle. There are about seven of these glass knives on this instrument of torture, which vary in size on different instruments. If, after the subject has beaten himself with the sticks for a time, the flow of blood does not appear to be great enough to satisfy, the attendant strikes him on the back again with the glass knives, which are from five-sixteenths to half an inch in width. The flagellation is again resumed; he walks a step with each stroke, and the blood flies in all directions. If the spectator chances to be at all near, his own clothing may receive a portion. The grass and ground and everything in the locality for a block or more is bespattered.

The small creek was stained to a crimson where several had washed. A table stood underneath the bamboo trees containing refreshments supervised by native women garbed in black, who at times chanted very prettily.

You may ask whether women go through this trying ordeal. We are told that they do not.

CURRENT EVENTS OF SPECIAL INTEREST

THE changeful Mexican situation again presents an aspect of indetermination as THE CHRISTIAN HERALD goes to press. The confidence which had been expressed in the early conclusion of the labors of the Peace Mediation Board has been gravely shaken. The reports which had led the public to believe that the plans drawn up by the board had been accepted in Washington and Mexico City now appear to have been not well founded. The most serious obstacle appears to be the selection of a provisional president to succeed General Huerta, the administration at Washington being reported as insisting on a leading revolutionist, whereas the Huerta government refuses to accept a revolutionist of the stamp desired by this country.

The sailing of the Antilla with a big consignment of ammunition for the Constitutionalists, as previously reported, threatened to cause a complete break in the negotiations, as Huerta had decided to blockade Tampico, the port for which the ship sailed, and Washington ordered our fleet to prevent such a blockade. Fortunately, Huerta was induced by his advisers to rescind the blockade order, and at the very moment when a conflict between the Mexican Federal gunboats and the American navy seemed imminent, the whole incident reverted to the field of diplomatic discussion at Niagara Falls, Ont. Subsequently, a general order was issued against the shipment of arms and ammunition from American ports to Mexico, which resulted in the holding up of other ships already preparing to follow the lead of the Antilla.

A disturbing report appeared in the press of June 10 to the effect that the population of Mazatlan, a Mexican seaport on the Pacific coast, were starving because of what is practically a siege of that place by the rebels. In consequence, the military governor of Mazatlan is said to have agreed to permit all noncombatants to take refuge with the Constitutionalists, who, in return for food supplies, would probably make recruits of the men. The rebels have shut in the city for several months, but owing to the lay of the land and the strength of the Federal artillery, no general assault has been made.

General Carranza has made his temporary headquarters at Saltillo as a sort of capital for the Constitutionalist party. He has not yet accepted the invitation of the peace mediators to sojourn in their efforts, but it is still expected that eventually he will do so. No fighting of any great importance on Mexican soil has been reported, and rumors and contradictions of rumors concerning Huerta's intentions, his strength and the movement of the various bodies of troops, constitute the bulk of the news.

As the week closes it is recognized that a crisis in the peace negotiations is at hand, but a hopeful tone still pervades the news emanating from Niagara Falls and from Washington.

NEARLY every State in the Union was represented at the International Congress of the Chamber of Commerce and Commercial and Industrial Associations, which convened in Paris, June 8, with one thousand delegates from thirty-seven countries, and representing about 370 associations, including over ninety from the United States, present. This Congress dealt with many subjects of civic importance, including the publication of fraudulent advertising, misleading labels on merchandise, unification of customs certificates throughout the world, and economizing of light by advancing by one hour the time for beginning and closing work from May 1 to October 1, each year. The adaption of our Federal Reserve Bank idea to international interests was discussed.

THE treaty with the Republic of Colombia, which was signed by representatives of both countries in April and submitted to the respective governments for ratification, was ratified by the Colombian Congress, especially convened for the purpose, on June 9, against the objections of a small minority who still clamored for heavier indemnity for the loss of Panama. The United States Congress has not yet acted on the treaty.

Much comment has been excited by the phraseology of the first article of this treaty, which is understood to be in part as follows:

"The government of the United States of America, wishing to put at rest all controversies and differences with the Republic of Colombia arising out of the events from which the present situation on the Isthmus of Panama resulted, expresses, in its own name and in the name of the people of the United States, sincere regret that anything should have occurred to interrupt or mar the relations of cordial friendship that had so long existed between the two nations.

"The government of the Republic of Colombia, in its own name and in the name of the Colombian people, accepts this declaration in the full assurance that every obstacle for the restoration of complete harmony between the two countries will thus disappear."

This language is understood by some as an official apology for this government's attitude toward the revolution of Panama, which resulted in that State becoming independent. It was thought that much political capital might be made out of the debate in the Senate upon that aspect of the treaty. There is also dissatisfaction in some quarters with the agreement to pay Colombia within six months after the exchange of ratifications $25,000,000 gold, United States money.

The treaty, according to the text published in the press, gives Colombia the freedom of the Panama Canal for the passage of troops, materials of war and ships of war, even in case of war between Colombia and another country. There are other provisions decidedly favorable to the prosperity of that republic.

THE late well-known journalist, George Augustus Sala, in his travels through the United States in the early 'sixties noted that in the rack at the side of the railway carriage a Bible was placed for the use of the passengers. What a grand thing it would be if on all the railway lines throughout the world a Bible could be placed in the rack in each carriage for the use of those traveling! How many would be blessed, and the journey made less tedious! And the railway companies in turn would be strengthened all along their equipment, for where the Bible goes, there is blessing and joy.

DEAR MR. EDITOR: Thanks very kindly for the sum of $125 which has just come to hand. We will try to be the best almoner we can in using it for the work of the Master. The terrible news of the disaster to the seal fishery is leaving us very unhappy at present. If we had 250 able-bodied men lost in a city it would have been sad enough, but from our little coast villages we feel it so much more. We are still hoping for the large crew of the Southern Cross. [This vessel never returned.] The terrible anxiety of the poor women day after day, still waiting for news of their loved ones who will probably never come, is most distressing. We are greatly interested in a fund being raised to help mitigate the terrible suffering the sudden homecall of so many men involves. If any of your readers care to help in that matter we shall be delighted to hear from them. I want to tell you at the same time what a magnificent blessing the Seamen's Institute at St. John's is. In the first year of its existence, it has been self-supporting, and 13,000 seamen have slept there. WILFRED T. GRENFELL.

RADIANT LIVES

TEXT "They looked unto Him and were radiant." Ps. 34. 5

A SERMON

BY

Rev. A. B. Simpson, D.D.*

ALL nature is eloquent of God. It is the earliest volume of divine revelation, and still full of illustrations of the more precious volume of his inspired Word. Perhaps there is no more striking illustration in all nature of our text and of the spiritual forces it expresses than the latest discovery of modern science, the wonderful substance called radium. The heat given out by radium is more than three million times greater than the most powerful oxygen blowpipe. A ton of radium, if so large a quantity could ever be obtained, would have an energy equal to one and a half million tons of coal and would carry an Atlantic liner for thirty years. It takes more than thirty centuries for a single grain of radium to exhaust itself, so that it practically is almost endless in its radiant energy. What a wonderful realization this gives us of the higher forces of the spiritual world! If God can work so mightily in the coarser elements of matter, how much greater the possibilities of his grace and power through the Holy Spirit!

And yet this wonderful substance comes from the dark caves of earth and is crystallized from pitchblende, something like the common tar which we tread beneath our feet on the asphalt pavements. What a parable of the grace that can pick us up out of the dust and make us radiant with light and life and power which yet shall be brighter than ten thousand suns!

There are two kinds of radiant bodies, namely, those that shine by their own light and those that reflect borrowed light from a luminous body. The day-star of our firmament represents the first class, and the beautiful evening star the second class. We never can be luminous bodies, but must always shine with reflected light. This is the thought expressed in our beautiful text: "They looked unto Him and were radiant." Their light all came from him and came only when their faces were turned toward his light. When our earth turns away from the sun it is night, but when it turns its face toward the orb of day and looks unto him it is radiant with morning. This thought is finely expressed in the figure which the apostle gives us in the third chapter of II Corinthians, "We reflecting as in a mirror the glory of the Lord, are changed into the same image from glory to glory, even as by the Spirit of the Lord." Are we thus looking to him and reflecting his radiance until like Moses our faces shall shine with the reflection of his glory?

Transparent Temples

But the apostle himself gives us a still finer figure in the next chapter; not merely the reflected light, but the light shining from within the illuminated soul. "For God who commanded the light to shine out of darkness, hath shined in our hearts to give the light of the knowledge of the glory of God in the face of Jesus Christ." Here the figure is not merely reflected light, but internal light, radiating through every avenue of expression and manifestation in a human life. It is the cathedral window which is dark and dead from the outside and gives no sign of its beautiful tints and tracings until the lamps are lighted within and then sheds forth all its manifold glory and all its artistic figures. How we have sometimes seen the light of love, or better still, the light of heaven shine forth from a human countenance when the lamps of the heart were aglow, when the first touch of the joy of salvation had come or when perhaps the vision of celestial glory was opening before the departing spirit.

Those who have seen that look in death
No more could fear to die.

When the Lord Jesus comes to dwell within the consecrated heart the illumination which he brings is represented by the same vivid figure. "I will manifest myself unto him," he says, and the original word for manifest means, "I will shine forth with a glory like the sun." Christ wants not merely to be reflected from our outward conduct but from our inmost spirit. The ancient temple of the sun in the land of the sun-worship was a temple of glass. It was not polished stone or resplendent gold; but it was transparent glass through which the sun himself might enter at every point, and shine forth with his own native radiance. Have we thus received the light that shone out of darkness to shine in our hearts? And are we radiant through his indwelling and outshining life?

Radium gives out six different kinds of energy which the scientists designate by the first six letters of the alphabet, a to f. Shall we see if we cannot find a parallel to this in the various ways in which we can shine for the Lord?

The Light of Truth. Christ came to reveal new spiritual light to this lost world. What a wonderful revelation he has given to us of God, of righteousness, of sin, of salvation, of duty and of the dark and uncertain future upon which he has brought "life and immortality to light through the Gospel." How dark this world would be to-day if he had not come! But are we reflecting this light to others? Have we a message like him and from him to our generation? Are our lives speaking for God, for righteousness and for eternal hope? Are we making him known and real to our fellow men and are our lives radiant with testimony, service and blessing to our age and our race? God has sent each one of us to be a living epistle, known and read of all men, and as one has well said, "Our life is either a Bible or a libel."

Rays of Spiritual Beauty

The Light of Purity. Christ's moral witness to the world was even more important than his message of truth. He first lived his Gospel before he attempted to give it to others. The mightiest thing in all his career was his inexorable righteousness. By it he conquered Satan and won salvation for his people. If the devil could only have overcome him in the wilderness and for one brief moment tempted him to do wrong and step aside from the path of lowly obedience to which he had consecrated himself, his mission would have immediately failed and our justification been impossible. We are accepted before God through the perfect righteousness which he achieved. How wonderful his purity! It was not a hard, cold, dead Pharisaism, but a radiant goodness. It won the admiration and the testimony of his worst enemies and even the disciple that betrayed him, the judge that condemned and the malefactor that hung by his side on the cross gave their last witness to his beautiful and blameless life. And so if the Christ is living in us we shall reflect his divine holiness and his heavenly purity, and it will speak to men as he spoke, condemning the world, convicting of sin and making men hungry for the righteousness of God.

They tell of a teacher who among the children of the slums, instead of preaching to them about clean faces and tidy garments, will sometimes bring a lily into the midst of the dirty crowd and as they gaze upon its spotless whiteness they instinctively look upon their stained garments and unwashed hands. And one by one, it is said, they will sometimes steal away and come back with as much whiteness and cleanliness as their wretched homes can supply. That radiant flower is a silent messenger of purity. Shall we let our light so shine before men that they may see our good works and glorify our Father which is in heaven?

The Light of Moral Loveliness. It is possible to be righteous and yet rigid, rugged and even rude. Of such a man the apostle says that no one would die for him. But for the good man, that is the man with moral charm, some would even dare to die. Christ's purity had this heavenly charm. It was not the righteousness of the Pharisee or the ascetic, but it was as human as it was divine. Even when a child it was said of him that he had favor with God and men. His graciousness attracted at once the sinner and the little child. To those that know him as the spiritual Christ he is "the chief among ten thousand and the altogether lovely." No human art has ever succeeded in perfectly expressing the sweetness of his face and form, and yet there is one head of Christ which has so far approximated to the heavenly ideal that many of us have stopped to gaze upon it until it seemed to speak to our inmost soul. It is said that once a distinguished lawyer in the city of New York seeing it for the first time on the desk of another legal friend, was so haunted by the expression that he came back a little later and asked permission to look at it again. His friend gave him a seat in an adjoining office, and having occasion to go in half an hour later h found this distinguished man kneeling by a chai over Hofmann's head of Christ and weeping like child. "The Boy has conquered me," was his ex planation to his friend, and it was indeed true, fo from that hour he followed that beautiful light o which some one has said:

For oh, the Master is so fair,
His smile so sweet to banished men,
That they who meet him anywhere
Can never rest on earth again.

Are we reflecting the beauty of the Master? Ar we through his grace putting on not only the thing that are honest and the things that are pure, bu also the things that are lovely and the things tha are of good report? Are we arraying ourselves no only in the garments that have been washed an made clean, but also in the jewels which are pol ished through the friction of sorrow and tempta tion? Are we not only obeying the Gospel, bu adorning the Gospel of Jesus Christ in all things our lives not only right but radiant?

It is said that Jesus never smiled. Perhaps h had none of the superficial gaiety of shallower na tures, but his was always a life of peace and joy "Be of good cheer," was his constant message "These things have I spoken unto you that my joy remain in you and that your joy might be full." Even in the dark hour when the cross was jus before him he forgot his own trials, and his mes sage was, "Let not your hearts be troubled." H has come to save us from sorrow as well as sin The world needs the light of our victorious joy. I we can do nothing else for him let us at least re joice evermore and manifest to our fellow men th peace of God that passeth all understanding an defies all misunderstanding.

The Light of the World

The Light of Patience. It is when trial, tempta tion and danger overwhelm us that the joy of th Lord bears its noblest testimony for Christ. I was in the hour and power of darkness, and amid the scorn and cruelty of his enemies, that the Lamb of God won the supreme triumph of his life an death and taught us how through his grace his love in us may still "suffer long and be kind," and stil "believe all things, hope all things, endure al things." This is the only world in which we ca ever glorify Christ by suffering. Shall we glorify him in the fires and shine like the radiant star most brightly when all around is dark?

The Light of Love. Nothing illumines a human face like the light of love. Nothing sheds a sweeter radiance over life than unselfish love. What sweeter memory lives in the recollection of the great majority of men and women than the quiet, tender face and self-sacrificing life of some sweet mother who lived out her life in the children of her affec tion? The pages of human history are irradiated by examples of patriotic love that counted honor and fatherland dearer even than life. It was love that glorified and vivified the life and ministry of the Lord Jesus. Even Napoleon confessed that in this respect there was no glory like the glory of Christ. "Our empires," he said, "are founded upon fear, but Christ's upon love, and to-day there are millions who would die for him." In our Christian lives the mightiest moving force and the brightest radiance must come from love; the love that can stoop to the lowest depths of unworthiness, misery and need; the love that can reach to the farthest breadths of human relationship; the love that can bless its enemies and return good for evil like the Master in the supreme triumph of the garden and the cross. Beloved, how far is our love reaching and our light shining?

AN EVENING PRAYER

AT EVENTIDE I count my blessings o'er,
And lift my heart in gratitude to Thee
For all thy gifts, and for thy presence near;
Now, through the darkness, Lord, watch over me.

And when to me life's eventide shall come,
And earthly things are fading from my sight,
Be thou my guide across the unknown deep
And pilot me to everlasting light.

DAILY MEDITATION

FOR EVERY DAY IN THE YEAR, BASED ON THE WORDS OF JESUS

BY PROFESSOR W. H. T. DAU

SUNDAY, June 28. Matthew 6: 33. "But seek ye first the kingdom of God, and his righteousness; and all these things shall be added unto you." There is one supreme concern with which our Lord wishes to see the hearts of his disciples filled. He loves to observe their interest in heavenly things, the setting up of God's gracious and holy rule in the lives of men, the spread of truth on earth, and the earnest endeavors of his followers to square their conduct with the divine standard of righteousness. The cream of our thought belongs to the business of God, even as he demanded the first-fruits of everything from his ancient covenant people. Our own business comes in the second place. We would simply start our daily tasks at the wrong end, if we began by attending to our earthly affairs first and permitted them to crowd out our Father's business. The result would be the same as when an electrical wire becomes grounded; the valuable current passes off into nothing. But when men make God's business their own, he takes care of their affairs. In God's estimate, our earthly support is a mere bagatelle, something that he "adds," or throws into the bargain. Godliness is profitable unto all things," says the apostle, "having the promise of the life that now is, and of that which is to come."

MONDAY, June 29. Luke 12: 32. "Fear not, little flock; for it is your Father's good pleasure to give you the kingdom." Our seeking of the kingdom of God, too, must be free from disquieting fears and harassing anxieties. True, the hold we have on heavenly things at any time is at best a feeble hold, and there are strong forces pulling and tugging to snatch from us our heavenly treasures of righteousness and peace. We are often off our guard. Our zeal languishes. Will we ever succeed in gaining the goal for which we are striving? Will the kingdom on high ever be ours? What if, in these heavenly things, our efforts too are altogether unavailing? Yes, it is true what the great hymn of the Reformation expresses thus: "With might of ours can nought be done; soon were our loss effected. But for us fights the Valiant One, whom God himself elected. Ask you who is this? Jesus Christ it is." It is he who says to his "little flock," to the little band of believers that seems so defenseless in a worldly view: "Fear not; it is your Father's good pleasure to give you the kingdom." The proper way, then, to seek the kingdom of God and his righteousness is to look and pray for it as a gift.

TUESDAY, June 30. Matthew 6: 34. "Take therefore no thought for the morrow; for the morrow shall take thought for the things of itself. Sufficient unto the day is the evil thereof." When we can read our title clear to our heavenly heritage, we are fortified against the passing anxieties which each fleeting day brings us in our earthly affairs. We will, in trustful reliance upon our Father, take things as they come—sunshine or showers, calm or tempest, joy or grief. The burden of each day shall not be made heavier by our loading it with distressing thoughts of the future, even of the next day. God only knows whether another morrow will dawn for us here. When it comes, our affairs may have assumed an altogether different aspect over night. Our problems may have to be approached from a point from which we had not thought of approaching them before. Or we may awake to find the riddle solved that perplexed us yesterday. Let us not borrow trouble. "Sufficient unto the day is the evil thereof." Within its confines from dawn to dusk let us wrestle with our appointed tasks, in the strength of divine grace, and through the silent night let us nestle in healthful slumber in the divine care until the morning breaks that has no evening and no morrow following after it.

WEDNESDAY, July 1. Matthew 7: 7, 8. "Ask, and it shall be given you; seek, and ye shall find; knock, and it shall be opened unto you: for every one that asketh receiveth; and he that seeketh findeth; and to him that knocketh it shall be opened." Several things may be learned from this text regarding prayer: (1) That God wants us to pray. He commands prayer. We are acting in accordance with his expressed will when we pray, and we do not please him when we omit or refuse to pray. What a sorrow it is for parents when they have a deaf-mute child who cannot express his thoughts and wishes to them! Still greater is the grief of those parents who notice that it is contempt or malice that closes their child's mouth against them! So is God grieved when his children refuse to speak to him. (2) The character of prayer is here described by three words: asking for something that we want, seeking for something that we want very much, knocking for something that we want very much. The insistence and persistency of our prayers is indicated by the climacteric order of these commands. Moreover, these commands imply that we are conscious of our needs, our losses, and our unworthiness, and that we know the Helper. (3) There is a promise here as extensive as the command. To each appeal there is a corresponding answer. Prayer is never in vain. God would forfeit his claim to truthfulness if he were to go back on his own word. His promise is unimpeachable security that our prayer will bring results.

THURSDAY, July 2. Matthew 7: 9-11. "Or what man is there of you, whom if his son ask bread, will he give him a stone? Or if he ask a fish, will he give him a serpent? If ye then, being evil, know how to give good gifts unto your children, how much more shall your Father which is in heaven give good things to them that ask him?" Men's gifts, some one has aptly said, are frequently not according to their means but according to their meanness. They are stingy mites, and may be useless, or even dangerous. From the standpoint of common morality, men in all ages have denounced the ungenerous giver. It is an unwritten law that when we give we must give something that is good in itself and beneficial to the receiver. We may be mistaken in our judgment as to what is really good for our client, but if we are at all sincere in our benefactions, we mean and try to bestow genuine blessings when we give. Shall God do less for his dear children than men, who are naturally evil, will do even for strangers? "Do not err, beloved brethren. Every good gift and every perfect gift is from above, and cometh down from the Father of lights, with whom is no variableness, neither shadow of turning." With unchanging kindness, he drops bounties into our lap, and every bounty is bestowed with a kiss of his unspeakable love.

FRIDAY, July 3. Matthew 7: 12. "Therefore all things whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so to them: for this is the law and the prophets." This "golden rule" is the quintessence of all the commands that God has issued for the regulation of our conduct. Every positive injunction or prohibition uttered by Moses and the prophets is an illustration of this fundamental truth and reducible to this cardinal law. In no way that we can imagine could God have better insured us against lack of understanding, or errors of judgment, or inadequacy of action, in our dealings with our fellow men than by making our own interests the gauge of our affection for others. But we would err, if we were to read from this text a command of self-love, as some have done. The love of self is contrary to the teaching of the Bible. But since it exists in men, and men are conscious of its promptings, God employs it to illustrate what he wants us to do in every one of his commandments. He turns the selfish love of men into the proper channels by directing us to bestow it on others. Others, again, are to bestow their love on us. Thus "every man is to look, not on his own things, but every man also on the things of others."

SATURDAY, July 4. Matthew 7: 13, 14. "Enter ye in at the strait gate: for wide is the gate, and broad is the way, that leadeth to destruction, and many there be which go in thereat: because strait is the gate, and narrow is the way, which leadeth unto life, and few there be that find it." The Latins had a saying: Per aspera ad astra, that is, the road to the stars leads over rough ground. Every one of us remembers the parable of going in at the big or small end of the horn. First comes the day of small things, of enduring hardness, of suffering; afterwards, ease and rest. We advocate this process as a reasonable one in our secular affairs and declare the opposite way foolish and ruinous. This text applies a similar rule to our heavenly interests. First comes humiliation, contrition, sorrow, because of the smitings of the law; afterwards, comforts and delights from the consolations of the Gospel. First, shame and contempt from this wicked world; afterwards, honor and glory from our Lord. First, the loss of all things for Christ's sake; afterwards the gaining of everything with Christ. That is the true method of entering Christianity and ultimately heaven. This way is a terror to the flesh. The other way is very much more inviting at the start, but appalling at the finish. Yes, we can see them going down the broad way of worldliness through the spacious gate of easy morals. It looks very attractive, this gay crowd of men and women, dashing, high-spirited, full of every thought but that of God and eternity, except to scorn both. But follow the pointed finger of Jesus and look toward the goal for which this happy-go-lucky crowd is making.

These Daily Meditations by Professor Dau will appear in each issue during 1914.

GOSPEL BREVITIES FROM MANY POINTS

—BUSINESS MEN, STOCKMEN and farmers of [illegible]eeler, Texas, and the surrounding section [illegible]e organized themselves as a "Gospel Team" [illegible] evangelistic work, their motto being "The [illegible]handle and Oklahoma for Christ."

FIGHTING SIN is enough to keep a pastor [illegible]y the year round, but a letter from a min[illegible]r in Kansas shows that sometimes a pastor [illegible] to fight both sin and starvation simul[illegible]eously. He writes: "My salary is $600 a [illegible]r. Therefore we cannot buy books. It i[illegible]ping the wife and myself busy fighting the [illegible]il and the wolf from our door. I am sure [illegible]e are many good people who have books who will be glad to give them to persons situated as I am, if they know the facts." He may be addressed Minister, Box 181, Parker, Kan., by any interested reader of this paper.

AN ERRONEOUS OPINION seems to have become current that Japan is able to take care of her own people religiously. Even the most hopeful Japanese leaders recognize that the task is too great for the Japanese church, and that an addition to the present missionary force is necessary. There are practically forty millions of people in Japan who are yet unreached by the Christian message. This work calls for large reinforcements. Four times the present number of Japanese evangelists are required to put into the field one worker to ten thousand people. In view of the conditions the recent annual meeting of the Conference of Federated Missions resolved to appoint a representative committee to present to missionary societies and others the urgent needs of evangelistic work in Japan.

—MASON CITY, IOWA, has an active city missionary in the person of Rev. Eli Austen, who is stirring up so many interesting things the local paper is obliged to give considerable space to his work. Not long ago, while Mr. Austen was holding services in the jail, the officer on duty was called away, and forgetting his visitor left him locked in with the prisoners for several hours. Mr. Austen visits institutions and homes and goes into the highways and byways with the Gospel. His unique office is recognized by the ministerial association.

—AFTER SEVENTEEN YEARS of evangelistic work in and about Bourgas, Bulgaria, Rev. K. J. Pachejieff, an alumnus of Auburn Seminary, is now in America seeking funds with which to erect a much needed church at that place, and for the extension of his work. The American Board at Boston commends this work, as does also President Stewart of Auburn.

A WEEK IN THE WORLD'S NEWS

To Compensate Workingmen for Injuries

THE New York State Workmen's Compensation Act, becoming operative July 1, greatly changes the conditions of liability for injuries sustained in the course of employment. Being mandatory, it will be illegal for employers and employees to agree to waive its conditions, and employers must insure their liabilities in one of four methods provided by the act. Employers may not plead contributory negligence on the part of the employee, nor that the risk was willingly assumed; compensation must be paid for disability or death "resulting from an accidental, personal injury, sustained by the employee and arising out of and in the course of his employment," excepting when due to wilful intention of the employee or to intoxication. Forty-two groups of hazardous occupations are specified as covered by the act; farm labor, domestic service, and enterprises not engaged in by the employer for gain, are excepted. An employee's weekly earnings, even though paid by the day, constitute the basis for compensation, the amount of the latter being two-thirds of the weekly wage, but not to be less than $5 nor more than $15. If permanently disabled, compensation continues for the rest of his entire life. In the case of permanent disability to a minor, the normal increase that might have taken place in his wages may be considered by the commission. Comprehensive schedules provide for practically every possible contingency, and the act is expected to end litigation by establishing an equitable rate of indemnity and making the compensation automatic.

American Wedding in Spain

THE civil wedding of Kermit Roosevelt to Miss Belle Wyatt Willard, daughter of the American ambassador to Spain, was performed June 10 at Madrid in the presence of Colonel Roosevelt and the ambassador, by a magistrate in the office of the chief of police. Dinner at the embassy following was attended by a representative of the king and other Spanish personages, who, as well as the king and queen, added gifts to the many valuable ones received from the United States. The religious ceremony took place June 11, after which Colonel Roosevelt left for London to set the Royal Geographic Society right respecting his South American river.

Regulating the World's Clock

THE interesting object of a proposed International Time Association, namely, the unification of time throughout the world by wireless and other signals, is believed by scientists to have been brought more nearly in sight by the ratification in the Senate, June 9, of a convention already subscribed to by twenty-four other countries, providing for the organization of such an association. The United States Government at present sends time signals at regular intervals to vessels of the navy and elsewhere, and will continue to do so even though a central station for systematically giving all points of the civilized world accurate, world-standard time may be established.

Huge Strike Disturbs Italian Cities

BECAUSE of the shooting by policemen of several workmen during a labor demonstration at Ancona, Italy, a general strike throughout the country was proclaimed, as a protest against governmental repressive measures, and already great mobs have come in contact with the troops and police in various parts of Italy. Stores have been closed and newspapers suspended in some places, and much property destroyed. The press of June 10 reported that American and English tourists were crowding out of the country. In the larger cities and towns work had practically ceased at that time. Political motives are ascribed by the government as back of this movement.

Denmark Moves Toward Democracy

BY VOTE of 102 to 6, with six members absent, the Lower House of the Denmark Parliament passed a constitutional amendment bill, June 9, greatly lessening the Crown's prerogatives in respect to selection of members of the Upper House and giving the working classes hitherto having little voice in the matter opportunity to be heard; woman suffrage is granted. The Upper House obstructing the enactment of the bill into law, the government will advise the king to dissolve that body and permit the election of new members.

"Down with the Trusts"

THE trio of anti-trust bills known as the Administration program passed the House June 5 by overwhelming majorities. Most of the work had been done in committee. The three measures will probably be merged into one in the Senate; they are the Railroad Capitalization Bill, giving the Interstate Commerce Commission control of railroad stock issues and preventing interlocking directorates; the Interstate Trade Commission Bill, creating a commission with vast powers over corporations engaging in interstate commerce, excepting those subject to the Interstate Commerce Commission; and the Clayton Omnibus Bill complementary to the Sherman and other anti-monopoly laws. It is the latter measure which exempts labor unions and some others from the category of "illegal combinations in restraint of trade." It also forbids injunctions against striking, peaceful picketing, and primary boycotts. All three measures are expected to benefit business immensely.

Far-reaching Railroad Rate Decision

THE work of the Federal Interstate Commerce Commission and of the rate bureaus of the railroads of the country have been relieved of the embarrassment caused by conflicting rulings on the part of State commissions, by a United States Supreme Court decision in the so-called Shreveport case, handed down June 8. This case grew out of conditions in brief as follows: Shreveport, La., is about forty miles from the Texas border and 230 miles from Houston by two affiliated railroad lines, and 190 miles from Dallas by a third. Shreveport merchants compete with those of Dallas and Houston for the trade of the intervening territory. Freight picked up and laid down within Texas could be carried 160 miles eastward from Dallas, to cite one example, for 60 cents, whereas that sum would carry the same class of freight from Shreveport only about 55 miles into Texas. Shreveport complained, and the Interstate Commission ruled that there was discrimination, and ordered equal rates to be maintained. The Texas railroads appealed and the decision on that appeal finds that when State rates discriminate against interstate traffic they become subject to the Interstate Commerce Commission. Some publicists profess to see an invasion of State rights in the decision, but railroad men in the main acclaim it as a long step in the direction of better business conditions.

Senate Passes Tolls Repeal

AFTER almost ten weeks of consideration of the Simms Bill, passed by the House, March 31, repealing the exemption provision in the Panama Canal Act, by which American coastwise ships were exempted from tolls, the Senate on June 11, by a vote of 50 to 35, also passed that bill with an amendment, known as the Simmons-Norris amendment, reading as follows:

> That the passage of this act shall not be construed or held as a waiver or relinquishment of any right the United States may have under the treaty with Great Britain, ratified the 21st of February, 1902, or the treaty with the Republic of Panama, ratified February 26, 1904, or otherwise, to discriminate in favor of its vessels by exempting the vessels of the United States or its citizens from the payment of tolls for passage through said canal, or as in any way waiving, impairing, or affecting any right of the United States under said treaty, or otherwise, with respect to the sovereignty over or the ownership, control, and management of said canal and the regulation of the conditions or charges of traffic through the same.

At no time has there been serious doubt of the passage of the bill, although opposed by many prominent statesmen, the President himself being wholly committed to it. The amendment has not yet received his approval, and must also pass the House. Many amendments were offered and defeated, most of them designed to establish the right of the United States to discriminate in the matter of Panama Canal tolls in favor of ships of this government and its citizens. It is commonly believed that the amendment bill will be passed by the House and signed by the President, and thus remove from the Panama Canal Act the clause which is objectionable to many on the ground that it violates the Hay-Pauncefote treaty with Great Britain under which the canal was built.

NATION ACCEPTS MONUMENT TO CONFEDERATE DEAD

THE United Daughters of the Confederacy on June 4 presented to the nation a magnificent monument erected by them to Confederate dead. The monument was unveiled in the Arlington National Cemetery in the presence of President Wilson, who made the principal address, and a great throng of people, including many veterans of both the Blue and the Gray. The Stars and Stripes were draped with the flags of the Confederacy over the monument and about the speakers' stand. Mrs. Daisy McLauren Stevens, president general of the United Daughters of the Confederacy, made the speech of presentation. The President reminded his hearers that the monument was originally proposed by a United States President, who had been a distinguished officer in the Union Army, it was authorized by Congress, the cornerstone was laid by a President elected by the votes of the party which had sustained the Union in the Civil War, and now was being accepted for the united nation by a Southern-born President. "Am I mistaken in supposing that nothing of this sort could have occurred in anything but a democracy?" he asked; and also said: "I bid you turn with me your faces to the future, quickened by the memories of the past, but nothing to do with the contests of the past. . . . It is our duty and our privilege . . . standing shoulder to shoulder to lift the burdens of mankind in the future, and show the paths of freedom to all the world." Colonel Robert E. Lee, grandson of General Robert E. Lee, was among the speakers; the sculptor is Moses Ezekiel, a Confederate veteran. A furious rainstorm toward the close of the President's address drove every one to shelter.

SUNDAY SCHOOLS IN CONVENTION

IARION LAWRANCE

SUNDAY school leaders from all over this continent are now in Chicago for the fourteenth International Sunday School Convention, to consider the conquest of North America for Christ. Four thousand four hundred regular and alternate delegates were expected from their respective State and provincial Sunday School Associations. Other thousands will attend to participate in the monster parade in which 50,000 men are expected to march Saturday afternoon, June 27. "Jesus shall reign," the keynote of the convention, will be sounded in the songs that will be sung by the great choruses, and in the addresses that will be delivered by Dr. F. B. Meyer, of London; Marion Lawrance, Bishop J. C. Hartzell, J. A. McDonald, editor of the Toronto Globe; Fred B. Smith, and a host of other speakers.

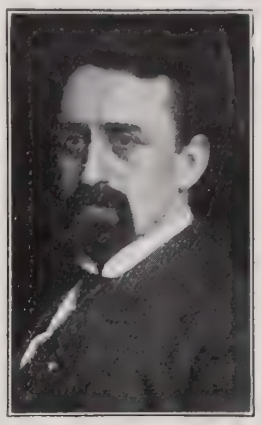
Not only will the new Medinah Temple, Ontario and Cass Streets, with its seating capacity filled to its limit of about six thousand, ring with the slogan of the convention, but twelve of the largest churches in Chicago and suburbs will be the scenes of a ıultaneous duplication of the convention program each even-. Every phase of Sunday school activity will be considered in conferences under the guid-e of the experts of the Inter-ional Sunday School Associa-n and of the denominational nday school boards, and there l be conferences on evangelism, -al Sunday schools, Sunday ool music, social service, tem-rance, and purity. Special con-ences will be held for workers ong college students, among eign-speaking people, for min-ers, superintendents and field rkers. Only once before, in 7, has the International Sun-y School Convention been held Chicago, a city whose Sunday ool history is replete with wide erest.

The first Sunday School Insti-e was held in Chicago in 1865; first system of Uniform Les-s was produced there; the first nday School Teachers' Jour-was published there; and the t central offices of the Inter-ional Sunday School Associa-n were located in Chicago in 7.

n preparing the program, the gram committee kept in mind varied needs of the millions members belonging to the 3,459 Sunday schools spread r the whole continent, and di-ted by 1,670,846 officers and chers. Fred A. Wells is airman of this committee, and arion Lawrance, recognized as best informed Sunday school n in the world, is the secretary.

Mr. Lawrance had been in business for sixteen years before he entered the regular business of promoting Sunday school work, and has served since 1899 in his present position as the general secretary of the International Sunday School Association. For four years he was also the American general secretary of the World's Sunday School Association. He has toured many parts of the world in the interests of the Sunday school business.

The association, through its subsidiary State, provincial and county associations, conducts an nually approximately 20,000 conventions, has about 300 paid workers who devote all their time to Sunday school organization activities, 1,800,000 volunteer workers who serve as superintendents and teachers in 173,459 Sunday schools with an aggregate membership of more than 17,000,000 persons. The association issues tens of thousands of leaflets, all in the interest of making the Sunday school work of North America efficient. It has three watchwords—organization, co-operation, evangelization.



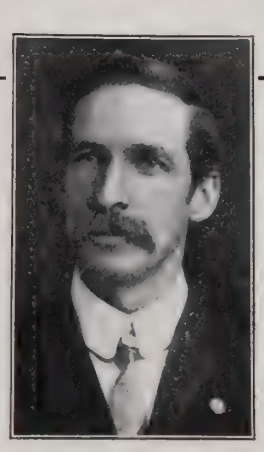
W. C. PEARCE

W. C. Pearce, associate general secretary, dean of the Training School, and superintendent of the Adult Division of the International Sunday School Association, is a lawyer by profession. In January, 1912, he was called to become the associate general secretary. Since that time he has continued to hold the three positions. In the course of a year Mr. Pearce travels from forty to fifty thousand miles, into every State and province of the United States and Canada, making addresses and attending conferences.

A Sunday school exhibit, showing all the devices employed to increase attendance, and the varied work of graded students will be displayed in the convention building. A festival concert will be given Friday night, June 26, under the auspices of the Cook County Sunday School Associa tion in the Auditorium Theater. The May festival chorus of a thousand voices, said to be the largest ladies' chorus in the world, will sing special selections composed for the occasion.

A historical pageant will be given Saturday night, June 27, in which twenty-seven Sunday schools will participate, showing the methods employed of teaching the Scriptures from the time of the patriarchs to the present time. Reunions, banquets, denominational rallies have been arranged for Saturday night. For over a year past a committee of Cook County Sunday School leaders, headed by William A. Sherer as chairman, has met every week to provide for the requirements of the convention.

TO TRAIN SUNDAY SCHOOL WORKERS



PRACTICAL COURSE BY FRANK L. BROWN

At the Lake Geneva (Wis.) Training School for Sunday School Workers last summer, a series of lectures by Mr. Frank L. Brown suggested the greatest need of the modern Sunday school, namely, a trained official leadership.

A plan was presented for solving this need. The eagerness of Sunday school workers to know this plan testifies to the widespread need for help to match a trained teaching force with a trained official force.

The Educational Committee of the International Sunday School Association has taken up the matter of plans for such training. In city institutes, the broadening of the scope of Sunday school training to include those charged with its administration has made marked progress.

Conventions, international and State, are giving a place on the programs for the presentation of executive leadership training, a training involving not simply the superintendent, but the whole staff of workers made necessary by our modern Sunday school organization.

In THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, dating from this International Convention, the plan for the training of the leadership of the Sunday school will be presented through the year in alternate weeks by Mr. Brown. These articles will cover the whole range of need, Superintendent, Assistant Superintendent, Secretary, Librarian, Chorister, Department Superintendents, Chairmen of the School Committees, Missionary, Temperance, Social Service, Special Days, Recreation, Publicity, etc. Each of these articles will treat of the work of one officer or committee member, and will have material for the small as well as the large school.

In addition, Mr. Brown, who has been for thirty-three years a teacher and superintendent, will conduct a "Round Table," to which can be brought questions upon the problems of Sunday School workers, either teachers or officers. These "Round Table" answers will alternate with the leadership training plans suggested.

"AND THEIR WORKS DO FOLLOW THEM"

Mrs. Alfred Cookman

NOT many figures remain which directly link modern Methodism with the early days of the pioneers. The recent death of s. Alfred Cookman, at the age of hty-nine, recalls strikingly to many arts and minds the atmosphere of e Methodism of a half century ago, ich retained many of the character-ics of the earliest days of the Wes-movement in England and the be-nnings of Methodism in the New orld—beginnings which were co-cident with the beginnings of nerica.

Alfred Cookman, born in 1828, was e of the great and greatly loved ures of the Methodism of the fifties d sixties. He was one of the found-s of Ocean Grove, one of the leaders the nation-wide Holiness Movement, character of most unusual sweetness d charm, a preacher and soul win-r of great power. In 1851 he mar-d Miss Annie Brunner, daughter of braham Brunner, a prominent Meth-ist of Columbia, Pa., where Alfred okman was himself born.

Alfred Cookman began his ministry fore he was twenty years of age and d in 1871, at the early age of forty-three. One of his sons, Rev. William Wilberforce Cookman, is a minister and another, Frank Simpson Cookman is an Episcopal clergyman. His brother, John Emory Cookman, was also a noted Methodist preacher.

Mrs. Cookman was president of the Elim Association of Ocean Grove from its foundation until the time of her death. She was widely known and greatly loved and her life of true piety will be a lure to many souls to the better land. At her request her body was interred in the same grave with that of her husband at the Laurel Hill Cemetery, Philadelphia.

Since Yesterday

WHERE has he gone since yesterday—
The friend who left us here?
To-night he seems so far away
Who yester-eve was near.
No map of ours, on sea or land,
His journeyings may trace;
We only know he's reached his home
And seen his Father's face.

And oh! he knows since yesterday,
And he'll be learning fast;
The mists have all been cleared away,
The mysteries are past.
The sun of truth he sought so long
Unshadowed glows for him,
And nevermore one low'ring cloud
Its radiance may dim.

And he has grown since yesterday,
And he'll be growing still;
The bonds of time and sense and space
That irked his eager will,
Were dropped like shackles from the soul
In that first upward flight;
The weary body frets no more,
The spirit, freed and light.

O dear, familiar yesterday!
O sad and strange to-day!
Yet who would call the glad soul back
To rouse the resting clay?
Or who could wish that he might know
Our morrow's pain and strife,
When he who, here, so longed to live
At last has entered Life?

ANNIE JOHNSON FLINT.

A Great King's Daughter

"MRS. MARY LOWE DICKINSON, aged seventy-five years, died on Monday, the eighth of June." That is how the printed notices read, but thousands are writing an epitaph for her with loving hands and tear-filled eyes. For the passing of Mrs. Dickinson is the passing of one of the foremost Christian workers of our times.

Mary Lowe Dickinson was well-known by people who have read her poems, her articles, or the little magazine that she edited, The Silver Cross. She was the general secretary of the order of the King's Daughters from the time of its organization (1886) until her death. Our readers have often seen her name in the pages of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, of which she was a frequent contributor.

A sweet poet, a true philosopher, and withal a loving helper of others, Mrs. Dickinson will not soon be forgotten. The final verse from one of her own hymns will perhaps most adequately illustrate her life—and death:

Drawn by Thy spirit now
Ourselves we bring:
Our prayer, and song, and vow,
Our souls take wing.
Forth from this blessed place
Lead us to show Thy grace;
Write on each lifted face:
"Child of the King."

Immediate Blessing

THE word immediate has two meanings: instantaneous, and without medium or intervention. In both these senses is the word truly applied to the manner of God's blessing.

Pope wrote sadly:

> Man never is, but always to be, blest.

But this is not the Bible plan. "O Lord of Hosts, blessed is the man that trusteth in thee." The trust and the blessing are simultaneous. As soon as and so long as we trust we are blessed.

It is sad to realize the wistful, hungering desire felt by so many hearts for the divine touch in their lives. Why do they not receive it? The answer is most simple. Because they are not expecting it. They may be expecting it to-morrow, or next week, or next month, or next year. But they will not receive it till they expect it now. Now is God's time.

That is faith. To recognize the fact that God wishes to bless us this very instant, and to receive the blessing by ceasing to doubt. Doubt forever postpones the blessing; faith brings it.

The simple Methodist, Dinah, come to interview the poor little murderess Hettie, in George Eliot's story of Adam Bede, had to suggest relief that could be applied instantly. She told of Jesus, and the girl was blest. Bishop Fowler used to tell of visiting a man dying with cholera. There was no time for argument or preliminaries. Only time to say: "Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, and thou shalt be saved." It brought the blessing to the dying man, as it had brought it to the Philippian jailer long before. It will bring it to any soul that will refuse to doubt it. So all along the way, every fresh blessing comes as we make way for it by faith and receive without delay the fulfilment of some precious promise we have found.

Again, immediate means direct: without mediation, or agency. When Jesus asked the man at the pool if he would be made whole his mind slunk back to the failures of the past. He had never found any one to help him into the pool. Jesus smiled. Could not the man realize that since He himself had come there was no longer any need of attendant, or pool, or angel? "Arise! Take up thy bed!" That was all.

So Jesus, when once we have heard of him, needs no help in blessing us. Nothing that we can do, nothing that any one else can do, will bring the blessing. It is waiting for help from others or from ourselves that delays the blessing. It is when we are ready to cry:

> All my trust on thee is stayed,
> All my help from thee I bring,

that the blessing comes.

The touch of God! How wonderful it is! How independent of all other matters! If the lightning were to strike you it would need no help. "God shall bless us." Base your claim and your trust on that. Then his blessing will make you fruitful, useful, victorious. "God shall bless us; and all the ends of the earth shall praise him."

A Test of Self-Government

WHETHER or not the Filipinos have reached that stage in civilization which qualifies them for self-government may soon be tested. A bill prepared by the Congressional Committee on Insular Affairs and understood to be an Administration measure, looks to the establishment of a territorial form of government for the islands, somewhat similar to that of Alaska, the legislature to consist of a Senate of twenty-five and a lower House of one hundred members, both elected by the people. An American governor-general will have the veto power over the acts of the native legislature. While the two Houses will make laws for the islands, they will have no power to make treaties, or regulate tariffs. There will be a voting qualification which will probably exclude a large proportion of the semi-civilized population, thus limiting the ballot to the progressive and enlightened. As the measure is designed as a "try-out" at self-government, it sets no definite date for actual independence. That day may be many years off, but the probationary experiment will be excellent training meanwhile. It is a step in the direction of the ultimate fulfilment of our pledge to give the islands self-government when their progress warrants it. To do this prematurely is not even contemplated. Before the independence of the islands is finally granted, their neutralization must be secured by treaties with the other Powers. Further, land for coaling stations and naval bases is to be retained by our government as a guarantee of Filipino security and protection. It is understood that the Administration indulges no expectation of early Filipino independence, and may not even press the probationary measure this season.

New Sunday School Plans

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is entering upon a new era of Sunday school work. Arrangements have been made to connect the Sunday School Department with the great, modern, scientific, world-wide Sunday School movement. While THE CHRISTIAN HERALD refuses to give up anything that is vital in the ways and beliefs of the past, it is reaching forward for new methods and new skill in bringing the facts of the old faith to the new needs of the new generations. Mr. Frank L. Brown, General Secretary of the World's Sunday School Association and superintendent of the great three-thousand-member Sunday school of the Bushwick Avenue M. E. Church, Brooklyn, will have an article in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD every week, one week answering practical questions asked by Sunday school workers and on the alternate weeks giving a remarkable course of lectures on Sunday School methods, a special announcement of which will be found on another page. Mr. Amos R. Wells, the popular and beloved Christian Endeavor and Sunday school leader, will contribute regularly, giving practical interpretation to the Sunday school lessons. Arrangements are being made with Dr. Frank E. Hoskin of Beirut, Syria, an expert in Oriental science, to give every week an explanation of Scriptural and Oriental terms. Other contributors to the Sunday school page will be Arthur H. Howland, Rev. Edwin Whittier Caswell, and others, whose names will be announced later.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD will earnestly endeavor to be a real help to Sunday school workers and teachers everywhere. Nor will the pupils themselves be forgotten. Every week something will be found which will help them to learn the weekly lesson and give them pleasure and inspiration in their Sunday school life. THE CHRISTIAN HERALD division of the Sunday school army is already a large one. With the co-operation of our readers w hope to make it grow still greater!

Remember the Children

MONT-LAWN, our beautiful Children's Hom among the Rockland Hills along the Hudson, b gins this summer its twenty-first season of servic among the children of the poor. When the late D Klopsch founded it in 1894, it was an old-fashione farm homestead, with a few dilapidated building That first summer it took in several hundred litt ones from the city tenements and gave them a fres air outing. Generous friends soon became intereste and the readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD thoug all these years have been its enthusiastic suppor ers. Considerably more than 40,000 children hav been welcomed at Mont-Lawn since the beginnin of the work, and it has been a means of healt recreation and blessing to them all. It is mai tained by voluntary contributions and we are look ing confidently to all of its friends and patrons t give it a thought of remembrance when they a planning for the summer. Make one little chil your guest at Mont-Lawn and your own holida will be all the more enjoyable.

The Latest Phase of Militant Suffragism

MILITANT suffragism is at its height i England. Not only have the patience an forbearance of the government been stretched t the breaking point, but if the vandal acts of th "wild women" should be longer permitted, the peo ple themselves could hardly be restrained from turn ing the situation into a tragedy. The plain truth i that the whole country has become exasperate over the continued lawlessness of the militants For over a year past they have burned buildings slashed valuable pictures, defaced statuary, as saulted high officials, and even terrorized royalt with threats of kidnapping a young prince. The have done a thousand other things which, save fo the clement policy the authorities adopted, woul have subjected them to protracted terms in prison Not till a week ago, however, did they cast to th winds the principle of respecting the sanctity o human life. "We have tried all other ways," pro tested one of them; "now we are going to fight and you can allow us to be killed." Nobody bu the women have any thought of killing, and th outbreak of homicidal mania is to be stopped befor it goes too far. Wholesale arrests will now be th order of the day, and the intimation is given tha forcible feeding will very likely be resorted to i all cases, and that offenders against law and orde will not be permitted to "hunger-strike," or t hope longer for release under the "Cat and Mouse Act. It is a very grim commentary on the presen situation when even English pastors have not hes tated to say, if these frenzied recalcitrants ar determined to starve themselves to death, the au thorities "should let them die." There is littl danger, however, of such a climax and the genera belief is that, when the law is resolutely applie and a number of the offenders punished by wa of example, the frenzy of militant suffragism wi evaporate.

The Uplift of Optimism

HE WHO thinks the world is full of good peopl and kindly blessings is much richer than h who thinks the contrary. Each man's imaginatio largely peoples the world for himself. Some live i a world peopled with princes of the royal blood some in a world of paupers and privation. Yo have your choice.

This is a big, busy world. It cares precious littl what you think of it, or what faults or troubles yo find in it. It is a choice that concerns yoursel more than all others combined, whether you grouc in the gloom, the companion of hateful goblins, o stride in the sunshine, seeing smiles and catchin shreds of song.

Men and women in God's image were not mad as whining, groveling beings. They were made t stand erect, mentally as well as physically; to labo well and joyously; to take the gifts of providence whether they be joy or sorrow, and bear them cheer fully and with courage; to add ever something t the world's store of happiness, if it be only a smile

Look up! See how flooded with sunshine thi beautiful world is when faced with smiling eyes.

If you would win anything, do anything, be any thing, don't whine.

Canaries Save Miners' Lives

CANARY birds are now among the chief aids of the United States Bureau of Mines in the rescue of entombed miners, and it is estimated that during the few years they have been used, more than five thousand lives have been saved. After the terrible disaster in the Monongah mine in West Virginia in 1907, in which 356 men were killed, the United States Bureau of Mines determined that its pressing duty was to rescue miners from the after perils of explosions. So effective has been the work that the average annual death toll in the mining industry has been cut down from 3,000 to 2,000 men, or from seven men to every million tons of coal to 4.25 men for the same quantity. A good percentage of this life-saving has been through the use of canary birds. The leader of the rescue party is equipped with an ordinary brass bird-cage, in which a wide-awake canary hops. The bird is taken into the mine under the ever-watchful eyes of the leader of the rescue party. As long as the bird continues to chirp and hop about the rescue party continues on its way; but just as soon as the bird's activity begins to waver, the progress of the party is halted; the leader tightens his helmet to make sure that no coal damp gets into his lungs, and the party retraces its steps, carefully watching the physical condition of the bird until at last they reach a spot where it revives. Here one of the rescue party is left with the bird to refresh it with his supply of oxygen and to await the return of the rest of the party with such victims as they may be able to find. The imprisoned miners, usually unconscious, are brought to where the canary, again become lively, is stationed. The sufferers are then taken to the surface and to the doctors for treatment. If the canary at any time shows signs of discomfort, it is taken to a place where it becomes lively again, and thus the place of safety for the men is indicated. The canary is then taken back to the mine-car, where it is petted and kept in good physical condition until the next emergency calls for its services. Here is the Bible record of birds saving human life in the feeding of the prophet:

And the ravens brought him bread and flesh in the morning, and bread and flesh in the evening; and he drank of the brook. (I Kings 17: 6.)

Child Falls into Subway

A TRAP-DOOR leading to a subway excavation on Lexington Avenue, between One Hundred and Twenty-fifth and One Hundred and Twenty-sixth Streets, New York City, attracted the attention of a ten-year-old boy, as he was taking a walk with his father and mother up the avenue the other afternoon. The little fellow raised the trap-door, looked into the dark hole and suddenly lost his balance and plunged into it. The cries of the father and mother brought a patrolman to the scene, who descended into the hole, and, at the bottom, sixty-three feet below, found the boy unconscious and fatally injured with a fractured skull. There are trap-doors everywhere along the streets of the city and the roads of the country, into which children, and grown-up people as well, look, and into which they easily fall. Parents, public authorities and the church should take every precaution to safeguard children and reduce moral dangers to the minimum, thus fulfilling the prophecy:

He will deliver his soul from going into the pit, and his life shall see the light. (Job 33: 28.)

A Wireless Fog Gun

A WIRELESS electric system for the control of signals at sea has just been announced, which is claimed has demonstrated its value by careful experimentation, and will prevent some of the disasters of shipwreck that are so appalling. The device is an apparatus connected with an automatic fog gun erected on an isolated beacon in mid-sea, which can be so charged and worked from signals on shore as to keep up a continuous firing for a long time and thus give the warning needed. Science is giving itself up more and more to the saving of human life on earth and ocean. The salvation of spiritual life is of paramount importance.

I am come that they might have life, and that they might have it more abundantly. (John 10: 10.)

Conductor of Long Service

ON a fast train going west from New York, a man passed down the aisle of the car, taking tickets and cash. He was rather heavy-set, and of fine physical proportions, with an excellent face. He had on a white cap with the brass plate in front with the word "Conductor" on it. His gray mustache and dark uniform accentuated the crimson of the rose he wore on the lapel of his coat. On his left arm there was a gold star well down toward the wrist, and there were two bands of gold braid just below it. A minister on the train, whose ticket he was taking, said to him: "Does that star mean five years of service?" "No," said the conductor; "it means twenty-five years of service, and the two bands five more years each." The minister said: "Do you mean you have had thirty-five years of continuous service on this road?" He replied: "Yes, and two more years are due on another band. I have been thirty-seven years continuously on this road." The minister said: "Will you kindly tell me what are the qualifications of a first-class conductor, who can have such a term of service on so important a road?" He said: "First, willingness to obey the orders of superiors to the letter, and to do it promptly and with an appetite. Second, punctuality. I made it my business to be in my place at the moment, any hour of the day or night, and whenever it was in my power, to start and make my stations and terminal on time. Third, the treatment of passengers. I always treated them as I would wish them to treat me. I was always patient and considerate with women and children, remembering that my mother is a woman, and that I was once a child. A quality I perhaps should have mentioned at first is to feel a deep personal interest in the road. There was a fearful blizzard; the trolley lines were all tied up, and on the morning when a hundred conductors were to have shown up at the Philadelphia station, only five reported. I was one of them. Four of the five were gray-headed. I was sent out with a crew of from 300 to 500 men and spent a day and a night in the work of clearing the tracks. My superiors complimented me, and I said, 'Why do so? I have a personal interest in the road. It has given bread and butter to me and mine; if I owned it, I could not love it more or work harder for it.'" What a suggestion here to loyalty and constancy in the divine life in answer to this injunction:

Therefore, my beloved brethren, be ye steadfast, unmovable, always abounding in the work of the Lord. (I Cor. 15: 58.)

OPENING OF AMERICAN UNIVERSITY

THE American University at Washington, D. C., under the auspices of the Methodist Episcopal Church, was formally opened on May 27 with imposing exercises. Bishop McDowell said among other things: "We are to-day formally inaugurating a notable experiment in higher education. Nothing like this has been planned or tried on our soil. We propose at least four unique, distinct lines: (1) The opening of the rich materials of education and research afforded by the government to the students of the world under competent guidance; (2) by a carefully devised system of scholarships and fellowships, the opening of the graduate instruction of the world for select young men and women; (3) the creation of a body of scholars gathered from everywhere, sent everywhere, united here as fellows, recognized and pledged to humanity's service and the larger uses of the largest learnings; (4) the creation of lectureships for Washington and elsewhere and the making of a literature which, in ample and steady stream, will refresh the life of the republic and the world." Appropriate addresses were made by President Wilson, Secretary Bryan, Secretary Daniels, Bishop J. W. Hamilton, the Chancellor Frank Hamilton and others. The physical appointments are worth between three and four millions of dollars, and those having the matter in charge are expecting to raise the rest of the money needed to carry out the new plan promised at the opening. How important and how necessary is education to the prosperity and happiness of the individual and the nation! We are reminded in this opening of these words: "Wisdom hath builded her house, she hath hewn out her seven pillars." (Prov. 9: 1.)

Cooper Union's Commencement

AT THE commencement exercises of Cooper Union, New York, the astounding statement was made that 5,000 young men and women had been excluded from the schools at the beginning of the term because of the lack of room. There were 8,400 applications, of whom only 3,400 could be accommodated in the class-rooms of the Hewitt Building Annex. The total expenses of the school last year amounted to $209,816. The class of 1910 (General Science Course) presented a memorial tablet for the late Professor William A. Anthony of that department. Professor Anthony was a graduate of the Sheffield School at Yale, had established at Cornell University the first electrical course in Europe or America, and with others at Cornell had constructed the first electrical dynamo. During the past fifty years, the brains of the world have not gone out into the learned professions, or into literature or art, so largely as into the channels of the mechanical arts, and the marvelous inventions that have multiplied the conveniences of civilized living have been the result. Our nation has marked the singular intellectual progress of the workingmen. Five thousand applicants turned away from the Cooper Union schools is an evidence of that progress, and wealth, so ready to help the cause of education, should immediately remedy the difficulty. The Scriptures dignify manual labor, and Christianity is honored ever in a Carpenter as its Founder.

Is not this the carpenter? (Mark 6: 3.)

The Child and the Poem

DR. CHARLES W. ELIOT, president emeritus of Harvard, has selected three poems which he says every child should know. They are "The Village Blacksmith," by Henry Wadsworth Longfellow; "Abou Ben Adhem," by Leigh Hunt, and "To a Waterfowl," by William Cullen Bryant. He quotes the verse:

He hears his daughter's voice,
Singing in the village choir,
And it makes his heart rejoice.
It sounds to him like her mother's voice
Singing in paradise.

"Now, any child eight to ten years old," he adds, "will take that all in and will learn from it that the blacksmith had a daughter who could sing, and that she sang sweetly in the village choir; and the blacksmith had had a wife, whom he loved tenderly, and she was dead, and she sang with him, and now she was singing in a happy next world, in paradise, and the blacksmith liked to go to church because he heard his daughter, who reminded him of her mother. All that is in that little verse, and it is a beautiful picture of some of the best parts of human experience." The universal heart responds to the love of a husband for a wife, to the love of parents for a child, to a heaven of beauty, joy and melody into which our loved ones have gone.

Eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, neither have entered into the heart of man, the things which God hath prepared for them that love him. (I Cor. 2: 9.)

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

THE LESSON IN LIFE

By Amos R. Wells, Litt.D., LL.D.

THEY had their labor question, it seems, in ancient Palestine as well as in modern America. Christ's labor parables might have been spoken before a labor union to-day. Indeed, labor-union leaders often refer to Christ as the first agitator for the rights of labor, and in the same breath rant against the church for not following his example.

Now observe our parable. The owner of the vineyard early in the morning hired some laborers at about $1.50 a day. At nine o'clock he took on some more, agreeing to pay them "what was right." At noon and at three in the afternoon he did the same, and even added some to his force of workmen at five o'clock, only an hour before closing. At six o'clock he paid them all, and gave every man $1.50.

Then arose the labor question. Enter the walking delegate. Said the men hired at 6 A.M.: "The last you hired have worked only an hour, and you give them $1.50. We have worked twelve hours, and ought to get much more." So said they all. In 1914 there would have been a strike, a boycott, a blacklisting of that employer. For he simply asked: "Did I not agree to pay you $1.50? And if I choose to pay these others the same, though they have worked a shorter time, have I not a right to do what I wish with my own money? Having been just, may I not also be generous?"

There you have the essence of the labor problem, as fresh and vital in those nineteen-century-old words as in the writings of Bouck White or Samuel Gompers. There you have, on the one hand, the blind insistence upon arithmetical equality which has been the mischief of labor unions (I believe in labor unions nevertheless); and on the other hand the spontaneous human brotherhood and large-hearted sympathy which is the Christian ideal for the employer, though, alas! he seldom attains to it in practice.

THE INTERNATIONAL SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON for Sunday, July 5, 1914. The Laborers in the Vineyard. Matt. 20: 1-16. GOLDEN TEXT: "He maketh his sun to rise on the evil and the good, and sendeth rain on the just and the unjust." Matt. 5: 45.
